A number of men, "observing the success attending the Societies in England and Scotland (for the purpose of creating a fund to enable them to purchase Bibles, and other useful and religious books, and dispose of them among the poor) and convinced of the probable utility of a similar institution in this part of the world," have formed themselves into an "American Society For promoting Religious Knowledge among the Poor, in the British Colonies."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 4, 1773; N. Y. Merc., Nov. 8, 1773.

5 A broadside, directed to the "Friends of Liberty and Commerce in New-York," and signed, "By Order of the Legion's Committee, Cassius," is distributed about the city. This paper charges Mr. W. Kelly, now in London, "with sundry Speeches, tending to encourage the sending to America Tea, subject on its Arrival to a Duty imposed by the British Parliament." In the evening, an effigy, "with his Name inscribed in luminous Letters, and suspended on a Gallows, fixed to a Cart, with a Tea Cannerister before him, inscribed Tea, 3d. Sterling Duty, with several other Inscriptions and Devices, expressive of the Peoples Resentment," is drawn through the principal streets of the city and at last burned "before the Door of the Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 15, 1773. "Hughes's English Grammar and general School, in King-street, is now open."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 8, 1773.

9 A petition of this date to the common council, endorsed "Read & filed March the 3<sup>d</sup> 1774," from inhabitants of Montgomery Ward, asks the board's assistance to extend "Hague Street" through the land of Daniel Bonnett into "Frankford Street," for the purchase of which lot the petitioners have raised the insufficient sum of £118.—From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See July 21, 1774.

11 "The Inhabitants of this City are hereby acquainted by the Magistrates, that the unusual Scarcity of O I L Is the Reason the Lamps are not better lighted."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 11, 1773.

"A section of what is "commonly called the Broadway," near the "Governor's Garden," is spoken of as Great George St.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 11, 1773. A use of the name "Great George St." is to be noted, therefore, prior to that given in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995 (q. v.).

18 The city grants water lots to Trinity Corporation, extending the church's property 200 ft. beyond its existing water grant for a space of 624 ft. in width.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 760. For street developments here, see M. C. C. (MS.), XXII: 76.

27 John Thurman writes to Rutger Bleeker of Albany: "No Tea is yet Arrived we have had a Comity from a Select Body of the Inhabitation who waited on the Commissioners appointed by the India Company to know what they Intended to do with the Tea When it Arrived when they Generously Informed them they Thought it was so much against the Scence of the Inhabitants that they could not Execute the Commission & that they never would do any thing that was Contrary to the Settlement of their fellow Citizens which makes us very Easy on this head & I hope we shall have no disturbance when it arrives seeing the Commissioners are ready to do whatever the City shall Judge Right."—"Letter Book of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2ud ser., IV: 288.

"A broadside of this date reads: "Whereas our nation have lately been informed, that the fetters which have been forged for us, (by the parliament of Great-Britain) are hourly expected to arrive, in a certain ship, belonging to, or chartered by, the East India Company. We do therefore declare, that we are determined not to be enslaved, by any power on earth; and that whosoever shall aid, or abet, so infamous a design, or shall presume to let their store, or stores, for the reception of the infernal chains, may depend upon it, that we are prepared, and shall not fail to pay them an unwelcome visit, in which they shall be treated as they deserve; by

"The Mohawks."

"A broadside, headed "A Letter from the Country To a Gentleman in Philadelphia," and signed "Rusticus," is issued from Fairview. It inveighs against the East India Company and urges the people not to accept the tea.—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. This was reprinted in New York on Dec. 4 (q. v.).

1773 A broadside appears under the caption: "The Association of Nov. the Sons of Liberty of New York." The preamble opens with 29 the statement: "It is essential to the freedom and security of a free people, that no taxes be imposed upon them but by their own consent, or their representatives." After reciting the history of the tea duty and the recent legislation of parliament with regard to the East India Company, it continues: "Therefore, to prevent a calamity, which of all others, is the most to be dreaded—slavery, and its terrible concomitants,—We the subscribers, being influenced from a regard to liberty, and disposed to use all lawful endeavours in our power, to defeat the pernicious project, and to traismit to our posterity, those blessings of freedom, which our ancestors have handed down to us; and to contribute to the support of the common liberties of America, which are in danger to be subverted, Do . . . agree to associate together, under the name and stile of the Sons of Liberty of New York, and engage our honour, to and with each other, faithfully to observe and perform the following Resolutions." The resolutions recite in detail that whoever shall aid in introducing into this place dutiable tea, whether the duty be paid in England or America, or aid in carting or storing such tea, or who shall buy or sell the article, shall be considered an enemy to American Liberty with whom we will not deal, employ, or have any connections. An advertisement to the public, Dec. 15, says that the preceding "Association is signed by a great Number of the principal Gentlemen of the City, Merchants, Lawyers, and other Inhabitants, of all Ranks: And it is still carried about the City, to give an Opportunity to those who, have not yet signed, to unite with their Fellow Citizens to testify their Abhorrence to the diabolical Project of enslaving America."— N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773. One such broadside was among the Geo.
D. Smith MSS. sold at the Anderson Galleries, Mar. 14-15, 1921.

Dec. The governor's council decides that the tea shall "be taken i into the Care of Government," and that it shall be stored in either the fort or the lower barracks. The inhabitants are to be informed of this decision. Smith says: "This seemed to have a good Effect till Tuesday 7 Dec<sup>r</sup> when an Express arrived with a Letter to Philip Livingston Isaac Low Samuel & John Broome Isaac Sears & Alex<sup>t</sup> McDougall containing Resolves of the Town of Boston, that the Tea arrived there, should go back in the same Bottom . . .

"The Liberty Boys now changed their Tone & seemed averse to the Landing, and their chief Motive was an Apprehension, that the Populace would change their present sentiments and call for the Tea—They had Reason for these suspicions (1) because the Subscription to an Association Paper printed & set on Foot the 30 Inst<sup>s</sup> proceeded slowly & 2<sup>d</sup> because there was little Tea in the Port." On Dec. 10, Livingston, Low, the two Broomes, Sears, McDougall, and Van Horn called on Smith, and Low, as spokesman, said in substance: "The Inhabitants heard of the Gov<sup>t</sup>'s Intention to land & store the Tea, & approved it as a good & moderate Measure—They supposed it was founded upon a Belief that it was his Duty to take Care of it—This we apprehend to be a Mistake—The Gov<sup>t</sup>s of Boston and Philadelphia & Adm<sup>l</sup> Moun-tagne conceive that gov<sup>t</sup> have nothing to do with Merchants Goods, if their Agents will not take Care of it—We think so too—
The Inhab<sup>t</sup>s wish Mr Tryon would out charge himself with it—If he does not it will go Home of Course—If he does it will not be Safe—If we lead it here they will elsewhere, . . . & immense animosities may arise from it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
See Dec. 13.

"A proclamation of the royal approval of an act "relating to the division line between New York City and the town of Harlem" is issued.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 822. The act was passed on March 24, 1772 (q. v.).

4 The "Rusticus" letter of Nov. 27 (q. v.) is reprinted in a broadside by the New York "Committee of the Association," and its authorship ascribed to the "celebrated Pennsylvania Farmer" (John Dickinson). On the reverse side is printed:
"The Association of the Sons of Liberty of New-York."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See Nov. 29.

6 Henry White, Abraham Lott, and Benjamin Booth, of New York City, have been appointed agents for the sale of the tea shipped to the province by the East-India Co. (see Oct. 25), but as there is a "general Opposition to the Sale of it, as it stands charged with a Duty payable in the Colonies," they have refused to receive it. In consequence of this, it is said that the tea "will be taken into the Protection of Government, and be deposited in the lower Barracks."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 6, 1773. For a meeting of the inhabitants in regard to this, see Dec. 17.

In a letter to William Cooper of Boston, Alexander McDougall writes: "The worst that can or will happen here is the Landing & Storing the Tea in the Fort. All that the zealous Friends of Liberty could as yet effect, is to get the inclosed association Entered into [see Nov. 29], and signed by a great Number of the Principal Merchants, Lawyers & other Inhabitants; And this not without secret opposition. The Members of the Association will be called together to appoint a Committee to Correspond with yours, on the Interesting subjects you mention. That would have been done some time ago, but we waited for an accession of more reputable members."— From the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"It is observed that we have had in our Markets for some Days past, a greater Quantity of Provisions of all Sorts, than has been known for many Years in the same Season, and at pretty reasonable Prices."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 13, 1773.

Tryon declares in council that he will not "use Military Force for the Landing" of the tea. Upon Col. Morris's suggesting that he ought to be prepared "to prevent Insults," the governor answers:
"I will use no Arms until they [the citizens] have abused & disgraced their Gov<sup>t</sup> & themselves. I will run the Risk of Brick Batts & Dirt and I trust that you & others will stand by me."—Wm.
Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The "Boston Tea Party" occurs. Rivington prints an account of it, but editorial comment is entirely lacking. The narration concludes with the statement that "one of the spectators, tempted by the exquisite flavour of the finest hyson, greedily filled his pockets, and the lining of his doublet with tea, which so enraged the people, that after every grain of it was taken from him, and discharged into the water, he underwent a horrible discipline which threatened his life."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Dec. 23, 1773. Winsor says that the Boston Tea Party, "although applauded throughout the colonies, was not imitated by them."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 57. This statement is an erroneous one, for a "Tea Party" took place in New York on April 22, 1774 (q. v.).

"The Members of the Association of the Sons of Liberty, are requested to meet at the City-Hall, at one o'clock To-Morrow, being Friday, on Business of the utmost Importance [see Dec. 17];
And every other Friend, to the Liberties, and Trade of America, is hereby most cordially invited, to meet at the same Time and Place.

"The Committee of the Association."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773.

A committee is appointed "to View & Consider of Proper Places for fixing of Centinal Boxes for Watching this City, also to adopt a Plan for Regulating the Watchmen & Lamplighters and to make an Estimate of the Expence thereof for the Ensuing Year."— M. C. C., VII: 462. The recorder was added to the committee on May 4, 1774, at which time several sentinel boxes had been completed and were ready to be "Set up."—Ibid., VIII: 28, 29.

Another council meeting is "occasioned by a prioted Summons in the News] Papers [see Dec. 16] of the Citizens to the Town Hall at 2 o'clock this Day." Smith suggests that "if many Met that the Gov<sup>t</sup> should go & speak to them and I would insure a Vote for the Storing of the Tea—That if they were a contemptible Handful —We might trust to their sinking into Despondency of bringing the City to Violence." Some council members object to this proposal, and it is finally decided to send for the mayor and recorder. When these two arrive, the governor thus addresses them:

"Tell the People that I shall think it my Duty to protect the Tea so far as to prevent its being destroyed—That I should be obliged to do this, if it was the Property of Aliens—That I owe it more especially to the Kings Subjects who have no Persons here, who will take Charge of it—That I do not mean to use Force for the Purpose That I expect none but Citizens to assist in the Storing —That it would disgrace their City to destroy it & serve their own Cause to behave with Moderation Justice & Decency on this Occasion—That they may depend upon my Word, that it shall come in by Day Light & go out by Day Light, with out any Secrecy, and that not an Ounce of it shall be delivered to any Person, without the express order of the King, or the consent of the Council—That I can do no more nor less, & that I hope they will neither disgrace their Gov<sup>t</sup> nor themselves by any imprudent violent & intemperate Behavior."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

1773 A newspaper account of the meeting states that "a very numerous and respectable Number of the Citizens" met at the city hall. "Letters received from the Committee of Correspondence of the Town of Boston, and a Letter from Philadelphia relative to the Importation of the East-India Company's Tea," were read and a committee of fifteen was chosen to answer the letters and "to correspond with our Sister Colonies on the Subject of the dutied Tea." After the "Association of the Sons of Liberty" (see Nov. 29) had been communicated to the people, Mayor Hicks delivered the governour's message. Upon his asking if it were satisfactory, the answer was a general "No, No, No." John Lamb, a leader of the "Sons of Liberty," next read the parliamentary act imposing a duty on tea imported into America, and a resolution was passed "that no Tea, subject to a Duty by a British Act of Parliament, for the Purpose of raising a Revenue in America, should be landed." The meeting then adjourned "till the Arrival of the Tea Ship."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 23, 1773; Penn. Gaz., Dec. 22, 1773. In his report to the council after the meeting, the mayor said "that there were at the Hall about 800 or 1000 People . . . that the General Temper was ag<sup>t</sup> the Landing [of the tea]; that he & the Recorder both conceived that the Question Remained undecided."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. On this same date it is calendared in the Council Minutes, "the people are averse to the landing of the tea."—Cal. Coun. Min., 499. For the arrival of the first tea-ships in New York, see April 19, 1774.

A letter from the Boston committee of correspondence, copies of which are sent both to Philadelphia and New York by Paul Revere, says: "Yesterday [see Dec. 16] we had a greater meeting of the Body than ever, the Country coming in from twenty miles round, and every step was taken, that was practicable for returning the Teas. The moment it was known out of doors that Mr. Rotch could not obtain a pass for his Ship by the Castle, a number of people huzza'd in the Street, and in a very little time every ounce of the Teas . . . was immersed in the Bay, without the least injury to private property. The Spirit of the People on this occasion surpris'd all parties who view'd the Scene." There is a MS. copy of this letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also The True Story of Paul Revere, by Gettemy (1905), 50-51.

William Smith wrote in his diary on Dec. 21: "An Express from Boston to Phil Livingston Sears Broome & Mc'Dougall with an Account of the destroying of the Tea there in 13 ships having each 114 Chests & the Loss of the 4th Ship with 58 Chests on Cape Codd. The Custom House delayed to clear the Vessels, & the Gov<sup>t</sup> to give a Pass on Wed: the 16 Ins—There was a Town meeting of 8000 waiting for this Report On the Report they dissolved, & instantly proceeded to the Mischief—Sam<sup>l</sup> Broome told me that 150 Men were disguised blacked & sworn to Secrecy for this Work. They had a Company for each Ship & a Captain for each Company—and were prepared on learning that the Tea Ships were to be brought that Night to the Castle & that several Doz<sup>n</sup> of Lanthorns were provided for—This said the Duty Act will not permit of Goods laying in Port without Paym<sup>t</sup> beyond 20 Days. Vid Holts Paper for acct of the Boston Business 23 Dec<sup>r</sup> 1773."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

18 Smith records in his diary: "Some say there were 2 others 3000 People Yesterday [q. v.] at the Hall by Enquiry I learn that the Principal Inhabitants who were of the Gov<sup>t</sup>'s opinion, did not exert themselves—I suspect

- 1 That Some were fearful of the Populace
- 2 Some courtuing the People ag<sup>t</sup> Elections
- 3 That the Delacencies rather fell in with the Multitude to save Interest, & out of Pique to the Gov<sup>t</sup> who is too Independently spirited for them . . .

"This Evening I saw Mc Dougal Sears & Sam<sup>l</sup> Broome at Simmons's Tavern—These were three of the Committee appointed yesterday for Correspondence . . . These Three are confident of opposition to the Landing, and that 1/3<sup>ds</sup> of the Inhabitants approve." Upon Smith's suggesting that they were worried by "Fears of not having a Majority," McDougal, Sears, and Broome "smiled, & expressed only very soft & peculiar Negatives," and intimated that if they had known at the meeting "that the Majority was so great, they would have had the Credit of a Division upon the Question, are you for opposing or for storing? & got the Yeas and Nays to separate in Two Bodies to expose the Weakness of those who are for storing the Tea."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

20 "News that the South Carolina People had resolved to send back the Tea ordered thither, and to import no more themselves while subject to Duty—This greatly inflames the Populace here, & certainly it will not be lauded, if they do not change their Opinions."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

A broadside, headed "A Letter, From Tom Bowline, to his worthy Messmates, the renowned Sons of Neptune, belonging to the Port of New York," and dated "From my Moorings, in Ratline Lane," is issued. It reads:

"As the Time is approaching, in which the Ship, with the East India Company's Tea may be expected to arrive, and be moored in our Harbour, to put the finishing Stroke to our Liberties, and ruin the Trade of our Country, by establishing a Monopoly; which will in Time (should it be effected) deprive Numbers of our worthy Merchants of their Sheet Anchor, and oblige them to quit their Moorings and steer into the Country, to take a Trick at the Plough; and will (as sure as the Devil's in London) drive many of us to the cruel Alternative of seeking Employment in a foreign Country, to prevent starving in our own: And, as much depends upon our Steadiness, and Activity, in Regard to weathering this Storm; I must therefore, strongly recommend the Necessity of keeping a good Look-out; and that we do, one and all, hold ourselves in Readiness, and heartily join our Merchants, and other worthy Citizens, in preventing the pestilential Commodity from being parbuckled on Shore."—From original in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Smith's diary states: "The Boston News [see Dec. 17] astonished the Town—Those who were for storing the Tea now affect to change Sentiments & . . . agree that the Ship Return—In Truth they are affrighted—All now are of one Mind & those who were for storing it seem most disposed to intreat the Gov<sup>t</sup> to change his Resolutions for Fear of the Multitude—Henry White [see Dec. 6] . . . told me . . . that he was going to the Gov<sup>t</sup> to intimate this News & to signify that it would be best to let the Ship return [see Dec. 23] . . . This Eveng I discover by Hints that the Mechanics convene at Beer-Houses, where Sears Mc'Dougall & al meet them to concert Measures for the Day of the Ship's arrival."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

23 Smith writes: "Rivington's Paper of this Morng announces that the Tea Ship is to be sent back—The People understood it to be so Resolved in Council—I guessed it to be . . . the Effect of Whites Interview with the Gov<sup>t</sup> [see Dec. 22]—The Town applauded the Gov<sup>t</sup>—But what will the Govern<sup>t</sup> at Home do? This Eveng I learn that Ayscough the Cap<sup>t</sup> of the Frigate whose ship is come up from the Hook, said last Night to Sam<sup>l</sup> Broome, that the Gov<sup>t</sup> told him the India C<sup>o</sup> would lose their Tea if it landed

"It must mortify Tryon who has spoken Vauntingly, & wrote assuring Govern<sup>t</sup> of the Landing here—But he is determined to be popular here, to save himself from the Imputation of a Want of Prudence in Carolina—He can justify himself from the Violence at Boston. . . .

"The Boston Violence has evidently effected this Measure here. . . .

"After all had we stored the Tea between 1 & 7 Dec<sup>r</sup> this Event at Boston would have excited our People, to demand it for Retransportation or Destruction."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"The common council authorizes the payment of £18:16:11 for a Fire Engine for the use of the West Ward."—M. C. C., VII: 463. Inasmuch as the cost of a fire-engine was regularly far greater than this amount (see July 10, 1772), it seems more probable that this expenditure was for a fire-engine house. An order of May 7, 1772 (q. v.), called for the removal of the two fire-engines "now under the City hall," one to the West Ward, the other to Montgomery Ward. The sum of £21 was authorized (ibid., VII: 389) for the engine house in the ward last named, an amount which is closely approximated by this expenditure in the West Ward.

25 Smith learns from White that "it is to be concerted if possible that the Cap<sup>t</sup> [of the tea-ship] be prevented from coming up & [that he] set off without the Gov<sup>t</sup>'s knowledge of his Arrival at the Hook." White also tells Smith "that he said to the Gov<sup>t</sup> your Council will all advise you to send away the ship, & that he replied I don't want to know anything of the Matter—a plain Hint to White." Besides this, Tryon has told the captain of the man-of-war "that he did not want him to look for the Tea Ship any longer." Smith writes of the situation: "From all which 'tis plain that White is to send the ship away if he can, & that Mr Tryon has dropp'd all his Zeal for her Landing and that he wishes all to be secret . . .

- 1773 "He is afraid of losing Popularity, & yet must be hurt at being Dec. obliged to drop his high Tone—If he can make the Agents his In-25 struments, & get the Ship away privately, his Credit will be saved on both sides of the Water."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
- 26 John Thurman writes to Amos Heyton, probably of London:
"You will see by the News Papers what Kind of Reception the India Companies Teas have had in America [i] Boston had been drove to the necessity of Destroying [see Dec. 16]. Carolina Phalad<sup>a</sup> & this Place I trust will have it in their Power to return it [i] our Governour having the affections of the Inhabitants used his best endeavours to get their consent to Land it, but the affair at Boston has determin'd the Americans to perish Rather than suffer it to be Landed or to have any disunion amongst themselves [i] unless Parliament determine to Repeal those acts they had Better declare war against the Colonies at Once, & I dare say they will stand forth for their King & Liberty like sons of Freedom, we all wish for Peace & a Good understanding between Great Britain & her Colonies ad as much wish to support our Liberties which never will be tamely Given up you may be assured."—From "Ex-

Readers, that it is determin'd, on the Arrival of the Ship Nancy
. . . with the Tea from the Honourable East-India Com[pan]y, the Com[m]ander will be made acquainted with the Sentiments of the Inhabitants respecting the Shipping that Article [see Dec.
17], which will indubitably occasion his return with it in statu quo, to England, and that he will be provided with every Necessary for his Voyage home; by which discreet intentions, every Fatality, both to this Colony and the Honourable Company, will be most happily prevented, and a Succession of that blessed Tranquility, which we enjoy under the present wise and serene Administration, will be secured."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 27, 1773.

his "Seat in the Bowery." "His Remains were interred in the

- 29 "The Government House" in Fort George is destroyed by fire. The governour's daughter jumps from a second story window into a snow-bank and is saved. A maid perishes. All the contents of the building except "a little Furniture out of the Parlour," and the great seal (see Dec. 31), are destroyed, including all public and private papers in the governour's possession. Deep snow on the roofs of the houses, with the help of the fire engines, prevents the spread of the flames.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 407. Cf. Ann. Reg.

- At a meeting of the governour's council, Jan. 5, 1774, Gov.
Tryon reported that "in order to trace if possible, the Cause of this Disaster his Servants had by his Directions been examined on Oath before the Mayor of the City, and their Depositions taken, manner is unknown."—Conn. Min. (MS.), XXVI: 383 (Albany).

warrants totalling £1515:2<sup>3</sup> were ordered issued to five different persons for liquor delivered at the fort at the time of the late fire; and also a warrant, to Robert Towt, for £25:9<sup>6</sup> for sundry articles delivered to persons who watched the fire in the fort.—M. C. C., VIII: 14-15. Manuscript accounts preserved in the comptroller's office contain three later items concerning payments for liquor for the same purpose, one of March 29, 1774, one of April 12, and one of April 22; the three amounting to £18:11:0. On April 22, appears an item for £1:17:6 for "Braking down A Stack of Chimneys and some Walls of the house that was Burnt in the Foart;"
- another of the same date is for £47:8 "For Watching Day and Night at Fort George" for 15 days; and on April 27, one for "Government Tryen's Treasure@ 1/2."—From original accounts (MS.) in comptroller's office. See, further, Dec. 31.

- Gov. Tryon makes "the house lately occupied by Major Bayard, in Broad street," his new residence.—Assemb. Jour.
(1774), 43. He writes to Mayor Hicks as follows: "Deeply impressed as I am with a grateful sense of the strenuous endeavours of the citizens to extinguish the raging fire which happened at Fort George last night, and greatly threatened the safety of the whole city, I find myself irresistably compelled to request you to communicate to them my cordial and affectionate thanks for the skill and activity with which all ranks exerted themselves on the alarming occasion."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 6, 1774. See Jan.
12, 1774.
- It was reported in the Mercury of the following week that "The Surrogate Office is still kept in one of the Rooms of the Barrack in Fort-George."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 10, 1774.
- The great seal of the province is "raked out of the ruins" of the "Government House" in the fort (see Dec. 29), "without being the least defaced."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1774.

1774

The estimated population of the province of New York is 182,247, of whom 161,098 are whites. This is 14,240 more than the total recorded in 1771.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 474.

A compilation is issued of the Laws of New-York from the Year 1691, to 1773 inclusive, prepared by Peter van Schaack, in accordance with legislative direction, and printed by Hugh Gaine. A copy of this compilation is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also "Bibliographical Note" in the Fowler's Facsimile of the Laws and Acts (Bradford's), clvii.

At about this time, the first "catalogue" of King's College was printed, by Hugh Gaine. It is reproduced as Pl. 53-b, Vol. I.

During this year Gerard Bancker drew "A Plan of Sundry lots of Ground situate and lying on the N E Side of Wall Street." The lots extend from William St. to Nassau St. The location of the city hall is clearly indicated.—From the original in the Bancker Collection in the N. Y. Pub. Library (box N-W, folder 119).
Cf. plate description, I: 359.

Isaiah Thomas begins the publication at Boston of The Royal American Magazine, or Universal Repository of Instruction and Amusement. He printed it monthly until June, after which it was continued by Joseph Greenleaf until March, 1775—the last Boston periodical before the Revolution.—Sabin, XVIII: 65-66. There is a complete set in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Tryon writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "From the general Appearance of the united opposition to the principle of the Monopoly [by the East India Company], and the Importation Duty in America, I can form no other Opinion than that the landing [at New York], storing, and safe keeping of the Tea, when stored, could be accomplished, but only under the protection of the Point of the Bayonet, and Muzzle of the Canon."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 408, 413. For fulfillment of this prophecy, see April 22.

The indentures of 28 men and women servants, lately arrived from Scotland, are offered for sale by Capt. George Smith of the brig "Nancy."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1774. See Jan 19 and Nov.
14, 1728; April 23, 1739; June 9, 1746; Aug. 19, 1751; and 1759.

John Mercereau advertises: "The New Stage Coaches That constantly ply between New-York and Philadelphia, the one sets out from Powles-Hook Ferry, opposite New-York, and the other from Mr. Little's, in Fourth-Street, between Market and Chestnut-Street, at the Sign of the Indian Queen, in Philadelphia every Tuesday and Friday morning, at or before Sunrise, and meet at Princeton the same Nights, where they exchange Passengers, and return the next Day to Powles-Hook Ferry and Philadelphia, so as to perform the Journey in two Days from New-York to Philadelphia. The Price for each Passenger in the Coach, is thirty shillings, and out Passengers Twenty Shillings. Each Passenger allowed to take 14 lb. Baggage, and above that to pay Two-pence per Pound."
—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1774.

William Deane, who entered upon the business of a coach-maker in New York with his brother Elkkanah on or about Feb.
27, 1766 (q. v.), now advertises the business in his own name only.

- 1774 The provincial council hears the account of the fire in the govern-5 nour's house.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499.
- 7 About 200 Scotch Highlanders land at New York from the 6 "Nancy." 80 others had died on the voyage.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 6 and 13, 1774.
- 7 A "select party of little masters and misses" will give part of the tragedy of "King Bassias, with Cymon, and the Padlock," at Hull's long room, the play to be followed by a ball for the ladies and gentlemen.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 6, 1774. Hull's Tavern was at the present 115 Broadway. It was generally referred to as the "City Tavern." See Apr. 15, 1754.
- 8 Dartmouth writes to Gov. Tryon: "When I consider that the Alarm which has been spread with a view to excite an opposition to the Landing of Teas sent by the East India Company to New York, is apparently, nay avowedly founded upon self-interested motives, I cannot but flatter myself that the authors and abettors of such unwarrantable proceedings will meet with Disappointment and Disgrace, and that any new attempt to disturb the peace and tranquillity of a Province so deservedly distinguished for its peaceable and good government, will be defeated.
 "The inclosed Extracts of my letter . . . to Major General Haldimand will however inform you, that there has not been wanting a due attention to what may be necessary in case matters should turn out contrary to my hopes & expectations, and the civil power should, in case of any public Disturbance he found inadequate to the preservation of the public peace, and the protection of the King's subjects."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 408.
- 12 Referring to the recent destruction of the government house (see Dec. 29, 1773), Tryon says, in an address to the council and assembly, that he is filled with "the strongest emotions of regret for the demolition of that mansion, particularly after your liberal grant for its repair." He further says: "my warmest gratitude is due to the Almighty, that by the powerful exertions of the citizens and military, this metropolis was preserved from the destructive calamity." Tryon then announces that the king has commanded him to repair to England for a short time, to consider "The contests which have arisen between the New-York grantees and the claimants under New-Hampshire, and the outrages committed on the settlers under this government."—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 4-5; Jour. Leg. Coun., 1898. See March 22.
- " The common council orders that a warrant be issued to Charles McEvers for £100, the amount the board agreed to contribute towards the purchase of some ground belonging to Archibald Kennedy for the enlargement of a street or alley leading to the Sloat.—M. C. C., VIII: 1. Another warrant is ordered issued to the treasurer of the city to pay £126:10:1 to Thomas Smith, John Lasher, Peter Ricker, and Joseph Hallet in full for the "Consideration Money of a Piece of Ground lately purchased by this Corporation of the Presbyterian Church."—Ibid., VIII: 2. On Jan. 28, a warrant was issued to pay Thomas Smith £2 for drawing the "Indentures of Lease & Release from the Presbyterian Church to this Corporation for a Lot of Ground Near the City Hall."—Ibid., VIII: 3.
- 17 A report of the New York master and wardens, relative to the situation and extent of the harbours in New York, is certified at the port warden's office on this date. It was sent to England, then or later, where it is now of record in the public record office, in Vol. 184, p. 647.—From Stevens's Cat. Index of MSS., 1763-1783, in Library of Congress.
- 20 A committee of the assembly consisting of thirteen members is appointed to obtain "the most early and authentic intelligence of all such acts and resolutions of the British parliament, or proceedings of Administration, as do or may relate to or affect the liberties and privileges of his Majesty's subjects in the British colonies in America, and to keep up and maintain a correspondence with our sister colonies respecting these important considerations, and the result of their proceedings to lay before the house."— Assemb. Jour. (1774), 16. For a letter to Connecticut, see June 24.
- " A petition is presented to the assembly, praying leave to bring in a bill to lay a road through the land of Adolph Meyer, to a "piece of land adjoining in Hudson's river, in the township of Harlem, commonly called Meitie [Matje] David's Fly" (see Vol. III,
 p. 966).—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 16.
- On Feb. 24, 1774, a committee, to whom this petition was referred, reported in favour of granting it and a bill was accordingly ordered brought in. It was passed by the legislature on March 19 (q. v.). This road was 24 ft. wide, and was laid out from the intersection (modern maps) of Ninth Ave. and 127th St., running thence to the Hudson river at 131st St. A trace of it, east of the Bloomingdale Road, at 128th and 129th Sts., is shown on Randel's map, Pl. 86, Vol. III. West of the road it curved to the north and encircled Moertje (or Matje) David's Vly.—Referred to in Liber Deeds, LXIV: 327 (New York), and ibid., DLXXXVIII: 422. It was evidently superseded by the Manhattanville streets laid down before Randel's map was made, about 1819.
- The treasurer of the colony reports that the devices to be affixed to the reverse sides of bills of credit pursuant to an act passed on March 8, 1773 (q. v.), were not finished until October 15, and that there is still so much work to do in connection with them that the time limit fixed by the act will have expired before everything can be finished. He asks that the assembly take the matter into consideration and give him further directions, but there is no record of any action upon the petition.—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 21.
- The journal of the New York and Massachusetts boundary commission is received by the provincial council, and filed in the secretary's office.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499.
- " A plan, proposed by Mr. Dean, a member of the Connecticut assembly, to shorten the post-road between New York and Hartford, is received by the provincial council of New York Province and laid before the assembly.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499.
- 27 An advertisement informs the public of "A Plan for a Public Fire-Office. For the purposes of raising an annual sum, to be applied in keeping in repair, (and as occasion may require) increasing the number of engines, buckets, and other serviceable implements used in extinguishing fires. And for providing a Fund for the Public Hospital.
- "It is computed that there are at least three thousand houses in this city. In one room of each of which there must necessarily be a fire kept every day. Cleansing the chimnies of these from soot ten times per year . . . at one shilling for the service would produce fifteen hundred pounds yearly.
- "In two thousand of these houses it may be supposed that a second fire is kept as a parlour fire, from the beginning of November, to the last of April, and these being cleansed five times in that term, on the abovementioned plan, would produce five hundred pounds yearly.
- "Taking the extra fires on an average (meaning in those houses wherein are kept three or four fires, as is the case in many, during the winter months) it is supposed that there would be at least fifteen hundred more, to sweep four times in the cold season, which would bring in three hundred pounds yearly further."
 With this data the advertiser suggests that a public office for the cleansing of chimneys might be established with a superintendent at an annual salary of £300, one master sweeper with a salary of £100, 15 sweepers each with a salary of £40, and £50 set aside for tools. The total cost of this office would be £1,070 and when this was subtracted from the estimated earnings of £2,300, there would be a balance of £1,250 "to be appropriated to the purposes of this plan, of which two hundred and fifty pounds would amply suffice for fire services; so that there would be one thousand pounds per annum for the Hospital."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 27, 1774; Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 670-71.
- The governor's council holds an entertainment at Hull's Feb.
 Tavern in honour of the assembly.—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 7, 1774.
- 7 There is published a "Scheme of a Lottery For raising the sum of £6000, For erecting a Bridewell in this City. . . . As the intention is of the most laudable kind, and the erection of a proper commodious building, as a reception for the correction of vagrants, of the dissolute and idle, has been long wished for, and is now become absolutely necessary, from the great number of vagabonds daily sculking about this city from every part of the continent [see Feb. 18] . . . the gentlemen who have set the project on foot, humbly hope, that the gentlemen who have set the project and the religious of all denominations, will heartily and cheerfully concur in promoting a lottery intended for so laudable and very necessary a purpose."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 7, 1774. See Feb. 28.
- 8 Because "the Line of Division between Montgomery Ward and the Out Ward of the City of New York on the Easterly Side of Montgomery Ward, by the Charter granted by . . . King George the second to the said City, was a Rivulet that run from Fresh Water into the East River. . . . And . . . the said Rivulet has been long since filled up, and Disputes have arisen of late about

- 1774 the Place where it did run," the legislature passes an act to fix the Feb.
 8 line of division between the two wards.—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 609-10. 17
- On resolution of the assembly, asking the governor to offer by proclamation a reward for the arrest of Ethan Allen, Seth Warner, Remember Baker, Robert Cochran, Peleg Sutherland, Sylvanus Brown, James Brakenridge, and John Smith, the provincial council orders that a proclamation be issued.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499-500. See Aug. 31, 1773. On Sept. 1, the council again took cognizance of riots at Bennington.—Ibid., 502.
- 10 "The Rev. J. Peter Tetard, Late Minister of the Reformed French Church in this City, Returns his grateful Thanks to the Public for the Encouragement given to the Boarding-School he opened last Summer, at his House near King's-Bridge, (within 15 Miles from New-York) where he continues to teach the French Language in the most expeditious Manner, together with some of the most useful Sciences. . . .
 "The House is remarkable for its healthy Situation commanding one of the finest Prospects in the Government,—and the Tutor's Character and Capacity are well known, he having lived with Credit in the City of New York for upwards of fifteen Years: So that, Gentlemen who will entrust him with the Education of their Children, may depend on their Expectations being properly answered."—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 10, 1774. It was not unusual, at this time, for ministers to give instruction in French. For some earlier examples, see Aug. 6, 1750, and July 8, 1762.
- 15 The assembly agrees that £705 be paid to Gov. Tryon "for repairs in Fort George, and for four additional rooms at the battery, as per account."—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 51-52; Col. Laws N. Y., V, 681.
- 17 The common council makes the following decisions regarding changes in the Fly Market ferry from New York to Nassau Island:
 There shall be three separate ferries. The three landing-places on the New York side shall be at Coenties Slip, at Fly Slip, and at Pecks Slip.
 The two landing-places on Nassau Island shall be "at the present wharf, belonging to the ferry house," and at Philip Livingston's wharf.
 In Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 24, 1774, the routes were announced as follows: "A ferry from Coenties market to the landing place of Philip Livingston, Esq; and from Mr. Henry Remsen on Nassau Island; another from the Fly Market to the present ferry house at Brooklyn; and a third from Peck's Slip to land at the place last mentioned."
 The common council further orders that the ferry shall be sold in three separate interests for two years from the first of May; each lessee shall receive the ferriage for his several boats on each side of the water.—M. C. C., VIII, 6, 7. See Pl. 64, Vol. I. See March 1, for sale of ferries.
 The action of the council is in response to various petitions which seek relief from the crowded surroundings of the Fly Slip (Maiden Lane) terminus of the single ferry from New York to Brooklyn. One petition states "That by Reason of the vast concourse of People who necessarily are drawn together at the Fly Market and especially nigh about the Ferry Stairs for a great part of every Day during the Course of the Year, Travellers frequently find it impossible to get to the Ferry Boats with their Horses and Carriages and even when they are so successful as to press thro' the Crowd to the Boats yet for the Most Part they are delay'd for Hours." The many small craft used by butchers and farmers in bringing their wares to market so occupy the slip and extend even beyond the dock that it is almost impossible for the ferry boats from Brooklyn to be "brought to the Stairs to discharge even the Foot Passengers much less Horses and Carriages."—From the original MS. in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. Valentine, in noting suggestions for improving the single ferry line service, indicates some of the difficulties encountered in transit, provided one really succeeds in boarding the ferry-boat. When only two men were employed on each boat, it sometimes happened that, on account of the wind and the tide, they were unable to bring the boat across the river, so that passengers had either to "labor at the oar, or otherwise endure a tedious passage, and suffer great loss of time." When three men on a boat were planned for, it was estimated that, even under greatest disadvantages, they could make the crossing in an hour and twelve minutes.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 544. In another petition, the advantages of competition are pointed out, and more than one line is urged. It mentions "those Beneficial Effects from a Division of Interests in the Ferries of the Town of Boston, and City of Philadelphia, where Passengers are treated with an obliging Attention and wait but a few Minutes for their Transportation."—From the original in file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942.
 The common council gives permission to Lewis Morris and others to build a bridge over Harlem River, "for the use of the Publick only and not for his Private Emolument." This bridge is necessary in order to render "really beneficial" a road proposed to be laid out from New York "thro Harlem, Morrisania and the Borough of West Chester," to East Chester. Lewis Morris and the other petitioners are willing to "bestow upon the Publick, the Land [adjoining the Harlem River] which shall be Necessary for Laying out the same."—M. C. C., VIII: 7-8. On Feb. 18, Johannes Suckles and Lewis Morris asked for similar permission from the general assembly, and a bill was ordered to be brought in for that purpose.—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 56; N. Y. Jour. Feb. 24, 1774. As a result of this, the legislature, on March 19, passed an act "to enable Lewis Morris and John Suckles to erect and build a Bridge across Harlem River." The bridge was to have "three or more Apertures of at least twenty five Feet each, for the Convenience of navigating the said River by Small Boats: And . . . when so built . . . to be a free and public Highway for the Use, Benefit and behoof of all his Majesty's Subjects whatsoever."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 708-9. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 518.
 The common council orders that a warrant for £5579:8 be issued to the treasurer to pay Samuel Verplanck and others for ground in the rear of the city hall decided by them to the corporation.—M. C. C., VIII: 7.
 A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be Let, and entered on at May day, The Garden at Strawberry-Hill, Adjoining to the House of Henry Van Denham."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 17, 1774. Strawberry Hill lay between 104th and 108th Sts., West End Ave. and the Hudson River.—See Mott's The N. Y. of Yesterday, 47. Cf. "Claremont" in Old Buildings of N. Y. City (1907), 129.
 A thief is caught attempting to break into the house of Isaac Heron. After an account of this incident, the editor of the Mercury adds: "From so many recent Attempts of this Sort, in different Parts of this City; we must conclude, there are amongst us a Number of Gentry who have no other Employment, which evinces the Necessity and Eligibility of a Bride-well" (see Feb. 7).—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 21, 1774. For the progress of the bridewell lottery, see Feb. 28.
 An estimate is made of the expense of supplies for the New York barracks for one year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 823.
 Gov. Tryon gives "110 Loads of Wood, to be delivered out of the Yard at the Battery; 100 Loads to be distributed among the Poor, and 10 Loads for the Prisoners in Gaol."—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 24, 1774.
 Gov. Tryon is waited upon by the common council and presented with an address and a gold box enclosing, as the address recites, "an Exemplification of that Instrument destroyed in the late fire [see Dec. 29], by which we formerly Gave you a Title to its [the city's] freedom and privileges, and which you once did us the honour to receive." The governor returns an appreciative answer. The gold box was made by Otto Parisien at a cost of £32:18:6.—M. C. C., VIII: 9-11.
 Permission is granted by the assembly for the introduction of a bill to raise by lottery the sum of £6,000 "towards building a province house for the residence of the Governor, or Commander in Chief, for the time being, and a secretary's office, for the security of the public records of this colony."—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 71. See March 1. After being amended so that the sum to be raised was fixed at £12,000 instead of £6,000, the bill was passed by the assembly on March 15.—Ibid. (1774), 73, 78, 95, 96. In the council it was committed after two readings. There is no further reference to the bill during 1774.—Jour. Leg. Coun. II: 1931, 1933.
 A letter from the Sons of Liberty in New York to the committee of correspondence of Boston proposes an agreement among the colonies "not to purchase any English Tea till so much of the Act passed the last Session of Parliament, enabling the Company [East India] to Ship their Tea to America be repealed." Boston is asked to "feel the Pulse of the Committee of Rhode Island and those of 1774 the Sea Port Towns to the Eastward of you. We shall do it to the Feb. Southward, & request you to second us in this to the Committee 28 of Charlestown South Carolina." Boston is also asked to broach the matter in the public prints and to write to the Philadelphia committee regarding it.

A post-office, not under the control of the British Government, is also proposed. "Mr Godard the bearer of this says He has been ... ill treated by the Post Office, inasmuch that he has been oblig'd at a considerable expence to establish a Rider between Baltimore & Philad<sup>a</sup>, to carry his paper; and this Rider is now supported by Subscription . . . a Post for Carrying Letters &c.
... He has had free conversation with a Number of the Friends of Liberty in the City, on the expediency of opposing the Post Office; and bringing the fight to a constitutional decision. This is a matter of great importance to this Country; & by its raising an internal Tax upon us, our Secrets are in the hands of Government & at its pleasure our News Papers in a Time of Public danger may be Stopt. This is a State too dangerous for Americans to rest in, without a Struggle."—From the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A news item reads: "The Demand was so great for Bridewell Lottery Tickets [see Feb. 7] last week, that several Thousands were sold off; Therefore it behoves those that incline to encourage that laudable Undertaking, to be speedy in their Application." An advertisement gives this information to the public: "Bridewell Lottery Tickets Insured, At the rate of 8s. per ticket, 100 in a lot, to draw £170 neat money, free from deduction. The insurers will underwrite 20 or 30 lots."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 28, 1774. See April 18.

Mar. Gov. Tryon applies to the assembly for "a suitable provision for the rebuilding of a government house."—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 73. A bill concerning this subject had already been introduced in the house (see Feb. 26). For the assembly's action in regard to the governour's message, see March 11.

" This being St. David's Day, the officers of the "Royal Welch Fusiliers," in honour of "their tutelar Saint," give an entertainment to the governour, the general, and "the Gentlemen of the military establishment."—N. Y. Merc., March 7, 1774. See July 21.

" The auction sale of ferries results as follows: The Powlus Hook ferry is let to Abram Mesier for three years from May 1, for a yearly rent of £210.

" The ferry from Fly Slip to Nassau Island (see Feb. 17), with dwelling-house, barn, and pens, is struck off to Adolph Waldron for two years from May 1, at a yearly rent of £230.

" The Peck Slip ferry to Nassau Island is leased by Samuel Balding for two years from May 1, at a yearly sum of £120.

" The ferry from Coenties Slip to Philip Livingston's landing on Nassau Island is secured by Elias de Grusha for two years from May 1, at an annual rent of £20.—M. C. B., VIII: 12. The leases were signed on April 12.—Ibid., VIII: 25. See, further, April 7.

" In an advertisement, De Grusha announced that on May 1 next suitable boats would "land or set off, as convenience suits, on the New-York side, from the stairs in Coenties slip, or from a stairs built directly fronting the Broad-street, the east side of the Long-Bridge, and on Long-Island at a stairs built at the dock of Mr.
Remsen. This ferry will be called Saint George's Ferry . . .
Passengers on the New-York side, will find the ferry-men, if not at the stairs, attending either at the house of Mr. John Lee, the corner below Coenties Market, or of Mr. James Cobham." A postscript adds that a ferry-house is building.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Supplement, May 12, 1774.

" Ordered . . . a Committee to meet and Confer with a Committee of the City and College Corporations with respect to the Regulation of Robinson Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Robinson St.
(now Park Place) was ceded to the city Sept. 18, 1761 (q.v.). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1008.

3 A street called "Elbow Lane," on Golden Hill, is mentioned in the advertisement of Johannes Durycy, who occupies a house at the corner of this lane, facing Burling's Slip.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 3, 1774 (in archives of the Society Library). Elbow Lane, or Street, is the old designation for Cliff Street.

6 Another "Boston tea-party" occurs.—See summary, April 22,

7 "A bill is now passing through the House of Assembly for building a province house for the residence of his Excellency the Governor, and a Secretary's office for the reception of the archives of the province."—N. Y. Merc., March 7, 1774.

9 Gov. Tryon signs a bill, which has been passed by both houses, allowing him £5,000 "as a compensation in part, for the damage he sustained by the late dreadful fire" (see Dec. 29, 1773).—Assemb.

Jour. (1774), 88; N. Y. Jour., March 3, 1774.

He also signs "An Act to prevent the breaking or defacing the Mile Stones now or hereafter to be erected in this Colony."— Jour. Leg. Coun., 1927.

The legislature passes the following acts: one "for making a further Provision of two thousand Pounds for furnishing his Majesty's Troops quartered in this Colony with Necessaries for one Year;"

An act "for the better preventing of excessive and deceitful Gaming;"

An act "to prevent the depreciating the Paper Currency of this Colony;" and

An act "to lay a Tax on Dogs in the Cities of New York and Albany, and Counties of Queens and Suffolk."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 613, 621-24, 638-39, 659-61.

A performance by the "Celebrated Mr. Johnston" on the slack-wire is announced to be held on this day at "Hamden-Hall, Near the Upper-Barracks."—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 3, 1774. The tavern known as Hamden Hall stood on the corner of Warren St. and Broadway. See March 19, 1759.

The governour appoints James Jauncey, Jr., to be "master of the rolls," and the provincial council orders that the attorney-general prepare his commission; this was approved on March 23.—
Cal. Coun. Min., 500.

The committee which has been entrusted with the consideration of Gov. Tryon's message of March 1 (q.v.), recommends "that a committee be appointed to fix on a suitable place for building a government house, and to prepare a plan and an estimate of the expense." By a vote of 13 to 12, the assembly decides that a report on this matter be made during the present session.—
Assemb. Jour. (1774) 91. In connection with this work, Gerard Banker was employed to make a plan of the fort (see April 12).
The committee did not report to the house until March 7, 1775 (q.v.).

" The "Sons of Liberty" are notified to meet every Thursday night at the tavern of Jasper Drake, until the tea-ship arrives and departs.—N. Y. Jour., March 14, 1774. Drake's tavern was conveniently situated for this purpose, being near Beekman Slip.— Ibid., Feb. 23, 1775. In May, 1775, a company of foot was organized here.—Ibid., May 4, 1775. See July 7, 1770.

" At a meeting of the common council, 16 persons agree to watch every night at the rate of £32 a year and 8 agree to watch every other night at £16 a year. The hours decided upon are from nine p. m. to four a. m. between March 10 and Sept. 10, and from ten p. m. to six a. m. during the other six months.—M. C. C., VIII: 15-16.

" The Price of our new Wines is not yet broke, but will in all Probability be very high, the Demand being exceedingly brisk, and no less than 7 English Indian and one Danish, expected here to take in Wines for the East-Indies."—N. Y. Merc., March 7, 1774.

Under the caption "To the Publick," the Journal contains the following notice:

"In all probability the Tea-Ship, which has been long expected, is near at hand, and it is the noble and impatient desire of every son of American freedom here, to see the day, when they shall have the inexpressible satisfaction of gloriously assisting their sister colonies, in establishing the freedom of their country. For, to their immortal honour be it said, that no monopolizing company upon the face of the earth, with all their subtily and iniquitous designs; with all their own sophistry, or the craft and cunning of their most subtil Agents, shall ever be able to put their enslaving schemes into execution.—Schemes which the very children of America can see through, because self-evidently destructive of the happiness and growing prosperity of this country.—And when such base designs, become obvious to the understanding of all, they must,
and ever will be opposed by all; a few venal Parasites only excepted.

"Our sister colonies, have gloriously defended the common cause of this country. A few persons have suspected, that as this is a central province, ministerial manoeuvres might probably be exerced here with more success. But superior opportunities must never be thrown away, for they ought to be proportionably improved by us, as we have had more time to think of the machinations that have been formed against our general constitutional liberty; But we trust, with God's blessing, to stand our ground, and as the day of tryal is now come, that we shall convince the

- 1774 whole American world that we are not slack and indolent, nor in the least degree unworthy, of being registered as a genuine sister province; fully persuaded, that resolution and universal harmony, will ever be the firm bases of universal success. [Signed] P.—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.
- " St. Patrick's Day is celebrated by a "very elegant breakfast" at Hull's tavern, which was attended by the "principal Ladies and Gentlemen of this city."—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 17, 1774. Again, in the following year, the "Friendly Brothers of St. Patrick" held their annual meeting at Hull's.—Ibid., Jan. 13, 1775.
- 18 The anniversary of the repeal of the Stamp Act is celebrated at the house of Mr. Abraham de la Moutagne, "where a considerable Number of Gentlemen were assembled, who spent the Day in the greatest Harmony and good Order." The day was also celebrated at Protestant Hall, on L. L., and "at Mr. David Grim's by the German Protestants in this City."—N. Y. Jour., March 24, 1774. Montagne's tavern was on Broadway, south of Warren St., and Grim's house, later called the Hessian's Coffee House, stood at the present 138 William St.—Liber Deeds, CCIV: 495; Royal Gaz., Nov. 6, 1779.

- " The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay: £100 to Gov. Tryon "for purchasing Gun Powder for the use of Fort George and the Battery in the City of New York;"
 £500 to George D. Ludlow "as a Compensation in some Measure for the Loss of his Library lately consumed by Fire;"
 £8:1 to Jacob Walton "for Mories advanced by him for carting of Stone for flagging the Battery;"
 £6 to James Hallet "for Wheel Barrows for the use of the Battery;"
 £31:16:6 to Anthony van Dam "for a Flag for his Majesty's Fort George and Repairs;" £11:17:9 to John Zunicher [Zuricher] and George Lindsay "for Stone for flagging the Battery;" and £14:19:9 to William Wierterton "for his Account of Mason's Work done on the Battery."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 680, 681, 685.
- 22 As Gov. Tryon intends to depart for Great Britain (see April 7), "the greatest and most respectable number of inhabitants of this city, ever known to be assembled on such an occasion" hold an entertainment in his honour at the exchange. "True harmony and convivial mirth filled the heart of every one present, and the day and evening passed with the most uninterrupted concord and unanimity. When his Excellency took leave of the Company, he thanked them for this genteel compliment; and added, That he went from them with reluctance, but that he expected soon to return, and hoped to find them in the same happy union which he then left them."—N. Y. Merc., March 28, 1774.
- " Among original accounts in the comptroller's office is that of work done by Anthony Dodane and William Valentine for "Repairs of the Statue of the Right Honorable William Pitt Earl of Chatham." The bill amounts to £26:7:0, of which £16:6 is still due. Interesting items of the bill are as follows:
 "To making new fingers and part of the Haed fixing on and Writing the inscription on the front Panel anew," £10:0:0.
 "To the reparation of the Face and rest of the Statue, Polish- ing and making the whole figure compleat as at first," £10:0:0.
 "To painting the Pedastal and Palisades twice over," £1:16:0.
 "To Gilding the writing on the foldage of the papers in his Hand," £0:10:0.—From original vouchers (MS.) in comptroller's office, box No. 1.
- 23 Smith says that upon a question in council relative to the appointment of a judge, "Colden declined voting pretending Deafness while we altercation but I believe not chusing to side yet for want of knowing where the Majority was in Council."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
- 24 In reply to the New York letter of Feb. 28 (q. v.), the committee of correspondence of Boston says: "We think with you that the commercial Interest of America can never be safe, until that clause of an Act of the British Parliament allowing the India Company to export Tea to America upon their own account is repealed & we shall readily join in with you in the most effectual measures to oppose & prevent the Operation of it.
 "The Post Office established by an Act of the Brit. Parlia-
- is certainly unconstitutional, and we never meant to countenance it or submit to its regulations as any way hinding upon us, but viewing it, only as a convenient Appointment . . . We therefore do most heartily concur with you in thinking it expedient to appoint Post Riders through the Continent agreeable to the plan proposed."

- Gen. Hallidam gives "a splendid Ball to his Excellency the Governor and his Lady." Many of the "principal Ladies and Gentlemen of this City" are present.—N. Y. Merc., April 4, 1774.
- " Sundry Inhabitants" petition the common council "that the Old Slip may be filled up & the Market House there be taken down." The board defers consideration of this petition.—M. C. C., VIII: 28. This market remained, however, until 1780.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 959.
- The kiag gives his assent to the Boston Port Bill, a bill which met in the colonies with immediate opposition, and which prompted measures for organized action against the mother country. As the bill itself recites, it is an outgrowth of the destruction of the tea in Boston (see Dec. 16, 1773). "Whereas dangerous commotions and insurrections have been fomented and raised in the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, by divers ill-affected persons, to the subversion of his Majesty's Government, and to the utter destruction of the public peace, and good order of the said town; in which commotions and insurrections certain valuable cargoes of tea, being the property of the East India Company, and on board certain vessels lying within the bay or harbour of Boston, were seized and destroyed; and whereas in the present condition of the said town and harbour, the commerce of his Majesty's subjects cannot be safely carried on there, nor the Customs payable to his Majesty duly collected; and it is therefore expedient that the officers of his Majesty's Customs should be forthwith removed from the said town; may it please your Majesty that it may be enacted, . . . that from and after the first day of June, 1774, it shall not be lawful for any person or persons whatsoever, to lade or put . . . off or from any quay, wharf, or other place, within the said town of Boston, or in or upon any part of the shore of the bay, commonly called the Harbour of Boston, . . . into any ship, vessel, lighter, boat, or bottom, any goods, wares, or merchandise, whatsoever, to be transported or carried into any other county, province, or place, whatsoever, . . . or to take up, discharge, or lay on load, . . . within the said town, . . . any goods, wares, or merchandise, whatsoever, to be brought from any other country, province, or place, or any other part of the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, . . . upon pain of forfeiture."—From a copy of the Boston Port Bill in *4 Am. - "Never were fewer Vessels seen in this Harbour, at this Season

1774 of the Year, than at present; and we hear many are wanted for Apr. 4 Freight and to purchase.—N. Y. Merc., April 4, 1774.

"We are informed that Mr. Lawrence Reade, who died lately in England, has, among several other charitable Donations, bequeathed One Hundred Pounds to the New-York Hospital. A truly laudable Example of Benevolence and Humanity, which it is hoped will be followed by all those whom Providence has blest with the Means of promoting an Institution, calculated to relieve the Distresses arising from Pain and Poverty, two of the greatest Evils of human Life.—N. Y. Merc., April 4, 1774.

"Last Week his Excellency our worthy Governor, was pleased to make a Present of 10,000 Acres of Land, in the Township of Norbury, in Gloucester County, about 20 Miles from Connecticut River, in this Province, to King's College, in this City.—N. Y. Merc., April 4, 1774. This grant was intended to support professorships to be called "Tyronian Professors," the first of whom was to be a professor of the municipal laws of England. A news report stated that it was presumed it "will be of peculiar Advantage to the College in this City. It is the second Professorship of the Kind, that ever was established in the British Dominions, the Vinerian at Oxford being the first.—N. Y. Jour., April 14, 1774. It does not appear, however, that any such professor was ever appointed.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 35-36.

"Since the Act regulating the Size of Bricks has taken Place in this Province, the hard Sort have risen from 28 to 40s. per Thousand; and the soft from 16 to 30s. per ditto.—N. Y. Merc., April 4, 1774.

5 Gov. Tryon, who is about to depart for England, is presented with an address by the "Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty" of the city. He returns an answer expressing the "most Lively Emotions of Gratitude.—M. C. C., VIII: 20-21.

6 In a letter to Gov. Tryon, Sec. Pownall says: "I am directed by the Earl of Dartmouth to transmit to you the inclosed Act of Parliament passed the present session, and to desire you will Cause the same to be made public for the information of those who may be concerned in Carrying on Commerce with the province of Massachusetts Bay."—From the original letter in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See March 31.

"Smith gives an account of the last council meeting held before Tryon's departure. He describes the governor's leave taking thus: "At the Close he thank'd us for our Support and said he has no Differences with us but upon one Point, & that was our suffering Bills to come to him which we should afterwards advise him not to pass. That he thought we ought to stand between him & the Assembly, & that we were as much bound by Instructions as he is. That he thought the Crown so understood the Matter, & he would get the Sense of Gov't on the Point when he got Home."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. The governor sailed on April 7 (q.v.).

"Gov. Tryon, intending to go to England, delivers papers to Lieut.-Gov. Colden.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501. See April 7.

7 In obedience to the king's command, Tryon sails from New York for England, after delivering the government over to Lieut.-Gov. Colden.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 417. In describing Tryon's departure, Smith says: "The Clergy & Gentlemen of the Town assembled to take Leave of him at L<sup>d</sup> Stirlings House . . . An immense Crowd came down afterwards with the Gov't who was deeply affected at the Salutations from the Windows, as we proceeded up Broadstreet & down Wallstreet to the End of Murrays Wharf . . . When the Hold fast was cast off the Crowd gave three Cheers . . . I told him in going down that this was the first public Parting with a Gov't in this Colony. Every Mark of Respect was shewn to him—The Grenadiers on the Dock and then A 20 Gun ship in the Harbour saluted the Packet—Then the Militia Artillery on shore Then a few small Guns on the Long Island side at Philip Livingston's Landing—Then the Battery—And at the Point of Nutten Island the Packet returned the Fire, & concluded the Parting.—Colours were hoisted by many Vessels in the Harbour—The Man of War . . . led on her way to Boston—The Packet followed—and then a Sloop with a Number of Gent, who took Leave of the Gov't at the Hook.

"The De Laoceys distinguished themselves in their Coolness towards the Gov't and sank into Contempt. O De Lancy did not come to Town from Greenwich till he was gone below the Battery.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"After taking the usual oaths, Lieut.-Gov. Colden presides over the provincial council, which orders the issuing of a proclamation Apr. 7 confirming all officers in their places.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

The common council agrees to the committee's recommendation that the west side of the corporation pier on the west side of Pecks Slip be the landing-place for the ferry from there to Nassau Island, where the landing-place shall be at the wharf of Jacob Brewerton. It is ordered that a proper bridge be built at each landing-place.

In New York the landing-place for the Counties Slip ferry to Nassau Island is fixed between the west side of the slip and the east side of the Long bridge and it is ordered that two landing-places be built between said limits.—M. C. C., VIII: 22. For the purchase of the ferries, see March 1.

The recorder proposes to the board for its consideration "whether it would not be more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their Chamberlain a Certain Salary than a Commission, that as their Revenues were daily Increasing the Commission thereon in time would be Immense.—M. C. C., VIII: 23.

Robert R. Livingston, the recorder, resigns and the common council orders that he be presented with the freedom of the city.—M. C. C., VIII: 23. See April 12, for his successor.

A petition of this date to the common council from "the Directors of the Union Library Society in the City of New York," signed by Walter Franklin, president, and endorsed "Granted y<sup>e</sup> 12th of April 1774," states that this society "consists of upwards of One Hundred and Thirty Members, who have already a very Considerable Library," (see Jan. 14, 1773) which, they think, "will greatly tend to the Dissemination of useful knowledge;" and they ask the boards permission to deposit it in the eastern part of "the Room in the City Hall where the New York Society Library is deposited," and that "a Partition be erected between them and a new Door opened." They express their willingness to erect the partition at their own expense, and also to "take Order that their Librarian should Act as Librarian to the Corporation Library . . . without any Expence to this Honourable Board, provided the Corporation shall have the Books of their Library numbered and properly Catalogued."—From original petition, in metal file No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. The petition was granted the next day (q.v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 24-25. For the removal to these new quarters, see July 25.

John Watts, Jr., takes his seat as recorder, succeeding Robert R. Livingston who resigned on April 7 (q.v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 24; N. Y. Merc., April 11, 1774.

The common council appoints a committee to cause Golden Hill to be "dug down & Regulated."—M. C. C., VIII: 24. Certain inhabitants of the locality petitioned at the next board meeting that the regulation thereof might be so directed as to prevent the utter demolition of many of their houses.—Ibid., VIII: 26. Those petitioning to have Golden Hill "Altered" (see M. C. C.; VIII: 16) were notified to attend the common council for a hearing.—Ibid., VIII: 28. Golden Hill was the high ground between William, John, Fulton and Cliff Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966.

The common council grants to the members of the Union Library Society (see April 11) the use of the "Easternmost part of the Room in which the books of the New York Society Library are Contained . . . they being at the Expence of a door and making the Partitions required."—M. C. C., VIII: 24-25.

"A Plan of the Fort Made at the Request of M<sup>r</sup> Speaker & the Committee appointed to fix on a Suitable place to build a Gov't House" (see March 11), which shows the fort as it was at this date, is reproduced and described as Pl. 46A-a, Vol. I.

"A purse of fifty pounds, will be run for over Newmarket, on Long-island; and two fifty pounds purses will be also run for over the old course at Harlem [see Feb. 22, 1762].—The revival of the sport at this last place, affords much satisfaction to the Brothers of the Bridle, and occasions cheerful contributions to the purses. The particulars of the plates will be very soon advertised."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 14, 1774.

The provincial council swears in Samuel Bayard as deputy-secretary, he having received power of attorney from Sec. George Clarke.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

Aside from the expected tea-ship (see March 17), word comes by way of Philadelphia that "Captain Chambers of the ship London, of this port [New York], had taken on board, at the port of London, 18 boxes of fine tea, which were regularly cleared; and the mark and numbers were taken from the cockpit by Captain All, of Philadelphia. As Captain Chambers was one of the first who refused to take the India Company's tea on freight the last summer, 1774 for which he received the thanks of the citizens, they could not believe that he knew of the tea being on board, and therefore supposed it to have been shipped by some ministerial tool, under another denomination, in order to injure the owners, or the reputation of the master, or to make an experiment of this mode of introducing the teas to America.—The Committee and the inhabitants were therefore determined to examine into the matter with great vigilance.”—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. See April 22, for arrival of Capt. Chambers.

” “Notice is hereby given that the tickets of the Bridewell lottery are now rolling up, and every other preparation making for drawing the same. The public are therefore informed, that the drawing will certainly commence on Monday the 25th of this instant April [9.v.]. All such persons therefore who choose to become adventurers in so advantageous a scheme, and encourage so useful an institution, are desired to apply without delay, lest they may be precluded in their design.”—N. Y. Merc., April 18, 1774. The corporation of the city evinced its approval of the project by taking some of the tickets (see April 23).

” “Peter Stuyvesant, who for some years past drove a stage from Powles-Hook to Brown's Ferry, proposes to revive the same again this season, and will set out the first Monday in May next, . . . from Mr. Elsworth's, and deliver his passengers at Brown's Ferry, to Mr. Josiah Crane, who carries them to the house in Newark lately occupied by Mr. Bank's.”—N. Y. Merc., April 18, 1774.

19 “A New York broadside, addressed “To the Public,” states that “The long expected Tea Ship arrived last night at Sandy-Hook, but the pilot would not bring up the Captain till the sense of the city was known.” Such liberty is allowed, but “care will be taken that he does not enter at the custom-house, and that no time be lost in despatching him.”—From broadside in N. Y. Hist. Soc., reproduced as Pl. 41, Vol. IV.

Rivington's account of the episode is as follows: “In the night, the long expected tea-ship [see March 17], Nancy, Capt. Lockyer, arrived at Sandy-Hook . . . Letters being delivered to him by the pilot, from sundry gentlemen of this city, informing him of the determined resolutions of the citizens not to suffer the tea on board of his ship to be landed, he requested the pilot to bring him up to procure necessities and make a protest; but he would not do it till leave was obtained. Early the next morning this was communicated to the committee; and it appearing to him to be the sense of the city, that such leave should be granted to him, the ship to remain at the Hook: the pilot was immediately dispatched to bring him up. This intelligence we immediately communicated to the public by an hand-bill.

” “At 6 P. M. the pilot-boat returned with Capt. Lockyer on board; and although the people had but a very short notice of it, the wharf was crowded with the citizens, to see the man whose arrival they long and impatiently wished, to give them an opportunity to co-operate with the other colonies. The committee conducted him to the home of the Hon. Henry White, Esq.; one of the consignees, and there informed Captain Lockyer, that it was the sense of the citizens, that he should not presume to go near the Custom-house, and to make the utmost dispatch in procuring the necessary articles he wanted for his voyage. To this he answered, “That as the consignees would not receive his cargo, he would not go to the Custom-house, and would make all the dispatch he could to leave the city.” A committee of observation was appointed to go down in a sloop to the Hook, to remain near the tea-ship, till she departs for London. . . . Wednesday night arrived Captain Lawrence, from London, who confirmed the account received from Philadelphia, of Capt. Chambers having on board 18 boxes of fine tea, but could not tell who was the shipper, or to whom it was addressed. Thursday the committee interrogated Captain Lawrence relative to what he knew of the tea's being on board of Captain Chambers, when he showed them a memorandum in his pocket-book, which he took from the cockpit in the middle of Captain Chambers's file of papers in the Searcher's office at Gravesend, corresponding with the advice transmitted from Philadelphia, except some variation in the mark. This morning the following hand bill was distributed:

” “To the Public, The sense of the city, relative to the landing the East India Company's tea, being signified to Captain Lockyer, by the committee, nevertheless, it is the desire of a number of the citizens, that at his departure from hence, he should see, with his own eyes, their detestation of the measures pursued by the Ministry and the India Company, to enslave this country. This will be declared by the convention, & the people at his departure from this city which will be on next Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, when no doubt every friend to this country will attend. The bells will give the notice about an hour before he embarks from Murray's Wharf.

” “New-York, April 21, 1774

” “By Order of the Committee.”—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. This report of Rivington is the one used by Lieut.-Gov. Colden to accompany his own report to the Earl of Dartmouth regarding New York's reception of the tea-ships.—4 Am. Arch., I: 250. In the following quaint account, the N. Y. Jour. describes the stormy passage of the “Nancy” to New York: “Last Monday Night arrived at Sandy-Hook, the long expected Tea Ship Nancy, Captain Lockyer from Antigua, whither she had been driven from this coast. In her passage back, she met with bad weather, lost an anchor from her bows, had her mizzen mast carried away, sprung her topmast, and was thrown on her beam ends. Ever since her departure from England she has met with a continued succession of misfortunes, having on Board somewhat worse than a Jonah, which, after being long tossed in the tempestuous Ocean, it is hoped, like him, will be thrown back upon the place from whence it came!—May it teach a lesson there, as useful as the preaching of Jonah was to the Ninevites.”—N. Y. Jour., April 21, 1774.

” In supporting a motion for the repeal of the tax on tea, Edmund Burke delivers in the house of commons his well-known oration on American taxation. He declares it is a mockery to retain this small duty when the larger taxes imposed by the Townshend Act (see June 29, 1767) have been repealed (see April 12, 1770). The retention of the duty also means a great loss to England, for America is the largest market for tea and the colonists will not receive it as long as it is taxed. Burke next attacks the British colonial policy in general. Before 1764, England was satisfied with having a commercial monopoly of America, and there was no great protest from the colonies against taxes imposed solely to regulate trade. But since 1764, Great Britain has been trying to raise a revenue in the New World, and this change of policy has resulted in dissatisfaction and disorder. Burke pictures the peaceful state of the provinces during the 17th and the first half of the 18th centuries, the disturbances caused by the Sugar Act and the Stamp Act, the calm following the repeal of the latter, and the renewed upheaval brought about by the Townshend Act. He makes this appeal: “Be content to bind America by laws of trade; you have always done it. Let this be your reason for binding their trade. Do not burden them by taxes; you were not used to do so from the beginning. Let this be your reason for not taxing . . . if, intemperately, unwisely, fatally, you sophisticate and poison the very source of government, by urging subtle deductions, and consequences odious to those you govern, from the unlimited and illimitable nature of supreme sovereignty, you will teach them by these means to call that sovereignty itself in question. When you drive him hard, the boar will surely turn upon the hunters. If that sovereignty and their freedom cannot be reconciled, which will they take? They will cast your sovereignty in your face. No body will be argued into slavery.” Burke finishes his address in these words: “I trust I have shewn . . . that in time of peace you flourished in commerce, and when war required it, had sufficient aid from the Colonies, while you pursued your antient policy; that you threw every thing into confusion when you made the stamp act; and that you restored everything to peace and order when you repealed it. I have shewn that the revival of the system of taxation has produced the very worst effects; and that the partial repeal has produced, not partial good, but universal evil. . . . I have in all seasons adhered to the system of 1766, for no other reason, than that I think it laid deep in your truest interests. . . . Until you come back to that system, there will be no peace for England.”—Speech of Edmund Burke, Esq. on American Taxation (4th ed., London, 1775).

At noon, “Capt. Chambers [see April 18] came into the Hook; the pilot asked him if he had any tea on board? He declared he had none. Two of the committee of observation went on board of Captain Chambers, and informed him of the advices received of his having tea on board, and demanded a sight of all his caskets, which was accordingly given them; but the cockpit for the tea was not found among them; nor was the mark or number on his manifest.

” “About 4 P. M. the ship came to the wharf, when she was boarded by a number of the citizens. Capt. Chambers was 1774 interrogated relative to his having the tea on board, but he still Apr. denied it. He was then told that it was in vain to deny it, for as 22 there was good proof of its being on board, it would be found, as there were committees appointed to open every package, and that he had better be open and candid about it; and demanded the casket for the tea; upon which he confessed it was on board, and delivered the casket. The owners and the committee immediately met at Mr Francis's, where Captain Chambers was ordered to attend. Upon examining him who was the shipper and owner of the tea? he declared that he was sole owner of it. After the most mature deliberation, it was determined to communicate the whole state of the matter to the people, who were convened near the ship; which was accordingly done. The Mohawks were prepared to do their duty at a proper hour; but the body of the people were so impatient, that before it arrived, a number of them entered the ship, about 8 P. M. took out the tea, which was at hand, broke the cases, and started their contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo. Several persons of reputation were placed below to keep tally, and about the companion to prevent ill-disposed persons from going below the deck.

"At to the people all dispersed in good order, but in great wrath against the Captain; and it was not without some risk of his life that he escaped."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. See April 23.

The Annual Register (London, 1774), 132, reports that "a number of persons habited as Mohawks, entered the ship, took out the tea that was at hand, broke the cases, and started the contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo."

An interesting similarity exists between the treatment of the tea-ships in New York and that in Boston, not only on Dec. 16, 1773 (q. v.), but also on March 6, 1774, when a vessel arrived in Boston having on board 28½ chests of East India tea together with other goods. At the custom-house a permit was granted for landing all merchandise but the tea, but the officers steadfastly refused to furnish papers which allowed even for the return of the tea. "This determination being publicly known, soon after, a number of men having the appearance of Indians entered the vessel, took out the tea, emptied every chest overboard, and effectually destroyed the whole; after which they peaceably retired, without doing any further damage."—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.

Christopher Colles proposes to the common council "to Erect a Reservoir, and to Convey Water thro' the Several Streets of this City." The consideration thereof is "deferred to Some future Time."—M. C. C., VIII: 26-27. See June 14. This is the first recorded proposal that the city government create a water supply. Before 1774, the city's supply of wholesome drinking water was confined almost entirely to the famous "Tea Water Pump," at Chatham and Pearl Sts. (see Pls. 40 and 58-b; Vol I; A. Pl. 14-b, Vol. III, and Laodmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976), and was peddled about the city from carts. Water from wells was also used, but this water was generally so bad that, as one early traveller observed (see Oct. 30, 1748), even the horses refused to drink it.

33 This morning "the shipping in the harbour displayed their colours, and a large flag was hoisted on the 'Liberty Pole,' and at 8 A. M. all the bells of the city [except those of the city hall and college, as indicated in a letter signed "Brutus" in Rivington's Gazetteer, May 12, 1774] rang. . . . About nine, the greatest number of people were collected at and near the Coffee-House, that was ever known in this city. At a quarter past nine the committee came out of the Coffee-House with Captain Lockyer, upon which, the band of music attending, played God save the King. Immediately there was a call for Capt. Chambers.—Where is he? Where is he? Capt. Lockyer must not go till we find Capt. Chambers to send him with the tea ship. This produced marks of fear in Capt. Lockyer, who imagined some mischief was intended him; but upon assurances being given him to the contrary, he appeared composed. The committee, with the music, conducted him through the multitude to the end of Murray's wharf, where he was put on board the pilot-boat, and wished a safe passage; upon which the multitude gave loud huzzas, and many guns were fired, expressive of their joy at his departure. The committee of observation at the Hook, have cognizance of him till a fair wind offers for his departure from thence.

"On Sunday night at 8 P. M., the Committee of Observation returned from the Hook. They inform us that the sailors of the Tea Ship, being unwilling to proceed with her to London, made a raft of spars and boards, in order to quit the ship with the tide of flood, but were observed by the Captain, and being aided by the Committee, who offered their assistance to him, they desisted from their project.—That on Sunday at 10 A. M. the ship and the sloop, with the Committee, weighed their anchors and stood to sea; and at 2 P. M. the pilot boat and the Committee's sloop left her at the distance of three leagues from the Hook.

"With Capt. Lockyer, in the ship Nancy, went passenger, Capt. James Chambers.

"Many persons still suspecting that Captain James Chambers continues privately in this city, they may be assured that he sailed out of the Hook, for London, on Sunday last, on board the Nancy, Captain Lockyer, who afforded him a very hospitable and gentlemanly reception. And whose whole behaviour, during his stay in this city, proved him to be a sensible, discreet, and a very well-bred man."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774.

The treasurer of the city is ordered to "take 1000 tickets of the Bridewell Lottery on & for the Risque of this Corporation."—M. C. C., VIII: 27. The lottery was drawn on April 25 (q. v.).

25 A gentleman in London writes to his friend in New York: "The present great Topic and universal Inquiry is, what will the Americans do now? This generally answered,—They must submit, they can't possibly do other Ways—The Boston Port Bill will speedily and effectually execute it self,—Taking away the Trade, ruins every Man of Property in the Place.—This Idea will strike such a Panic, as must render it easy for Mr. Gage to obtain not only ample Indemnification for the East India Company; but Submission of the part of the Bostonians, and acknowledgment of the Parliament's Right to Tax them: And should the Port Bill fail in effecting all this, a Corps de Reserve is at Hand; a Bill ready for the Royal Assent, new modeling their Constitution and Government, which will put such a Rein in the Minister's Hand, as may enable him to pull them which Way he pleases, or tear their Jaws. Boston say they, must submit, and the same Measure will produce the same Effect, in every refractory Colony."—N. Y. Jour., July 7, 1774.

"On Thursday the 8th Instant, Joseph Bryan, who was employed as the Constitutional Post Rider from Philadelphia to Baltimore, and was intrusted with 558 Dollars in a Bag directed to Mr. William Lux, at Baltimore, rode off with the Cash and has never been heard of since."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 25, 1774. Such occurrences must have brought home to the people of the country the hazard and inconvenience of payment in currency instead of bank exchange. It was not until 1784 (q. v.) that a bank was established in New York.

Solomon Griffiths establishes what is evidently the first employment agency for servants, at his house in Queen St., near Fresh Water. He calls it a "General Register Office," and announces that it is patterned after those in England and Ireland. Those desiring servants, by paying two shillings, may have their names entered in a book; and servants desiring places, by paying two shillings each, will be registered."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 25, 1774.

"Notice is hereby given, That the Bridewell Lottery is now in entire readiness for drawing, and that the same will certainly commence This Day, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at the Loag Room in the Exchange, in presence of the managers, who are now sworn to the due execution of their trust. Those therefore who wish to become adventures in a scheme whereby they may advance both their private fortune and the interests of society, are desired to make immediate application for tickets."—N. Y. Merc., April 25, 1774.

27 The common council orders that the committee appointed to cause the Battery Pond to be filled up be a committee to "Complete the filling up of the White Hall Slip [see Nov. 13, 1772], which has become a very great Nuisance to the Neighbourhood there."—M. C. C., VIII: 27-28. Among accounts preserved in the comptroller's office is Braddon and Farley's bill of July 14, 1774, for 50 day's work at "the Whitehall," with four carts at ten shillings a day for each cart. The amount of the bill is £100, of which £60 was still due. On July 14, this balance was ordered paid by the common council.—M. C. C., VIII: 39.

"Sloat Alley" is mentioned in an advertisement as the former place of business of one John Klein, whose successor is one Jacob Poyer, "in Bridge-street, (commonly called Wynkoop-street)."—

2 A petition signed by about 1,600 inhabitants is presented to Lieut-Gov. Colden, protesting against the fire prevention act, which regulates the kind of materials to be used in building. This petition represents the obstruction to city development which compliance with the act involves, as well as the hardship to workers in the building trades, caused not only by the scarcity of required building materials but by their excessive cost. The act became effective Jan. 1 (see Oct. 14, 1773), and met with protest immediately. On Jan. 27, a petition urging the amendment or suspension of the act was referred by the assembly to a committee of the whole house (see Assemb. Jour., 1774, 24). No further action was taken, and in March the assembly was prorogued to May 17. In this petition of May 2, the signers urge Colden to take special measures to convene the assembly, that relief may be sought. No action is recorded.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 826. A copy of the petition of May 2, with a list of the signers, appears in Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 427-42. See April 1, 1775, for a later amendment.

5 Continuing the discussion regarding the post-office (see March 24), the Boston committee of correspondence addresses the following letter to New York, Philadelphia, Newport, and Providence: "On the first application to us by the Committee of Correspondence for New York for the establishment of a Post Office on the footing of a voluntary subscription we communicated the proposal to several of the principal Merchants in this Town, and had the satisfaction to learn, that in case our Brethren to the Eastward discovered a forwardness to Join us in so important an undertaking, they were ready to give it every encouragement in their power." Boston reports success as regards the "Eastward Brethren," and adds: "We have already obtained a handsome subscription here, and have no reason to doubt . . . that we shall be ready to receive the Mails when they shall be extended from the Southern Colonies to the Borders of this Province."—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

" The New York "Preparative Meeting" of the Society of Friends reports to the Flushing "Monthly Meeting" (now N. Y.) the purchase of a piece of ground in Queen St. for about £1,050. The second New York Quaker meeting-house (for the first, see 1696) was built here, and completed in 1776. During the war, the new house was occupied by the British (see Nov. 12, 1783). It was taken down in 1824.—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. A plan of the ground for the second meeting-house was made on Oct. 12, 1774 (q. v.). See also 1755 and 1794.

" Lieut-Gov. Colden, intending to go to the country, adjourns the provincial council to the "Brookland" ferry, on Long Island. Its meetings were held there from May 16 to Sept. 1.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501-2.

9 "Resolved and Ordered that a Lease be made out from this Corporation to Messrs Edward Laight, Theophilact Bache and Charles Shaw for all the Vacant Grounds belonging to this Corporation on the Island of New York for the Term of Three years at the Annual Rent of one shilling with a Covenant in the said Lease that the Lessees shall from time to time Surrender up such part of the said Grounds as shall be requested by this Corporation and at the Expiration of the said Term shall deliver up the Possession of the whole. . . .—*Trin. " "A Proposal was made last Week by some Merchants of this City, to raise a Sum of Money to be employed in the Whale Fishery, and in a few Days £7000 was subscribed for that Purpose, and 'tis not doubted but double that Sum will be added this Week when 'tis expected several Vessels will be immediately dispatched on the Whaling Account."—*N. " A letter from the committee of correspondence in Boston, in concurrence with the committees of the towns of Charlestown, Cambridge, Brookline, Newton, Roxbury, Dorchester, Lexington, and Lynn, is sent to the committee of correspondence of New York. It is also intended for New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Portsmouth. The letter is as follows:

"We have just received the Copy of an Act of the British Parliament . . . whereby the Town of Boston is treated in a Manner the most ignominious cruel and unjust. The Parliament have taken upon them . . . to try, condemn and by an Act to punish them, unheard; which would have been in Violation of natural Justice even if they had an acknowledged Jurisdiction. They have ordered our port to be entirely shut up, leaving us barely so much of the Means of Subsistence as to keep us from perishing with Cold and Hunger; and it is said, that . . . British Ship of War is to block up our Harbour, until we shall make Restitution to the East India Company, for the Loss of their Tea, . . . obedience is paid to the Law and Authority of Great Britain, and the Revenue is duly collected. This Act fills the Inhabitants with Indignation. . . . This Attack though made immediately upon us, is doubtless designed for every other Colony, who will not surrender their sacred Rights & Liberties into the Hands of an infamous Ministry. Now therefore is the Time, when all should be united in opposition to this Violation of the Liberties of all. Their grand Object is to divide the Colonies. . . . The single Question then is, whether you consider Boston as now suffering in the Common Cause, & sensibly feel and resent the Injury and Affront offered to her? If you do (and we cannot believe otherwise) May we not from your Approbation of our former Conduct, in Defence of American Liberty, rely on your suspending your Trade with Great Britain at least, which it is acknowledged, will be a great, but necessary Sacrifice, to the Cause of Liberty, and will effectually defeat the Design of this Act of Revenge. If this should be done, you will please to consider it will be, through a voluntary Suffering, greatly short of what we are called to endure under the immediate hand of Tyranny.

"We desire your Answer by the Bearer; and after assuring you, that, not in the least intimidated by this inhuman Treatment we are still determined to maintain to the utmost of our Abilities the Rights of America."—From MS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library, endorsed "Copy of Letter sent to New York."

Capt. Jenkins, bearing the act of parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, arrived there, May 10. The following day summonses were sent to eight towns near Boston for their committees of correspondence to meet at Faneuil Hall on Thursday, May 12.—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774. The preceding letter, of May 13, was evidently the outcome of this meeting. For New York's answer, see May 23.

On Friday, May 13, the town of Boston had a legal meeting, at which it was voted "That it is the opinion of this town, that if the other Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all importation from Great Britain, and exportation to Great Britain, and every Part of the West Indies, till the Act for blocking up this harbour be repealed, the same will prove the salvation of North America, and her liberties, On the other hand, if they continue their exports and imports, there is high reason to fear that fraud, power, and the most odious oppression, will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom.

"And, Ordered, That this vote be forthwith transmitted by the Moderator to all our sister Colonies, in the name and behalf of this town."—4 Am. Arch., I, 331.

14 Copies of the Boston Port Act (see March 31), having on the back extracts from letters from London, dated April 7 and 8, are distributed about town. The authenticity of the letters being later questioned, Holt, of the New York Journal, advertised in Rivington's paper that he would satisfy any one who cared to apply to him of their truth.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 19, 1774. The act appears to have been printed twice; once alone, and again with the letters on the back.—Becker, The Hist. of Political Parties in the Province of N. Y., 112, footnote.

Edward Bardin, according to previous announcement, opens "the noted tavern the corner house in the fields, formerly kept by John Jones, a few doors above Mr. Abraham De La Montagnie's. . . ."
 —N. Y. Merc., May 9, 1774. Later he announced the "Pantry open'd every evening precisely at 7 o'clock, and a cloth laid with the following dishes, viz. Gammon, Roast Beef, Roast Veal, Roast Mutton, Roast Lamb, Roast Ducks, Roast Chickens, Lobsters, Pickled Oysters, Custards, Tarts of different kinds, and Chicken Pies for ready Suppers every night. . . ."—Ibid., Aug. 8, 1774.

Isaac Sears and Alexander McDougall write to the committee 15

1774 of correspondence in Boston: "Last Thursday Captain Coupar May arrived from London in 27 Days. . . . By him we have received 15 the shocking and detestable Act of Parliament, that shuts up your Port the first of June. . . . We want Language to express our Abhorrence of this additional Act of Tyranny to America;
 we clearly see that she is to be attacked and enslaved by distressing and subduing you. . . . we are persuaded, that the sensible People of the Town of Boston anticipate the Object of the late Act, in all it's dire Extent; and therefore that a Compliance with the Provisos of it will only be a Temporary Relief, from a particular Evil; which will and must end in a more general Calamity. Impressed with this, a great Number of our Citizens wish our Port to be in the same State with yours. And as the Ministry have put it out of your Power, to continue your Trade with Great Britain, we have stimulated the Merchants to appoint a Meeting to morrow Evening at 7 O'Clock [see May 16] to agree upon a general Non-importation, and Non-exportation Agreement of Goods, in and from Great Britain, until the american Grievances are redressed; under such Regulations as may be agreed upon by Committees from the Principal Towns on the Continent, to meet in a general Congress to be held here for that Purpose; and also to stop the Exportation of all Hoops, Staves, Heading and Lumber to the English Islands: and to suffer no more of the first Articles to be exported to the foreign Islands than will be sufficient to bring home the Sugar, Rum and Molasses for the Return of American Cargoes
 . . . We can with great Truth assure you, that many timid and selfish People in this City, who have interested themselves but very little in the Controversy with Great Britain, express the greatest Indignation and Resentment at the Conduct of the Ministry to your Town, and consider the Treatment to it, as if done immediately to this City. And this is the General Sense of our Inhabitants, which we judged necessary should be communicated to you; even in this hasty incoherent Manner. We have no Time to send this to the other Members of the Committee, for Reasons, which the Express, Mr. Cornelius Bradford, will inform you. He is a true Friend to the Liberties of this Country and will wait your Directions for his Return. . . .—From copy of the letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Parts of the letter, with the erroneous date, May 14, appeared in the Boston Gaz. of May 23. The suggestion regarding a general congress is omitted in the printed report, as is the statement: "we have stimulated the Merchants" to appoint a meeting.

Gen. Haldimand writes from New York to the Earl of Dartmouth: "The accounts received before the arrival of the packet
 . . . had made known the plan of operation intended to bring Boston to a sense of order and decency, so that on the arrival of Lieutenant General Gage, the inhabitants of that place will not be at a loss what they are to expect if they will prove refractory.
 It is the opinion of many people here, that they will acknowledge their fault, pay for it, and endeavour to reinstate themselves into his Majesty's favour by a proper submission
 "I wish it may be the case, as there is no knowing how far the factious spirit of a few leading men may carry an inconsiderate multitude, who have imbibed the most romantic notions of independence and liberty; and there will not fail to be such papers propagated amongst them, in order to spirit them up."—4 Am.

16 The following broadside describes the nomination of New York's committee of correspondence:

"At a meeting at the Exchange, 16th May, 1774, Isaac Low chosen Chairman:—

"1st Question put. Whether it is necessary, for the present, to appoint a committee to correspond with the neighboring Colonies on the present important crisis?

"Carried in the affirmative by a great majority.

"2d. Whether a committee be nominated this evening for the approbation of the public?

"Carried in the affirmative by a great majority.

"3d. Whether fifty be appointed, or twenty-five?

"Carried for fifty by a great majority."

The names of the fifty men nominated follow, and this sentence is appended: "The name of Francis Lewis was afterward added, making the number fifty-one." This copy of the handbill, belonging to the N. Y. Hist. Soc., is printed in Lamb's Hist. City of N. Y., I: 769-70. The place of meeting was originally designated as the house of Samuel Francis, the Queen's Head Tavern (see May 17), but the general opinion seems to be that an adjournment to the exchange was made necessary by the large attendance.— Becker, Hist. of Political Parties, in the Province of N. Y., 113, footnote. "Two parties appeared at this meeting with printed lists of candidates for a committee. The one, a list of twenty-five, was offered by Isaac Sears, the representative of the Sons of Liberty; [for this list see Becker, op. cit., 113, footnote] the other, of fifty names, had been arranged by the merchants."—Wilson, Mem.

Hist. of N. Y., II: 434. In his diary, under May 18, Smith says:
 "Two Motives gave Rise to so large a Committee (1) Many People of Property dread the Violences of the lower Sort & a small Number (2) The De Lanceys urged their Friends to attend & pushed them in, to mix with the Liberty Boys."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. As announced in the preceding broadside, the merchants' committee was nominated.

The following account is given by Lieut.-Gov. Colden in a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth dated June 1, 1774: "The Mea who at that time call'd themselves the Committee—who dictated, and acted in the name of the People, were many of them, of the lower Rank and all, the warmest zealots of those call'd the Sons of Liberty.—The more considerable Merchants & Citizens seldom or never appeared among them; but I believe were not displeas'd with the Clamour and Opposition that was shewn against internal Taxation by Parliament.—The Principal Inhabitants being now afraid that these hot headed men might run the City into dangerous measures, appeared in a considerable body, at the first Meeting of the People after the Boston Port Act was publish'd here.—They dissolved the former Committee, and appointed a new one of 51 Persons, in which care was taken to have a number of the most prudent and considerate People of the Place, some of them have not before join'd in the Public proceedings of the Opposition, and were induc'd to appear in what they are sensible is an illegal character, from a Consideration that if they did not; the Business would be left in the same rash Hands as before."—N. Y. Col.

The provincial council receives the act of parliament for closing the port of Boston.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

At a town meeting held at Providence, R. I., the following resolution is passed: "That the Deputies of this town be requested to use their influence at the approaching session of the General Assembly of this Colony, for promoting a Congress as soon as may be, of the Representatives of the General Assemblies of the several Colonies and Provinces in North America, for establishing the firmest Union, and adopting such measures as to them shall appear to be the most effectual to answer that important purpose, and to agree upon proper methods for executing the same."—4 Am. Arch., I: 333. Winsor calls this the "first proposal for a congress for general purposes."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 98-99.
 See, however, Addenda, May 23, 1774, where the question of priority in suggesting the calling of a continental congress is discussed.

The following notice is published in handbills:—"To the Public: An Advertisement having appeared at the Coffee-House, in consequence of the late extraordinary and very alarming advices received from England, inviting the Merchants to meet at the house of Mr. Samuel Francis, on Monday evening May 16, in order to consult on measures proper to be pursued on the present critical and important occasion.

"A very respectable and large number of the Merchants and other inhabitants did accordingly appear at the time and place appointed, and then and there nominated for the approbation of the public, a Committee of fifty persons, of which fifteen to be a sufficient number to do business.

"That therefore, no formality may be wanting to constitute a Committee, duly Chosen, the inhabitants of this city and County, are requested to attend at the Coffee House, on Thursday the 19th instant, at 1 o'clock, to approve of the Committee nominated as aforesaid, or to appoint such other persons, as in their discretion and wisdom may seem meet.

174 bearing important letters (see May 13) for the southern colonies.— May 4 Am. Arch., I: 331, footnote. The N. Y. Jour. adds that on 17 Wednesday, about noon, he set out for Philadelphia.

"The last public commencement of King's College is held in Trinity Church.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 50-52. "The celebrity [celebration] was honoured by the Presence of his Excellency General Haldimand, the principal Officers of the Army, the Clergy, and a very brilliant Assembly. . . . The Discourses delivered upon this Occasion did great Honour to the Orators, who justly merited and received universal Approbation."—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774. After the war, the college was reorganized under legislative acts which named it Columbia College.—See May 1, 1784; April 13, 1787.

18 Smith writes in his diary: "A general Consternation and Disgust works among the People—The Letters & printed Papers call us Rebels, & increase our Disaffection & excite a Contempt of Government—I fear we shall lose all that Attachm<sup>t</sup> we once had in so great a Degree for the Parent Country. . . . A Company of Artillery—Cannon & Ammunition went this Day to Boston from this Place."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

John Thurman writes from New York to John Stark of London: "We are very uneasy & dont know but Parliament mean to drive us to measures w<sup>ch</sup> may prove destructive to Great Britain & her colonies, every good friend to both will wish for a lasting union & I am sure it is the desire of every good American to wish Great Britain may forever Remain our Head & Ruler tho never to impose Internal Taxation"—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 288. On the same day, he sends a letter to Messrs. Low, Griffin, & Clay, in which he says: "Surely Great Britain can never mean to drive us into measures that may Lay the foundation to an eternal separation. Is it Possible you can mean to Roun the Town of Boston by one single act of oppression & what is done to one may be done to all, & should this act be carried into execution then fairwell American Freedom & Happiness & I may say Englands glory.

"United in Love & friendship to Great Britain we are a Happy People, but if a Civil Warr is carryed on by acts of oppression, & distress Hurry the People into acts of violence, God only knows what will be the end. This is the most alarming affair I ever knew, we have had a meeting of the Inhabitants of this City, we have chosen a very respectable comitty of fifty of the Principal Citizens [see May 16] & every measure will be taken to keep Peace and good order. I should wish to see an end put to our Troubles & Peace and Harmony Restored. America never will submit to Internal Taxation—never can be Happy but under Great Britain. I am in hopes General Gage will set all matters Right. We know him to be a good man, he is much esteemed in this Country, he arrived at Boston Last Friday [see May 13], Expresses are sent to the different Provinces & you may depend they will all unite in one Cause & endeavour by all Possible means to maintain Peace & Good order."—Ibid., 2d ser., IV: 288.

19 In response to an advertisement of May 17 (q. v.), "a great concourse of the inhabitants" meets at the coffee house "to confirm or alter the nomination of a Committee to correspond with our sister colonies." Mr. Low addresses the meeting, urging the exercise of "calm reason" in its acts. "Zeal in a good cause is most laudable, but when it transports beyond the bounds of reason it often leaves room for bitter reflection.

"We ought, therefore, gentlemen, to banish from our hearts all little party distinctions, feuds and animosities, for to our unanimity and virtue we must at last recur for safety; and that man will approve himself the best friend to his country whose highest emulation is to inculcate those principles both by precept and example."

The meeting then confirms the nomination of the 50 men made at the "Exchange" on May 16, and the name of Mr. Francis Lewis is added to the list by unanimous consent.—4 Am. Arch., I: 294-95.

In a warning of the meeting, given in Rivington's Gazetteer, of May 19, the editor urges that "All partial attachments and private animosities . . . be laid aside . . . And the choice be confirmed without any sinister opposition from narrow and ungenerous sentiments."

The following account is from a New Yorker's letter to a correspondent in London: "The self-constituted Committee of the Sons of Liberty for the city of New York . . . had taken upon them to write letters to Boston to their brethren there [see May 15], assuring them, 'that the city of New-York would heartily join them against the cruel and arbitrary proceedings of the British Parliament' &c. which as soon as the gentlemen of property in this city knew, they were very justly alarmed, and a meeting of the inhabitants was desired at the Coffee House, when, in spite of all that could be done by the old Committee, which consisted of eight or ten flaming patriots without property, or any thing else but impudence, a new Committee was chosen, consisting of fifty members, most of them men of sense, coolness, and property."—4 Am. Arch., I: 300 footnote.

Gouverneur Morris, in a letter to Mr. Penn, dated May 20, described the meeting: "I stood [yesterday] in the balcony, and on my right hand were ranged all the people of property, with some few poor dependants, and on the other all the tradesmen, &c. who thought it worth their while to leave daily labor for the good of the country. . . . The mob begin to think and to reason. . . . The gentry begin to fear this. Their committee will be appointed, they will deceive the people, and again forfeit a share of their confidence. And if these instances of what with one side is policy, with the other perfidy, shall continue to increase, and become more frequent, farewell aristocracy. I see, and I see it with fear and trembling, that if the disputes with Britain continue, we shall be under the worst of all possible dominions. We shall be under the domination of a riotous mob.

"It is the interest of all men, therefore, to seek for reunion with the parent state. A safe compact seems in my poor opinion to be now tendered. Internal taxation to be left with ourselves. The right of regulating trade to be vested in Britain, where alone is found the power of protecting it."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev., I: 445-46.

"The British Merchants themselves, have already begun 21 to anticipate our Non Importation Agreement, which will be thoroughly confirmed by a Brig which sailed Yesterday for London, with Countermarshals and Letters enough, expressive of the general Sense of the Colonies, as far as we have been able to Collect it."—Extract from a letter from Boston, dated May 21, to sundry gentlemen in New York, in N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774.

The committee of correspondence meets at the Coffee House, 23 "pursuant to notice for that purpose given." After choosing Isaac Low chairman, and John Alsop deputy chairman, the receipt of a letter from "the body of Mechanics," informing them "of their concurrence with the other inhabitants of this city, in their nomination," was reported.

"Ordered, that Mr. Duane, Mr. Jay, and Mr. Van Schaack be a Committee to draw up a set of Rules for the regulation of the Committee. . . .

"Letters from the Committee of Correspondence of Boston, with the Vote of the town of Botsum [Boston], of the 13th instant [q. v.], and a Letter from the Committee of Philadelphia were read.

"Ordered, that Mr. McDougall, Mr. Low, Mr. Duane, and Mr. Jay, be a Committee to prepare and report a draft of an Answer to the Boston Committee, at eight o'clock, P. M.; to which hour the Grand Committee were then adjourned."—4 Am. Arch., I: 295-96.

"At 8 P. M. the Grand Committee Met . . . and the Committee appointed to draw the Answer to the Boston Letters, reported a Draught, which was unanimously agreed to; . . . on Tuesday it was delivered to Mr. Paul Revere, the Express from Boston, who immediately set out on his Return. A Copy of it was ordered to be transmitted by the Chairman to the Committee of Correspondence for the City of Philadelphia.

"We are informed this Letter proposes to the People of Boston, that a Congress of the Colonies should be convoked, without Delay, to determine and direct the Measures to be pursued for Relief of the Town of Boston, and the Redress of all the American Grievances."—N. Y. Jour., May 26, 1774.

The letter itself was not made public until June 23. It was withheld so long that, on June 13, the following request appeared, in the Gazette, asking that the proceedings of the committee of correspondence should be published: "It is hoped the proceedings will be published for the use of the constituents; the Times are critical, and big with interesting Events which has occasioned the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia to promulgate their Letter to Boston, and such other Proceedings as were judged necessary for the Satisfaction of the Public."—N. Y. Merc., 1774 June 13, 1774. The New York letter to Boston is reproduced as May 23 Pl. 42, Vol. IV. See Addenda, where the significance of this letter is discussed.

An advertisement announces: "Servants, Just arrived from Scotland, To be sold on board the ship Commerce . . . lying at the Ferry-stairs; among which are a Number of Weavers, Taylors, Blacksmiths, Nailors, Shoemakers, Butchers, Sawyers, Wheel-Wrights, Hatters and Spiasters, From fourteen to thirty-five years of age."—N. Y. Merc., May 2, 1774. On August 28, a New Yorker, in writing to someone in Edinburgh, referred to this notice: "It is impossible to express the severe usage and hardship the poor people are exposed to, who migrate from your country, in hopes of mending their condition here. I think it may be of use to undeceive such misguided men, if you will publish the . . . advertisement in your paper, for the information of such who doubt the truth of so incredible a fact."—Upcott Coll., in N. Y. Hist. Soc., IV: 227.

24 Payment of £70:17 is ordered by the common council to Samuel "Frances" for Sundry Expenses attending the drawing of the Bridewell Lottery" (see April 25).—M. C. C., VIII: 32. The voucher, with items detailed in beautiful penmanship, is preserved in comptroller's office, box No. 1. One item was for a dinner on April 26, which, with "Wine 20/ punch & tody 11/6 porter 6/," cost £3:18:6. A second dinner, on April 28, with a much larger expense for drinks, cost £7:12:3.

28 William Goddard, printer of the Maryland Journal, arrives in New York from Boston, "with important Dispatches for all the southern Colonies." He "set out on Monday Morning" (May 30); the purpose of his mission being described thus in a news report: "The Plan for establishing a constitutional American Post Office having met with the greatest Success in all the great commercial Towns in the northern Colonies, it is not doubted, from the Encouragement already given at the Southward, but the important Design will, in a few Weeks, be carried into complete Execution."—N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774. See May 11, 1775. The plan for such a post-office is fully described, under date of July 2, in Am. Archives, 4th ser., I: 500-4. It provides, among other things, for the annual election of a postmaster-general "by the written votes of all the Provincial Committees, enclosed and sent to the Chairman of the New-York Committee, who, on receiving all the votes, and giving one month's public notice in all the New-York papers, of the time and place appointed for that purpose, shall open them in Committee, in presence of all such subscribers as shall choose to attend, and declare the choice, which choice shall be immediately communicated to all the other Provincial Committees by a certificate under the hand of the said Chairman. . . ."

30 In Boston's reply to the letter of May 23 [q. v.] from the New York committee of correspondence, the committee of Boston says: "A speedy, united and vigorous effort is certainly all that can possibly be depended upon to yield us any effectual Relief. This effort is on all hands acknowledged to be the suspension of Trade, so wisely defined by you . . ."

"We view a general Congress as a measure indispensable to a reasonable settlement of the politics of this Great Commonwealth, and shall engage our Representatives to forward it in the General Assembly; but supposing this important measure conducted with all the expedition possible, it must be many months before it can be brought about; whereas, a general restraint upon our exports and imports from Great Britain must have a speedy and irresistible operation, upon parties who have hitherto paid little regard to petitions of Right, enforced by every argument that Justice, equity and the faith of solemn Charters can afford."—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See June 7.

The committee of correspondence meets at the exchange at six o'clock in the evening and adopts a set of rules. These provide, among other things, that the secretary shall not be a member of the committee; "that the Committee shall meet upon their adjournments," and if it is necessary to call a special meeting, printed notice shall be left at the residence of each member; that none but members shall be allowed to take copies of the committee's letters or proceedings, and that outsiders shall have access to the proceedings only in the presence of some member; also that absences shall be fined. Joseph Allicock is appointed secretary and Thomas Petit messenger; and a committee is appointed to write a "Circular Letter to the Supervisors in the different counties, acquainting them of the appointment of this Committee, and submitting to the consideration of the inhabitants of the counties whether it could not be expedient for them, to appoint persons to correspond with this Committee, upon matters relative to the purposes for which they are appointed."—4 Am. Arch., I: 298-99.

A New Yorker writes to a correspondent in London: "Notwithstanding the boasted resolutions of many of the principal people of this Colony to stand forth in defence of their rights and liberties, we are well assured that most of them are sorry for embarking in the cause so far, and that they only want an opportunity to throw off the mask, to join with the friends of Government. If the Minister was wicked enough to load us with the heaviest imposition, I doubt not but he would be able to carry his designs into execution, by means of a few men-of-war; for the spirit of the inhabitants here died away as soon as it was known that General Gage, with a fleet of ships, arrived at Boston, to shut up the ports and remove the courts of judicature. I heartily wish that an end were put to all disputes between us and our mother country, that trade and commerce might flourish again, for whilst these contentions last, the merchants of your city must feel the effects of it as well as us."—4 Am. Arch., I: 299 (footnote).

Hunter and Walsh "beg leave to inform the public, that they have erected [and are] now carrying on) A Soap and Candle Manufactory, in Broad-Street, a few doors above the post-office, where they intend carrying on those branches very extensively."—N. Y. Merc., May 30, 1774.

The committee of correspondence meets at the exchange to consider the circular letter prepared by the committee appointed to draft such letter (see May 30). It is approved and orders are given that 300 copies shall be printed and forwarded to the treasurer of each county, to be transmitted by him to the supervisors in his districts. This was done on June 3.—4 Am. Arch., I: 300-1.

The committee also took action regarding a letter from Philadelphia, addressed to their chairman, which stated "That at a General Meeting of all Denominations of Christians in that City, it was agreed to keep the first Day of June as a public Fast; being the Day when the Boston Port Bill commenced." The committee decided that the matter could not properly come before them, and ordered that copies of the letter be delivered to the clergy of the different denominations in the city that they might conduct themselves as they saw fit.—N. Y. Gaz., June 6, 1774; N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774. The Journal offers the statement that there was by no means a general meeting of all denominations of Christians on the above occasions. Nearly all of the meetings of the committee are held in the evening, beginning usually as early as six o'clock.

The Boston Port Bill passed by the English parliament becomes effective. It provides for the transfer of commerce from Boston to Salem, but gives power to the king to restore it, upon the return of order and the payment of compensation to the owners of the destroyed tea. This order aroused much sympathy for Boston among the other colonies, who manifested it by relief contributions when distress followed the loss of business. "The Boston Port Bill, designed as a punishment for the destruction of the tea brought ruin to the commerce of Boston, and distress to all whose subsistence depended upon it; but its political effect was to draw the colonies together, and that was so effectually promoted by the vigorous action of the committee of correspondence that the idea of a continental congress soon became general."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 58. Gen. Gage landed in Boston, May 17, to be ready to put the bill in force June 1.—Ibid., VI: 95.

"Many of the Citizens of this Place conceiving that the general Sentiments of the Inhabitants were very erroneously expressed in a Letter published in the Boston Gazette [see May 15], . . . think it necessary to inform the Public, That the said Letter is by no means to be considered as a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, as the first Day of their acting was on Monday the 23d of May."—N. Y. Jour., June 2; Rivington's Gazetteer, June 2; N. Y. Gaz., June 6, 1774. See also June 16.

"Last Week was paid into the Hands of the Church Wardens of Trinity Church, by the Executors of the last Will and Testament of Mrs. Ann Chambers, a Legacy of £500, the Interest thereof, by her Will, is annually to be distributed as a Premium for Encouragement to the most deserving Girls belonging to the Charity School under the Care of the Rector and Vestry of Trinity Church: Which laudable Example it is to be hoped will be followed by others."—*N. - 1774
6 Erasmus Williams announces that he has purchased "the large commodious House and Gardens, coach house, stables, &c., in the out-ward of this city, heretofore known by the name of Vaux-Hall, but changed, with great propriety, to that of Mount Pleasant." Besides the beauty of the view and the healthfulness of the situation, the house has the advantage of being "near the College, and Hospital now erecting, and so contiguous to the city that a moderate walker may, in 15 or 20 minutes, be in any part thereof." Williams offers board and lodging to "single gentlemen, or gentlemen with their families," especially travellers, and states that "some apartments are already fitted."—N. Y. Merc., June 6, 1774. This was the old pleasure garden on the North River, in earlier years known as the Old Bowling Green, for a history of which see March 29, 1738.
- " John Campbell, a potter, at the "upper end of the Broadway, opposite the Negroes Burying Ground," offers earthenware for sale, which he warrants "to be better than any imported from England or Holland."—N. Y. Merc., June 6, 1774. For the location of this burying-ground, see "Pottersfield" in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927.
- 7 In conformity with orders adopted at a meeting of the committee of correspondence, June 6, a letter under date of June 7 is sent to the committee of correspondence in Boston. This letter is in response to Boston's communication of May 30 (q.v.). Extracts from the letter follow: "You say, that a speedy, united and vigorous Effort is certainly all that can be depended upon to yield us any effectual Relief, and that this Effort is on all hands acknowledged to be the Suspension of Trade so wisely defined by us." To the first we entirely concur with you in Sentiment; but in the last we apprehend you have made a mistake [see June 16],—for on revising our Letter to you, so far from finding a word mentioned of a "Suspension of Trade" the Idea is not even conceived.—That, and every other Resolution we have thought it most prudent to leave for the Discussion of the proposed general Congress." The letter continues by expressing readiness to join in such congress, and suggests that sufficient time be allowed the delegates from colonies to the southward, letters to which "we will forward with great Pleasure."
- A request is made for the names of the men constituting the Boston committee, and "We beg also for the future that your Letters be sealed and directed to our Chairman."—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also 4 Am. Arch., I: 303-4.
- 9 John Hutt, "Engraver in general, from London, At Mr. Hewitt's directly opposite the Merchants Coffee-House, in Dock-Street, New-York," advertises that he engraves coats-of-arms, crests, seals and cyphers, bills of exchange, bills of lading, card plates, door plates, dog collars, etc.—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 9, 1774. On Sept. 5, he gave notice that he had recently erected a press for copper-plate printing, "by which Means he will be enabled to execute every Piece of Engraving he is favour'd with in a neat, more expeditious, and reasonable Manner than heretofore could be done."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774. See also Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 137-38.
- 10 At a meeting of the committee of correspondence, it is ordered, "That a Committee be appointed to answer the Letter received from the Committee at Hartford, and enclose them a copy of a Letter wrote the 23d ultimo, by this Committee, to Boston; and also to answer a Letter received from Mr. Bernard Lenot, of Bradford, and that they write a letter to the Committee of Correspondence of South Carolina, enclosing a copy of this Committee's first letter to Boston, and to acquaint them that this Committee have, in a subsequent letter to the Committee at Boston, desired them to appoint a time and place for a Congress, an answer to which they expect daily."—4 Am. Arch., I: 305.
- " The common council agrees upon certain fines to be imposed upon the members for tardiness at or absence from the meetings.—M. C. C., VIII: 35. Self-imposed penalties had an early origin—see June 9, 1697.
- 11 On this day, Gov. Tryon sends to the Earl of Dartmouth a report on the province of New York. In speaking of the port of New York, he adds: "The Map in the Appendix marked number 3, presents a full View of the Harbor, the Situation of Sandy Hook, and shews the Depth of Water from thence up to the Port." Tryon then goes on to give an account of the various kinds of courts and the extent of their jurisdiction; the trade of the province, its exports and imports; the strength of the neighbouring Indians and their attitude towards the English; and the salaries and mode of appointment of the civil officials. "Military Establishments," he continues, "have only taken place in Time of War. The Province during the late War, raised, clothed and paid a large Body of Forces, which was disbanded at the Peace, and there is at present no Provincial Military Establishment unless the Militia may be regarded as such; The Officers of this Corps are . . . appointed by the Governor, and having no pay their offices must be rather expensive than lucrative." No census of the population has been taken since 1771 (q.v.), but, by using the figures then calculated and adding his estimate of the increase, the governor reports that there are about 182,251 inhabitants in the province. To a question concerning fortifications, Tryon answers: "The City of New York the Metropolis is protected by a Fort and a Range of Batteries at the Entrance of the East River or Harbour, in good order and capable of mounting about one Hundred pieces of Ordnance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 434-57.
- In a report to the Earl of Dartmouth on the "present state of the Government of New York," Gov. Tryon writes: "A Third Branch of the Revenue is the Excise on Spirituous Liquors. . . . This Fund is appropriated as follows—The Sum of £800 . . . is to be paid annually for Twenty years [see March 24, 1772] to the Governors of the Hospital now erecting in the City of New York [see Sept. 3, 1773] for the support of that Institution . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 453.
- The committee of correspondence having answered the dispatches from Boston (see June 7), "This Day they will assemble again, after which it is hoped, their Proceedings will be published, for the Information of their Constituents; the Times are critical, and big with interesting Events which has occasioned the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia to promulgate their Letter to Boston, and such other Proceedings as were judged necessary for the Satisfaction of the Public."—N. Y. Merc., June 13, 1774.
- 14 Smith notes that "It appears manifest that Colden fears nothing and cares not what he does, and that Wats De Lancey & Cruger are determined to go with him . . . These Men are Kaaves or Fools—or both . . . the Liberty Boys here in the Committee of 51 drive those who came in to repress their zeal before them, they having lately written Letters to all the supervisors intended to prepare the Way for a Non Import and non exportation agree; and tho' the Delancys were at the first Committee with Design to abate the Liberty Interests, yet now swimming with the Current & taking the advantage of the Weakness of Colden, they venture to speak loud agt the Measures of Adm<sup>t</sup> even at Dinner in his Presence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
- Gerard Bancker, city surveyor, computes "the length of all the Streets in the City of New York thro which Mr. Colles proposed to lead the Water from his Works" (see April 22) as about 14 miles. The original report, undated, is among the miscellaneous papers in the city clerk's record-room and is reproduced as Pl. 39, Vol. IV. The date is established by an itemized account of Bancker, preserved in the comptroller's office in Box 1, 1750-1815. The computation was made on the order of Recorder Wats, and Bancker's charge for it was one pound. His bill for this add other corporation work from Aug. 28, 1772, to May 13, 1775, was ordered paid May 24, 1776 (q.v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 139. See, further, July 21.
- 15 This being the day on which the harbour of Boston was "finally and most unjustly deprived of its principal and rightful advantages" by act of parliament, a gallows, "with the Figures of 3 Men suspended by the Neck, said to be intended to represent Lord North, Governor Hutchinson, and Solicitor Wedderburn, with another Figure representing the Devil, were carried thro the principal Streets of the City, attended by several Thousand People, and at last burnt before the Coffee House Door." In Hutchinson's right hand were "the Boston and Plymouth Addresses, and Signers Names—In Lord North's, the Port Bill, the Regulating Bill, and the Bill for the better administering of Justice in the Province of Massachusetts's Bay—And in Mr. Wedderburn's, the Letter of Hutchinson and Oliver to Mr. Whately—Near his infernal Majesty, on the Gallows, were these Words—Devil, do thy Office—With tartarean Sulphur destroy these Pests of Mankind."—N. Y. Journ., June 16 and 23, 1774; cf. Postscript to Penn. Journ., July 6, 1774.
- A contributor, signing himself "N. T.," sends this letter to 1774 the printer of the Journal: "Every one acquainted with this city must applaud the Corporation for the many new and useful improvements and regulations they have made, and are continually making, whereby the city becomes daily more and more convenient, clean, wholesome and beautiful. Among these improvements that of affixing the names of the streets at every corner, gave the people in general as well as myself, great satisfaction . . . But the good effect of their design is in a great measure defeated, or at least delayed, by the neglect and breach of agreement of the painters who undertook to paint the letter boards. Some few of them have indeed fulfilled their agreements, or parts of them; for I find, that in the street where Alderman Gautier lives, and in several of the streets adjacent, towards White-Hall and the east river, directions are put up, but the rest of the city, as far as I have seen, is hitherto wholly neglected. The reason of this delay I cannot account for, unless it be that the undertakers, think they can take greater liberty with the Corporation and the public, than with private persons, in not complying with their agreements. If this be the case, they may perhaps soon find their mistake, and that it is safer to offend one person than many."—N. Y. Jour., June 16, 1774. On Sept. 29, the common council ordered the payment of $615:00 for making and painting 67 street signs.—From the original voucher in comptroller's office.

16 In a Boston letter to the New York committee of correspondence, the mistake mentioned in the New York letter of June 7 (q. v.) is explained as follows: "The Clause in a former Letter in which you apprehend we made a mistake we must explain by observing that the Idea of suspension of Trade we took from a Letter wrote us by your former Committee of Correspondence" (see May 15). The letter continues: "We note you are of opinion that it is most prudent to leave every resolution for the discussion of the general Congress and are pleased with your readiness to meet by your deputies either of the general Assembly (or other Deputies) in a general Congress at any time or place we shall think fit—we have to inform you that our General Assembly are now setting at Salem ab'z miles from this Metropolis they have appointed a committee to report on that Subject. From the wisdom spirit & resolution of our Assembly we cannot have the least doubt they will do everything that will shew the world that they regard a union of the Colonies as of the utmost importance to the salvation of our Rights, we are in hopes to forward you their resolutions by next opp . . ."

"P S The Yeomanry of this Province have . . . a solemn Agreement to purchase & consume o Goods imported from Great Britain after the first of Oct<sup>r</sup> next which People eagerly subscribe a Copy of which was sent you y<sup>e</sup> last Week." A list of the names of the committee of correspondence for the town of Boston is appended.—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

18 A letter from Boston to Daniel Dunscombe says: "We should sooner have answered your esteemed favor had we not waited to learn the fate of our nonconsumption agreement in this and the neighbouring Colonies. This we have the pleasure to advise you is now in great forwardness throughout the New England Governments even much beyond the most sanguine of our expectations. We hear that a similar agreement is coming into the northern part of your Province. Much has been done to defeat its operation here, but it has gained greatly by opposition. This effectual Plan has originated and been thus far carried thro by the two venerable orders of men stiled mechanics and husbandmen, the strength of every community. Go on brethren, and convince the world that neither mercantile avarice nor court policy can defeat the united efforts of the good and faithful among you. We are satisfied you have your share of difficulties in the present struggle but we greatly depend upon your good sense and perseverance to ensure a favorable issue to our present unhappy disputes with a corrupt ministry in Great Britain.

"Your frequent correspondence with us upon every matter of importance, which may turn up with you will greatly benefit the common cause . . ."

"P. S. It is industriously propagated here that New York will not appoint members for the ensuing Congress. We can by no means credit so invidious a report but esteemed it our duty to give you the earliest notice of it."—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

20 Isaac Sears and Alexander McDougall write thus to Samuel

Adams: "Inclosed is a letter from our mutual friend Charles Thompson of Philad<sup>a</sup>. The sentiments it contains are so Salutory that we cannot but Cordially approve of them. You will by the caution in it see the propriety of not Publishing it. The Sentiments may be improved for Public advantage. As to the Time of the Meeting of the Congress we are happy to find it agrees with what we wrote you via Rhode-Island. If you have appointed any other place than that mentioned in this Letter it may easily be altered. Considering the extent of Country to be consulted on your Case of the Common Cause, the most Sanguine Friends to the Libertys of America could not hope for greater Unanimity nor Sympathy for you than has been expressed by every Colony who has given their Sentiments on your distressed Condition. Lord North will find to his great Mortification that the Americans are not what he said they were 'a Rope of Sand.' Be firm & prudent & a little time will effect your Salvation & a glorious deliverance to America. The burden of your People deprived of Labour by the Port-Act will be taken off by the Contributions of the other Colonies, which we are confident will be abundant."—From the original letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Two broadsides are issued, printed on the same sheet of paper. One, addressed "To the Public" and signed "A Freeman," reads: "The late Destestation shewn by the Friends of Liberty in this City, to the veal and arbitrary Conduct of Lord North, Governor Hutchinson and Solicitor Wedderburn . . . by hanging them in Effigy [see June 15], has given some Discontent to a Few who are looking up to Government for Places of Profit and Honour. In order to apologize to the Minister for being unable to prevent the Execution of those Effigies and to court his Favour, these Mal-Contents are beating up for Volunteers to sign a Paper, under the specious Pretence of maintaining the Peace of the City, and disapproving the Odium put on this detestable Triumvirate . . ."

"As it is well known the Peace of the City has not been broken by effigizing the Enemies of our Country, and some Persons who wish well to its Liberties, may incautiously be deluded to sign that Paper: This is therefore to warn all the Friends of Freedom, not to be made the Tools of those who are endeavouring to destroy, and ready to share the Plunder of our Country. Consider, that by signing the Association Paper, you countenance, if not approve the tyrannical Conduct towards America, of Lord North and his Servants—You endanger a Division . . . and encourage a Swarm of Informers to ruin our Trade with Impunity."

The other broadside, addressed "To the People of New-York" and signed "A Citizen," says: "Though the Association lately set on Foot, was on Pretence of keeping the Peace of the City, yet it is evident that it has a direct Tendency to disturb that Peace: and that the true Design of it was to discourage and prevent any effectual Opposition to the Ministerial Measures now vigorously pursued, with an openly avowed Intention of reducing America to Slavery, and dragging it, bound in Chains and humbled in the Dust, to the Feet of the British Parliament, or rather the haughty avaricious Ministers who direct it. . . ."

"The Contrivers of this Association well know, that the Effigies of those Traitors were not carried about with any Design to disturb the Peace of the City, or give Offence to one Friend of his Country—The little Disturbance that happened, was wholly occasioned by those who attempted to interrupt the Procession, and thereby raise a Disturbance; but they failed in the Attempt, and the Disturbance was confined to themselves. But this Association . . . has a direct Tendency to irritate the People, and raise those very Tumults and Disturbances which it is pretended to prevent;—Therefore, it is hoped that none will subscribe but such as are willing to be considered as openly avowing the Conduct of the British Ministry, and supporting their Claims and Pretensions against America."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Joseph Allicocke resigns as secretary of the committee of correspondence, and John Blagge is unanimously appointed in his stead.—4 Am. Arch., 1: 307.

Joseph Morris and Daniel Burnet advertise that they "purpose to continue their weekly stage wagon, upon the following plan, viz. To set off from the house of Mr. James Eaton, at Black River, every Monday morning, at 9 o'clock, and proceed (by the way of Mendem) to the house of Capt. Peter Dickerson, at Morris Town, and there to rest all night; from thence to set off at sun half an hour high, every Tuesday morning, and proceed to Powles-Hook, calling at the intermediate stages on the road, and rest in New-York on

- 1774 Wednesdays; and from thence to set off every Thursday morning at 6 o'clock, from John Tuttle's, at the North-River Ferry, and lodge at Capt. Dickenson's, in Morris Town, that night, and set out from thence for Black River next morning, and take the same rout back as before described."—N. Y. Merc., June 20, 1774.
- 20 Alderman Brewster is ordered to "cause the Dock belonging to this Corporation at the North River [see April 10, 1772] to be repaired as soon as conveniently he can."—M. C. C., VIII: 37. Entries in the Minutes which follow seem to show that an enlargement or extension of the dock accompanied the repairs. A total expenditure of over £1,200 was authorized during the lapse of about eight months ending May 2, 1775, "for the Corporation's Dock and wharf at the North river."—Ibid., VIII: 50, 51, 58, 62, 67, 91. "It was not until just before the Revolution that a landing known as the 'Corporation Dock' was completed. Excepting the Great Dock, the Albany Pier, and the Corporation Dock, all other wharves owned by the city were not worthy of the name, as they were nothing more than mere landings, used mainly by the small boats which brought food supplies to the municipal markets. In the Montgomerie Ward the corporation possessed two slips, Beekman's and Burling's. In front of the Fly and the Coenties markets it had built two other landings; and it owned a fifth known as the 'Old Slip.'"—Peterson & Edward, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 353-54.
- 22 Gerard Banker surveys the "Ground contiguous to the Poor House." Banker's plan of this ground (in box A-B, folder 45, in Banker Coll., N. Y. Pub. Library) shows the exact location of the liberty pole erected on Feb. 6, 1770 (q. v. for all available information regarding location of this pole). It is reproduced on Pl. 40, Vol. IV. See also July 14, 1770.
- 23 John Holt discards the king's arms as the head-piece of his paper, and substitutes thereof the device of a snake cut in pieces. Each part is marked with the initials of one of the colonies, and underneath the serpent is the motto "Unite or Die." This new design is intended to represent the disjointed state of the colonies. Holt continued to use it until Dec. 15 (q. v.)—N. Y. Jour., June 23 through Dec. 8, 1774; Wilson, Mem. Hist. City of N. Y., IV: 137. It was used also in the Penn. Jour. from July 27, 1774, to Oct. 18, 1775.
- 24 The following letter is written by the committee of correspondence appointed by the assembly of New York (see Jan 20) to the committee of correspondence of Connecticut: "We have your letter of the 4th before us, enclosing the resolves of your Assembly, . . . and we agree with you, that at this alarming juncture, a general Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies would be a very expedient and salutary measure; such a Congress, consisting of men of coolness, prudence, and understanding, would, we conceive, be the best means under Providence, of restoring that peace and harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, which is the surest foundation of happiness to both, . . . We are sorry therefore, that we are not sufficiently empowered to take any steps in relation to so salutary a measure; for we are a Committee of Correspondence only, and cannot consistently with good order and propriety interfere in a matter of such importance, without the appointment and concurrence of our whole House of Representatives [Connecticut's lower house had passed resolutions "relative to their rights and privileges"]. After what has been said, it would be needless to mention anything about the places of meeting, only this, that if the other Colonies, who may have authority for so doing, should meet in Congress, in, or near this city, we shall most gladly and willingly assist with our advice, &c., if necessary, which, circumstanced as we are at present, is all we are enabled to do.
- "We should be glad however to know before we come to any final determination on this matter, what steps will be taken by the other Colonies, who are in the same situation with us, by not having an opportunity of knowing the sentiments of their Houses of Representatives; when the measures proposed to be adopted by them, shall be communicated to us, we shall be better able to judge what plan will be most likely to procure a redress of our present grievances, and promote the union and prosperity of the mother country and the Colonies."—4 Am. Arch., I: 306.
- 27 "The Accounts received by every Post, and each Vessel entering our Harbour, bring us the Resolutions of the Cities and Counties in the several Provinces, on the Situation of our suffering Brethren at Boston; and Assurances of their sending Deputations, to assist at a grand Congress of Representatives of all the Colonies, —to whose Wisdom, Firmness, and Fortitude, the Liberty, Property and whole Interest of this free and august Continent are to be delegated."—N. Y. Merc., June 27, 1774.
- "At a meeting of the committee of correspondence, on motion of Alexander McDougall, a debate arises as to which is the most eligible mode of appointing deputies to the ensuing general congress. No decision is reached and the meeting is adjourned to June 29 (q. v.)—4 Am. Arch., I: 307.
- "It is ordered that the street beginning at the house of Andrew Hopper, nearly opposite St. Paul's Church, and leading to Fresh Water, be called Chatham Street.—M. C. C., VIII: 37. Andrew Hopper's shop was on the south-east corner of Broadway and Ann St. Chatham Street is shown on Maerschalck's Plan of 1755 (Pl. 34, Vol. I) only as part of the "Common," but by 1766 there was a street or road running obliquely past this corner, in the direction of the Fresh Water (Montresor's Map of 1766, Pl. 49, Vol. I). Called after the Earl of Chatham, it remained so for more than a century after 1774. There are various entries regarding its regulation and survey during the years 1788, 1789 and 1790.—M. C. C. (MS.), IX: 160, 217, 245, 249, 252, 263, 271, 322, 336, 341, 426-27. Its name was finally changed, in 1886, to Park Row, for those parts between Frankfort St. and East Broadway, and between Tryon Row and Mott St.—M. C. C., LIV: 80-81.
- "A committee is appointed by the common council to view the ground at Nassau Island proposed to be conveyed to the corporation by Henry Remsen for the use of the ferry lately established there.—M. C. C., VIII: 37. See Feb. 17.
- 29 The committee of correspondence meets, and Alexander McDougall moves "That this Committee proceed immediately to nominate five Deputies for the city and county of New-York, to represent them in a Convention of this Colony, or in the general Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, on the first of September next, if the other counties of this Colony approve of them as Deputies for the Colony; and that their names be sent to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence; to be proposed on Tuesday next to the freeholders and freemen of this city and county for their approbation." The matter is debated but no definite action is taken, and the meeting adjourns to July 4 (q. v.), at which time the discussion was to be "finally determined."—4 Am. Arch., I: 307.
- "David Colden is appointed surveyor-general during the illness of his brother, Alexander Colden (see Feb. 10, 1762).—Cal. Coun. Min., 502. See Sept. 29. In Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 826, the date of David's commission is given as June 27. See also Dec. 20, 1774.
- 30 "A Citizen," in a broadside addressed "To the Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New-York," urges the inadvisability of allowing the assembly's committee (see Jan. 20) to choose the deputies to the Philadelphia congress. "For it is agreed by all," he says, "that the Business on which they are to deliberate and determine, is the most important that ever came before any Assembly of Freemen,—no less, than whether Americans are to be Freemen or Slaves! therefore as the Interest and Safety of all are concerned, the Wisdom of all should be consulted and exerted. But how can that be called forth, if our Assembly's Committee of Correspondence (as some would have it) appoint and elect the Deputies? Allowing the Thirteen Gentlemen that compose this Committee, to be men far superior to their neighbours, will any Man of common Sense presume to insult the Colony by saying, the Committee have more Understanding and Wisdom than all the Freemen of the Colony?" The writer goes on to prove that the committee has not the power to choose the delegates and claims that the city has declared this by appointing the "Committee of Fifty-One" to manage its affairs. He concludes, "if the City Committee does not, without delay [sic], devise a Plain [sic] for electing the Deputies, by the votes of the People, I submit it to you, whether each Ward should not be called together, and the Votes taken for Deputies by opening a Poll, in the Manner observed in choosing Aldermen, which would be completed in one Morning; and thus an End would be put to the Controversy, in a way consistent with the Freedom of the People."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- July 4 The city committee meets to decide the question of the nomination of delegates to the Philadelphia congress. McDougall's motion to refer the nominations to the committee of mechanics for its concurrence (see June 29) is negative; but a motion to nominate five persons as delegates to be submitted to the public for their 1774 approval is carried. Two sets of delegates are proposed; in the July successful list, John Alsop and John Jay replace John Morin Scott 4 and Alexander McDougall. It is then ordered that an advertisement, signed by the chairman, be published requesting the "inhabitants of this city and county to meet at the City Hall, on Thursday, the 7th instant, at 12 o'clock, to concur in the nomination of the foregoing five persons, or to choose such others in their stead as in their wisdom shall seem meet."—4 Am. Arch., I: 308-9.

On July 6, Colden wrote to the Earl of Dartmouth in regard to this: "accounts repeatedly coming to hand, from different Parts of the Continent, of the Appointment of Deputies to meet in general Congress, this Measure was so strenuously push'd that it was carried in the Committee of 51 . . . and five Persons named for the Deputies from this Province.—The Persons named are James Duane and John Jay, two eminent Lawyers, Isaac Low, Philip Livingston, and John Alsop, Merchants.—I am told a violent Effort was made in the Committee to have John Scott, an eminent
 in place of Jay and Alsop."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 469-70.

It is also agreed at this meeting that circular letters shall be sent to the supervisors of the several counties, "informing them of what we have done, and to request of them to send such Delegates as they may choose to represent them in Congress."—4 Am. Arch., I: 308.

5 At a meeting of the "Committee of Mechanics," the nominations of the committee of 51 (see July 4) are taken into consideration. Leonard Lispenard and Alexander McDougall are chosen in the places of Duane and Alsop. As the "Committee of Merchants did refuse the Mechanics a Representation in their Body, or to consult with their Committee, or offer the Names of the Persons nominated to them for their Concurrence," the mechanics of the city and county are urged to attend the general meeting on July 7, and to vote for Isaac Low, Philip Livingston, John Jay, Leonard Lispenard, and Alexander McDougall.—From a broadside, dated July 6, 1774, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

" The committee of mechanics, under the leadership of Alexander McDougall, issue the following notice: "The enemies of the liberties of America being unwearied in misrepresenting the attachment of the inhabitants of this city, to the common cause of this country, to the neighbouring colonies, a number of citizens think it highly necessary to convene the good people of this metropolis in the fields on . . . the 6th instant [q.v.] . . . where every friend to the true interest of this distressed country, is earnestly requested to attend; when matters of the utmost importance to their reputation and security, as freemen, will be communicated."
 —N. Y. Jour., July 14, 1774; N. Y. Merc., July 11, 1774.

6 Lieut.-Gov. Colden writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "The present political zeal and phrenzy is almost entirely confined to the City of New-York, the people in the counties are no ways disposed to become active, or to bear any part in what is proposed by the citizens. I am told all the counties but one have declined an invitation sent to them from New-York, to appoint Committees of Correspondence. This Province is every where, my Lord, except in the City of New-York, perfectly quiet and in good order, and in New-York a much greater freedom of speech prevails now than has done heretofore. An opposition has been declared to the vile practice of exhibiting effigies, which I hope will prevent it for the future."—4 Am. Arch., I: 517.

" In response to the handbills of July 5 (q.v.), a meeting of the inhabitants is held in the Fields. Alexander McDougall acts as chairman. Those present unanimously agree to resolutions declaring: (1) The Boston Port Bill is oppressive and unconstitutional;
 (2) An attack on one colony is an attack on all; (3) The shutting up of any port in America is "subversive of the commercial rights of the inhabitants of this Continent"; (4) Non-intercourse with Great Britain until the Port Bill is repealed will be "the salvation of North America and her liberties"; (5) The New York delegates to the general congress are hereby empowered to accede to a non-importation agreement; (6) A subscription for the relief of the poor of Boston should be started at once. It is also ordered that these resolutions be printed in the newspapers of the city, and sent to the different counties in this colony and to the committees of correspondence of neighbouring colonies.—4 Am.
Arch., I: 312-13. The committee of 51, representing in general the conservative element in the city, strongly disapproved of these actions (see July 7).

The meeting in the Fields on July 6 (q.v.), presided over by McDougall, seems to have forestalled the regularly called meeting at the city hall for July 7 (see July 4). The newspapers fail to report such a meeting, but the minutes of the committee of 51 record that "a number of citizens attended and it was unanimously agreed that this Committee appoint a Committee of their body to attend with the Committee from the Mechanics at Mr. Francis's . . .
 in order to appoint two or more persons in each Ward . . . to take with them a list of the five persons nominated by this Committee [see July 4], and also a list of the five persons nominated by the Committee of Mechanics [see July 5] as Delegates to the proposed Congress; and exhibit to the freeholders, freemen and such of the inhabitants who pay taxes, both lists, leaving it to their election to sign either." In the evening, the committee of 51 complied with this decision of the inhabitants, and then, having heard of the handbills of July 5 (q.v.), and of the meeting on July 6 (q.v.), resolved, on the motion of John Thurman, "that this Committee disavow all such proceedings evidently calculated to throw an odium on this Committee, and to create groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct as well as disunion among our fellow-citizens." A committee is thereupon appointed "to draw and report
 . . . a set of Resolutions to be proposed to the city, expressing their sense of the Boston Port Act, and our concurrence with such of the neighbouring Colonies as have declared what may be proper to be done for the relief of the town of Boston, and the redress of America grievances."—4 Am. Arch., I: 311-12; N. Y. Jour., July 14, 1774. On July 8, the eleven radical members of the committee who were in sympathy with the proceedings of July 6, requested that their names might be "struck out of the list of the Committee."
 Among these were Alexander McDougall, Philip Livingston, Isaac Sears, Abraham P. Lott, and Leonard Lispenard.—4 Am. Arch., I: 313-14; Rivington's Gazetteer, July 14, 1774.

Writing to John Elmdendorph, John Thurman records that "Politics is the Only Business we mind at present & that is as Crooked as Dicks Hatband & we seem but too much Divided in Parties."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 289.

 Trinity Church and the Parsoogee House be for the future called by the name of Auchmuty Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.). For the session of this and other streets to the city, see Sept. 18, 1761.
 Auchmuty St. came to be called by its present name, Rector St., as early as 1791.—M. C. B. (1784-1831), I: 630. See Vol. III, prentice to him "at Spring Gardens New-York."—N. Y. Jour.,

"A Moderate Man" addresses the "Freeborn Citizens of New York" on the subject of the resolutions entered into on July 6 (q.v.). He approves of these, but admits that "the manner in which they were introduced to public view . . . had a tendency to cast an odium upon the Committee of Correspondence, to cause groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct and to create a disunion among the citizens in general." The members who left the committee of 51 (see July 7) are urged to resume their seats.
 The situation is described thus: "one party [radicals] has ushered forth a set of spirited Resolves [see July 6]; the other [conservatives] do not object to them, considered in themselves, but have appointed a Committee to draw up another set of Resolves [see July 7], which I doubt not they intend shall be introduced in such a manner as shall be unexceptionable; and if these Resolves should happen to be set on as high a key as the others, I believe Lord North will think it as unaccountable a party as ever came athwart his hawser."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"Agricola" issues an answer to the broadside of July 11 (q.v.).
 "It must be a lame cause," he says, "that will admit of such lame advocates. When the blind lead the blind, no wonder they both fall into the ditch." In his opinion, the only way in which those who left the committee of 51 [see July 7] can return is by re-election, but even then "there must be an humiliation, an acknowledgment of their errors, and a promise to do so no more." He hopes the "Moderate Man" will consider his next subject a little more carefully, and "not slobber it over in such a slovenly way as you have done the present."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

1774 report. The "resolves" are ordered to be printed and distributed in handbills for the consideration of the inhabitants, who are requested to meet at the Coffee House, on July 19, to decide upon them. At the same time the people are to vote upon the nominees for delegates.—4 Am. Arch., I: 315; N. Y. Merc., July 18, 1774. See Pl. 41, Vol. IV.

16 That the differences and contentions among the local committee of correspondence caused considerable uneasiness in Boston is evidenced by the following letter from there, endorsed as "passed unanimously": "The continued Silence of the respectable Committee of New York from June 7 [g. v.] at this important time produces in us some Feelings not unlike those which are experienced by a Man in Distress who (perhaps too jealously) thinks himself deserted by his Friend—these have been heighted by frequent whispering of some Paragraphs of Letters received from particular Gentlemen of your Committee nay some Letters as such have been publish'd in our Papers containing Sentiments which have not appeared in y<sup>r</sup> former Letters to us, Copies of some of our Letters have been said to be sent this Way &c. but not to enumerate these Matters Gentlemen be assured this Committee would at all times gratefully have received any Advice from your Committee or from any private Gentleman of it.

"But to turn our Views to a larger Sphere, We congratulate you Gentlemen on that General Union that spreads its beneficent Influence thro' North America, May Heaven bless the intended Congress, may their Wise & righteous Determination persuade the King that North Americans are yet his loyal worthy & free Subjects & may the happy times return when honest Industry shall enjoy the Bounty of Heaven unmolested.—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

18 "An Inhabitant" writes to the printer of the Mercury: "The Difficulty in obtaining small Change in this City at present, is most sensibly felt by all Persons in Trade; and what every Inhabitant would wish to see removed. To effect which, a number of small Bills issued by the Corporation, might answer all the salutary Purposes required. Our Friends in Pennsylvania have adopted this Measure with Success, and many good Consequences have resulted from it."—N. Y. Merc., July 18, 1774.

19 A meeting of citizens is held at the Coffee House, "for the purpose of auditing the resolves which had been prepared by the Committee of Correspondence [see July 13]; and also respecting the nomination of Delegates to the Grand Congress."—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 21, 1774. Smith says of this meeting: "The Town met at the Call of the Committee of 51 to choose Delegates for the Congress, & approve certain pusillanimous Resolves. Scott made a Speech & to the Confusion of the Committee, their proposed Resolves were rejected—a new Committee appointed for the Purpose."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. This new committee was composed of five conservatives and ten radicals.—N. Y. Merc., July 25, 1774; cf. 4 Am. Arch., I: 317 (footnote). They were to draw up and report "a set of constitutional Resolves, declarative of the rights of the British subjects in America, and expressive of the disapprobation of this city and county of the late parliamentary measures respecting these Colonies."—Penn. Jour., July 27, 1774. No decisive action in the matter of delegates to the general congress was taken at this meeting. At the meeting of the committee of correspondence in the evening, it was stated that, "as only a small proportion of the citizens attended the meeting at the Coffee House to signify their sense of same, and the sentiments of the majority still remaining uncertain:

"Therefore, to remove all doubts and uneasiness on that head, it is ordered, that certain amendments be made to the said resolves [see resolutions 2d, 3d, and 7th], and that two or more persons be appointed in each Ward to take the sense of the freeholders, freemen, and such others who pay taxes, respecting the said resolutions so amended; as also the Delegates nominated by this Committee to attend the Congress." It is also ordered that the resolutions be published. On motion of John Jay, a committee is appointed to take the "distresses of the poor of the town of Boston, and ways and means for their relief into consideration; and also a committee to apply to the committee of mechanics, and request them to appoint certain persons of their body to go round the Wards to take the sense of the inhabitants on the matters above mentioned."—4 Am. Arch., I: 315-17; Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, I: 13 (note). See July 20.

(see July 19) meets to draw up a set of resolutions. The conservative members, Isaac Low, Henry Remsen, John Moore, and John Jay, decline to serve on the committee, as they consider their election "too irregular to assume any authority in consequence of it to draw up Resolves for the town; especially as the nomination of this Committee seems to cast an invidious reflection on the Committee of Correspondence, and manifestly tends to divide the citizens into factions and parties." However, the remaining members agree upon resolutions declaring, in general, (1) their allegiance to the king; (2) their right to exemption from all taxes not imposed by themselves or their representatives; (3) the successive attempts of parliament to impose taxes upon the colonies, "unwarrantable assumptions of power;" (4) the Boston Port Bill, "subversive of every idea of Freedom;" (5) the proposed congress, "highly expedient;" and (6) their approbation of the attempts to relieve the distress of the people of Boston. In addition to agreeing upon these resolutions, the committee calls for a meeting of the inhabitants on July 25 (g. v.).—N. Y. Merc., July 25, 1774. A broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library gives an account of this meeting.

In a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, Gen. Gage says: "The virulent party at New-York is routed."—4 Am. Arch., I: 615.

A public vendue is advertised for this day, at the Merchants' Coffee House, of the "House and lot of ground, lying near the old City-Hall in Wall-Street, late the property of George Gissing, deceased, formerly known by the name of Brock's tavern, and at present in possession of Mr. George Cumming, Hair-Dresser. The house is 3 stories high has 7 fire places, and a good dry cellar."—N. Y. Jour., June 30, 1774. Later, it was announced that the house would be sold at private sale on Aug. 9.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 8, 1774. For a history of Brock's Tavern, which had existed since 1758, and probably earlier, see 1758. In January, 1777, Alexander Dove seems to have been temporarily in occupation of this old tavern where he offered "Fire Cantens" for sale (N. Y. Merc., Jan. 6, 1777), but, by Oct. 17 (g. v.), as "Burrow's Tavern," it was being used as a meeting-place of loyalists. In February, 1778, the house was again offered for sale. The newspaper advertisement described it as "a large corner house at the upper end of Wall-street, opposite the Old Presbyterian Meeting, for many years past a noted tavern."—Ibid., Feb. 16, 1778.

"The Proposal of Christopher Colles heretofore referred to this Board [see Apr. 22], respecting the Building of a Reservoir and the Conveyance of Fresh Water thro' the several Streets, Lanes and Alleys of this City and the Expence that will attend the said Undertaking, being this Day taken into Consideration, it was moved that the Same be Carried into Execution." After some debate, the motion was carried by a vote of eight to two. The board "then proceeded to consider whether it would not be expedient to strike and issue printed Notes of certain Denominations and to a certain Amount not exceeding £2500 to be received in all Payments at their Treasury, in order the better to enable them to prosecute the said Undertaking, which being unanimoously agreed to . . . it was resolved and Ordered that a Number of Notes to the Amount of £2500 be printed accordingly." A committee of six was appointed "to draw the Form of the said Notes and to consider of a proper Device for the same." After this, Mr. Hugget informed the council that Augustus and Frederick van Cortlandt "are willing to convey to this Corporation so much of their Ground fronting Great George Street &c: as may be wanting to erect the Reservoir on, and for other Conveniences, at the Rate of six hundred Pounds per Acre." As this price was considered "reasonable," it was ordered "that the same be purchased of them for the Purposes above mentioned" (see Aug. 8).—M. G. C., VIII: 40-41. Commenting on this action, the Mercury said: "According to this Design, the Water will be conveyed through every Street and Lane in this City, with a perpendicular Conduit Pipe at every Hundred yards, at which Water may be drawn at any Time of the Day or Night, and in case of Fire, each Conduit pipe will be so contrived as to communicate with the extinguishing Fire-Engines, whereby a speedy and plentiful Supply of Water may be had in that calamitous Situation."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774. See also N. Y. Jour., July 28, 1774. The reservoir was erected on the east side of Broadway, between Franklin and White Sts.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976. Three transports arrive in New York from Boston and take on "Ordnance, and a Provision of Military Stores, among which are 500 Barrels of Gun-Powder." It is rumoured that "the Royal Welch Fusiliers [see March 1] now here, are to embark this week on board the said Transports [see July 27], with a Detachment of the Train of Artillery [see July 26], and to sail directly for Boston."—N. Y. Merc., July 25, 1774.

The common council orders that a grant be made to Henry, John, Mary, and Rachel, Cruger for the water lot "situate in the East Ward of this City, opposite to their Lot of Ground fronting Countess Key Slip, they paying three Shillings per Foot extending the Pier, and making a good and sufficient Stairs at the Extremity thereof to be maintained and repaired by them their Heirs & Assigns for ever."—M. C. C., VIII, 42.

The common council contributes £40 "towards purchasing a Lot for enlarging & continuing Hague Street" (see Nov. 9, 1773).—M. C. C., VIII, 42.

An advertisement reads: "A French Boarding-School. Mrs. Cozani, (Lately from London), Purposes to open a Boarding-School, to educate, or to complete the education of young Ladies; where will be taught the English, French, and Italian languages, grammatically; also to write and translate one language into the other,—Geography, with a knowledge of history,—to draw and paint upon silk, embroidery, tambour, Dresden, plain work, blond lace, and several other genteel and fashionable works.—A particular attention will be paid to the morals and conduct of the ladies in every particular which may prove beneficial to themselves, and satisfactory to their parents [parents]. Ladies will be boarded and educated at forty pounds a year.

"Day scholars will be taken.—There will be masters for music, dancing and writing.

"Wall-Street, New-York."—Livington's Gazetteer, July 21, 1774. A similar school had been opened in New York the year before (see April 21, 1773).

22 "Democritus" criticises and ridicules, in a broadside, the resolutions drawn up by the new committee (see July 20). He is "determined to plant himself at a Corner, and laugh at every one that appears at the City-Hall on Monday next" (July 25).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

23 "A Citizen" writes a caustic letter to "John M. S. . . ." (Scott), assailing his character, denouncing him as an enemy to the cause of liberty, and criticising in the most adverse manner his speech at the Coffee House on July 19 (q. v.). The letter says in part, "To keep alive the Fire of Party Spirit (the Darling Object of your constant Pursuit) which was nearly being extinguished, you attempted to lessen the Importance of the City Committee, by endeavouring to cast an Odium on their Conduct. And how was it attempted? By asserting, that their Power extended not to the forming of Resolves, and by insinuating that they had determined to palm them on the Town . . .

"Conviction must here stare you in the Face, and was [sic] you not Callous to the keen Sting of Remorse, you would fly from a City, where every Inhabitant will tell you, that it was the united Voice of each of them, which called on the Committee for Resolves; and where every Citizen will declare . . . that when the Committee had formed Resolves, they were dispersed abroad, and a Week allowed to the People in order to consider of their Propriety, or to make such Alterations, as in their Wisdom might seem meet." This letter is followed by an address "To the Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," indorsing, as delegates to the congress, Isaac Low, John Alsop, John Jay, Philip Livingston, and James Duane, and urging their support at the meeting on Monday (see July 25). It is signed by "A Son of Liberty."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

25 At the meeting of the inhabitants at the city hall (see July 20) no action is taken.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774. This evening, on motion of Henry Remsen, the committee of 51 orders "that a poll be opened . . . in each Ward in this city, on . . . the 28th instant (q. v.) . . . to elect five Deputies [for nominees, see July 4] for the city and county of New-York, to meet in Congress, at Philadelphia."—4 Am. Arch., I: 318.

"An Extract of a Letter from London, by Way of Philadelphia, to a Gentleman in this City" is issued in a broadside. This states: "The unhappy Disputes which at present subsist between Great Britain and America, fill our Minds with melancholy Reflections, July 25 as the Ministry here have adopted very severe Measures with you, and are determined, at all Events, to carry their Point, and subdue all the Colonies . . . we are credibly informed here, that General Gage told Lord North, that he knew many Persons of Consequence in New York, who could easily be brought over to sell their Privileges for a Pension from the Crown . . .

"We are informed here, that it is the Purpose of Lord North, to offer one of your Printers, Five Hundred Pounds, as an Inducement to undertake and promote Ministerial Measures." In consequence of this letter, the friends of liberty are asked "vigilantly to observe who are those Persons spoken of in the foregoing Extract, and what Printer appears to promote Ministerial Measures, and endeavours to suppress Exertions in Favour of the Liberties of this Country."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"An honest American" issues a broadside addressed "To the respectable Public." It urges the immediate election of delegates to the congress and suggests two methods (subscription and polling) of choosing them by popular vote. In the writer's opinion, "The Resolves are not material; whether we approve of the one Set or the other, is of no Consequence;" but "a Reconciliation of Parties . . . is really essential, in order to procure a proper Delegation, and convince the Enemies of America we are not to be cajoled either by their fair Promises or Threats."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The Union Library Society (see April 11) removes to the city hall.—N. Y. Jour., July 28, 1774. The library was formerly "at the House of Captain John Berrien at Burling's Slip" (see Jan. 7, 1772).

26 The committee of mechanics (radicals) writes to the delegates nominated by the committee of 51: "As you are upon the nomination as Delegates to represent this city and county . . . at the proposed Congress, in order to avoid the inconveniences which may arise from contested elections, we are requested as a Committee from a number of citizens to ask you, whether on your part you will engage to use your utmost endeavours at the proposed Congress, that an agreement not to import goods from Great Britain until the American grievances be redressed, be entered into by the Colonies there to be represented. If you will so engage, the body by whom we are nominated will support you, if not, that body have a set of candidates who will comply with the proposed engagement." On July 27, Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Alsop, and John Jay sent this answer to the radical leaders: "Should we become your Delegates, we beg leave to assure you that we will use our utmost endeavours to carry every measure into execution at the proposed Congress that may then be thought conducive to the general interest of the Colonies; and, at present, are of opinion that a general non-importation agreement, faithfully observed, would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of our grievances." Satisfied with this reply, the radical party indorsed all the nominees of the conservatives (see July 4).—4 Am. Arch., I: 319. In consequence of this agreement, only one set of names was submitted to the people on July 28 (q. v.) for their approval.

A detachment of the Royal Artillery (see July 21) embarks on the "Brigantine Transport," which is carrying "a Quantity of Ordnance, Stores, &c." to Boston. On this and the following days several detachments of "his Majesty's 47th Regiment" arrive in New York from their quarters at Amboy, Brunswick, and Elizabeth-Town.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

27 "Ebenezer Snuffie" issues fifteen resolutions purporting to have been drawn up at a meeting of the "True Sons of Liberty." These ridicule the calling of a general congress, the non-importation agreements, and the proceedings of the committee of correspondence in general.—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Royal Regiment of Welch Fusiliers" embarks on board the three transports which arrived here on July 21 (q. v.). "The Harmony which, ever since their Arrival in New York, has subsisted betwixt the Citizens and this very respectable Corps of his Majesty's Troops, cannot be exceeded in the Chronicles of any other Garrison."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

28 Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, and James Duane are unanimously elected delegates to the congress at Philadelphia.—4 Am. Arch., I: 320. They had been nominated by the committee of 51 on July 4 (q. v.).

Visiting New York at this time while on a tour through the northern colonies, Patrick M'Robert writes: "On both sides of the harbour, the woods, country houses, orchards, and fields of Aug.

1774 Indian corn, form at this season of the year a beautiful prospect. There is very good water up to New York, the harbour is spacious and large, with many convenient docks or quays, with store-houses upon them for vessels of any burden to lie always afloat along side of them. Here are at present upward of 300 sail of shipping. They carry on an extensive trade from this port to Britain, Ireland, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, up the Mediterranean, the West Indies, Spanish Main, as well as to the other colonies. Their exports are chiefly wheat, flour, Indian corn, indigo, flaxseed, pot and pearl ashes, fish, oil, pork, iron, timber, lumber, wax, and live cattle to the West Indies. Their imports are from Britain all kinds of cloth, linen and woolen, wrought iron, shoes, stockings, &c. From Holland, they have European and East India goods; from France, Spain and Portugal, wines, spirits, fruits, silks, and other articles of luxury; from the Spanish Main, they have logwood, mahogany, some indigo and dollars; from the West Indies, they have sugar, rum and molasses. Another considerable article of their export is built vessels, a good many of which are now on the stocks at this port, which they generally load with their own produce, and carry to some market where they sell both ship and cargo. They have great choice of wood in their ship-yards. Their upper timbers they make all of cedar, which they prefer to oak. They are very nice in the workmanship of ship-building here, and use a great deal of ornament and painting about the vessels. . . .

. . . . The city is large, and contains a great many neat buildings. The publick buildings, and places of worship, are generally very neat, and well finished, if not elegant. The college, tho' only one third of the plan is compleat, makes a fine appearance, on one of the finest situations perhaps of any college in the world. Here are taught divinity, mathematics, the practice and theory of medicine, chymistry, surgery, and materia medica. One circumstance I think is a little unlucky, the entrance to this college is thro' one of the streets where the most noted prostitutes live. This is certainly a temptation to the youth that have occasion to pass so often that way.

"The new hospital (This building was burnt in February 1774, [error for Feb. 23, 1775, q. v.], when almost finished; however, the inhabitants set about repairing it again directly.) tho' not quite finished is another fine building upon the same plan as the Royal Infirmary at Edinburgh. . . .

. . . . They have three English churches, three Presbyterian, two Dutch Lutheran, two Dutch Calvinists, all neat and well finished buildings, besides a French church, an Anabaptist, a Methodist, a Quaker meeting, a Moravian church, and a Jews synagogue. There are many other fine buildings belonging to private gentlemen and merchants; but the streets are in general ill paved, irregular, and too narrow. There are four market places, all well supplied. . . .

"They are pretty well supplied with fresh water from pumps sunk at convenient distances in the streets. Their tea water they get at present brought in carts thro' the streets from the suburbs of the city; but they are now erecting a fire engine for raising the spring into a reservoir, from whence, by pipes, they can convey it to any part of the city. They are pretty well guarded against accidents from fire, by obliging every citizen to register their house, and for one shilling a vent yearly, to have them swept once a month. They have also a number of engines kept at convenient distances: to each of these is appointed a captain, and a certain number of men. And when a fire happens, a premium is always allowed to the captain and his men who can first make their engines play upon the fire. By this precaution fire seldom happens, and by the proper disposition of the engines, when it does happen, it is seldom allowed to spread farther than the house it breaks out in.

"Near the fort is an equestrian statue of king George the III. upon an elegant pedestal in the middle of a fine green rail'd in with iron. At the crossing of two public streets, stands at full length a marble statue of lord Chatham erected by the citizens in gratitude for his strenuous opposition to the stamp act in 1766. They have several large roperies, distilleries, breweries, and a large iron work carried on here. They have plenty of mechanics of all kinds, by whom almost every thing that is made with you in Britain is made to as great perfection here. The inhabitants are in general brisk and lively, kind to strangers, dress very gay; the fair sex are in general handsome, and said to be very obliging. Above 500 ladies of pleasure keep lodgings contiguous within the consecrated liberties of St. Paul's. This part of the city belongs to the church, and has

tence obtained the name of the Holy Ground. Here all the prostitutes reside, among whom are many fine well dressed women, and it is remarkable that they live in much greater cordiality one with another than any nests of that kind do in Britain or Ireland.

"It rather hurts an European eye to see so many negro slaves upon the streets, tho' they are said to deminish yearly here. The city is governed by a mayor, and divided into seven different wards, over each of which an alderman and an assistant presides. They have generally the same laws and regulations as is in England. There are computed between twenty-six and thirty thousand inhabitants in the city; in this number are, I believe, included the slaves, who make at least a fifth part of the number.

"There are many fine country seats upon this island, where nature has done so much, art has had very little share in making them very agreeable. The soil is generally light and sandy, and in some parts rocky; but mostly well cultivated, and produces fine crops of wheat, Indian corn, and barley; but oats do not thrive well here. They have their wheat and barley cut, and they are now (July 20) cutting some oats near the town. They are hoeing the Indian corn, the ears of the most forward of which are just appearing: I am told it will not be ripe till October, this grain is a very strong grower; some of the heads, I believe, you have seen. It grows upon a strong hollow jointed stalk, like a reed, which rises to the height of seven or eight feet, the blades are a deep green, and broad, resembling sedge leaves, and make at this season a very luxuriant appearance. They plant this grain in little hillocks, about five feet distant one way, and three feet the other, having first laid a little dung, they plant two or three grains in a hill, and afterwards keep them clean by horse and hand hoeing. The time of planting is about the first of May. They often sow some melon, cucumber, or squash seed along with the Indian corn, which soon grows to perfection in the open fields. They generally have from 120 to 200 fold increase of this grain; but then a small quantity, one fourth of a bushel, plants an acre. They grind this grain into meal for feeding their negroes with. It is also very good, either ground or whole, for hogs, horses, fating black cattle, or poultry.

"Their horses here are not very large, about fourteen hands high, of a sharp boned make, but very hardy. A good one will sell from L. 10, to 20 sterling. The cows are of a middle size, of the long horned kind, bare haird, not very neat, but good milkers. A good one will cost from L. 3, to 5 sterling. I have seen no polled cows here. Their sheep are a kind of half mugs, too long legged, though their wool and mutton are both pretty good. A sheep sells from 6, to 100 sterling. Their hogs are much of the same kind, that you have in Britain, but make exceeding sweet pork. Their poultry are very good, large and fat."

In another letter, dated Aug. 18, he says, in part:

"Labourers have their three and four shillings aday about New York; but at present they seem rather overstocked, owing to the arrival of so many adventurers from Britain and Ireland; they tell me that no less than twenty two vessels have arrived at New York with passengers within these twelve months. There is plenty of room and employ for them in the back countries, where many of them are gone.

"All necessaries of life are plenty, and reasonable; For example, beef at four and five pence the pound; good mutton the same; a good hen at a shilling, and pork and veal in proportion; butter sixteen pence the pound; the best flower, seventeen shillings the hundred weight; West India rum from three shillings and six pence, and three and nine pence the gallon. Rum distilled here, at two and six pence the gallon; beer, and all sorts of wines, about the same prices that you have them at; cyder, four pence the bottle. The only dear drink is London port, which is two shillings the bottle. Observe, that in all the above rates and prices, I speak of the currency of the country, which is in proportion as seven pence sterling to a shilling.

"The most current coins here in gold, are the Johanneses, half and quarter; the moindore, with some guineas; in silver, the Spanish dollar, the half, quarter, and eighth of a dollar, which last is their shilling. They have also some British shillings circulating. Their market of meat and butter must this season of the year be over early; for neither of them will keep long. They are very well supplied with fresh fish, such as cod, sturgeon, black fish and flounders, at two pence per pound; lobsters, and other shell fish in great plenty."—M Robert, A Tour thro' Part of the North Provinces of America, being A Series of Letters writte on the Spot, in the Years 1774 & 1775, preserved in Harvard Coll. Library.

A letter of this date to the "Committee of Correspondence in Boston," which is "Signed by Order and in Behalf of the Committee of Mechanics. Daniel Dunscomb Chairman," is as follows: "We received your Favour of the 18th Ultimo [June 18 (q. v.)], and take the Information which you give us, of the invidious Report that this Colony would not send Delegates to the Congress very kindly; and also think ourselves happy in your Determination not to credit such Reports, without better Proof than the Declaration of our mutual Eonemies, who are endeavouring to raise Jealousies, and sow Discord between the neighbouring Colonies.

"We have the Pleasure now to inform you, that the Committee of Correspondence, for this City, have nominated, sometime since, five Gentlemen, out of their Body, for the Purpose of meeting the Congress [see July 4]; these were held up to the City for their Approbation, two of whom were objected to by the Committee of Mechanics, and two others nominated in their Room [see July 5]. The Matter remain'd in Suspende for sometime; at length the twenty seventh of last Month was appointed to decide the Dispute by an Election: but, on the Morning of the same Day, a Conference being had with the Gentlemen nominated by the aforesaid Committee, and their political Principles being understood to be such as were friendly to the Liberties of America [See July 26], all Disputes immediately subsided; and the People assembled in the different Wards, to give their united Voices for the five Gentlemen first nominated, viz. Messrs. Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, James Duane, John Jay, and John Alsop Esquires, who were accordingly declared Delegates for this City and County, without any Manner of Opposition [see July 28].

"The Committee of Correspondence here, have taken the Poor of Your Town under Consideration, and nominated several Members of their Body, to make Report of Ways and Means for their Relief: and, as the Gentlemen of New York have never been wanting in the Principles of Humanity and Benevolence we doubt not, but such Contributions will be raised, from all Ranks and Orders of Men among us; as will, when join'd with the generous Donations of the neighbouring Colonies, greatly alleviate the Distresses of the Families of every worthy Mechanick, honest Tar, and industrious Labourer, among you, who are now, like Men, sacrificing their all to the common Cause of American Liberty.

"We are pleas'd to hear of the Firmness of the Mechanics and Husbandmen among you; but notwithstanding this, we are sorry to find that their Characters should in any Degree be rais'd by the Backwardness and Avarice of your Merchants. Happy for us, that it is not the Case in New York, we have indeed had Divisions and Disputes; but these have not arisen from a Supposition that our Liberties were not worth contending for, or that you should be left to fall Victims to the merciless Hand of arbitrary Power—no, by no Means; but rather who should take the Lead in such a worthy, honourable and laudable Enterprize. However, we now seem to be convinced of the honest Intentions of each others Hearts, our Divisions have subsided, and we are cemented, in one firm Body, and expect that the Province of New York will be second to none, in this noble, generous and manly Struggle for American Liberty."—From original in N. Y. Pub. Library.

A prospectus of the forthcoming publication of important state papers appears in the Journal: "When the conduct of individuals in a community is such, as to attract public attention, others are very naturally led to many inquiries about them; so when civil states rise into importance, even their earliest history becomes the object of speculation . . . many who have but little or no connection with the British colonies in America, are now prying into the story of their rise and progress, while others wish for a farther acquaintance with them . . . The means of obtaining this information, are not accessible by every person . . .

"To remove this obstruction . . . and at the same time to lay the foundation of a good American history by preserving from oblivion valuable materials for that purpose, it is propos'd to form a complete collection of what may be with propriety stiled, American State Papers. This collection will begin with the grant from Henry 7th to John Cabot, and his sons for making discoveries; and will include every important paper relating to America, of which either the original, or authentic copies can be procured, down to the present time.

"It is supposed that the whole may be comprised in five volumes octavo, and that the price of each volume, well bound and lettered, will not exceed one dollar and an half."

The New York agents designated to receive subscriptions or material which might be incorporated in the work are Messrs. Aug. 1 Noel and Hazard and John Holt.—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 1, 1774.

For the publication of the Hazard State Papers, see 1792.

In a letter to Dartmouth, Colden expresses his satisfaction in the nomination of "moderate Men" to attend the general congress at Philadelphia. He continues: "The Meeting of the Delegates, I am of opinion, cannot be prevented. If they pursue only such prudent measures as are calculated to remove the destructive Dissentions which subsist between Great Britain and her Colonies, the meetings, tho' illegal, it may be hoped, will produce some good . . .

"From a view of the numerous Resolves of the People in all the Colonies, which appear in every news Paper, your Lordship might be led to think a stupid fatal hardness intoxicated the whole. But there are every where many People who are seriously alarm'd at the critical Posture of the contention between Great Britain and her Colonies. They look forward with deepest anxiety, and would rejoice in any prudent Plan for restoring Harmony and Security.— Could it be thought consistent with the wisdom of Parliament to lay aside the right of raising money on the Subjects in America; and in lieu thereof, that the several American Assemblies, should grant and secure to the Crown, a sufficient and permanent supply to pay all the Officers and ordinary Expenses of Government; they are of Opinion this would be a ground work upon which a happy reconciliation might be effected."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 485-86.

William Cunningham arrives in New York in the ship "Needham," from Newry, England. With him are some "indentured [indentured] servants," which, according to his dying confession on Aug. 10, 1791, he "had kidnapped in Ireland." They were, however, "liberated in New York," he said, "on account of the bad usage they received from me during the passage."

He continued his confession with the following recital: "In that city, I used the profession of breaking horses, and teaching ladies and gentlemen to ride; but rendering myself obnoxious to the citizens in their infant struggles for freedom, I was obliged to fly on board an Asia man of war [the "Asia"], and from thence to Boston, where my known opposition to the measures pursued by the Americans, in support of their rights, was the first thing that recommended me to the notice of Gen. Gage, and when the war commenced, I was appointed Provost Marshall to the Royal Army, which placed me in a situation to wreak my vengeance on the Americans."—Genius of Liberty (Marristown, N. J.), Jan. 15, 1801. For his further confession, see March 6, 1775; Sept. 16, 1776.

"At a meeting of the governors of King's College, a report is received from a "Committee appointed to Prepare the Draft of a Royal Charter Constituting the Seminary an University." A copy of the minutes of this meeting, preserved in the library of the trustees (in the office of their clerk), shows that the governors ordained, among other things, that "King's College shall be the Mother of the American University."—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 36-37.

The common council agrees to purchase the northerly part of the ground belonging to Augustus and Frederick van Cortlandt at the rate of £600 per acre for the purpose of building a reservoir (see July 21), "provided that upon sinking a Well there, the Water shall be found of a good Quality, otherwise this Board to fill up the same at their own Expence."—M. C. C., VIII: 43. See Aug. 25.

"The managers of the bridewell lottery are directed to meet the board on August 13," at the House of Abraham De la Montaña's And to bring with them a true State of their Accounts respecting the said Lottery."—M. C. C., VIII: 43. Plans for the building were advertised for on Nov. 15 (q. v.). Montagne's tavern was at the present 253-254 Broadway.

The common council directs that the law for better regulating the public markets, which is approved at this meeting, be printed, and copies "stuck up at the Fly-Market, as a Notification to the Butchers, Country Folks and others."—M. C. C., VIII: 45. The law prohibits butchers from selling meat in the "Market at Countesses-Slip" because this market is "for the better accommodating of the Country People who come to this City with Provision for Sale, and those who bring Fish to Market only." It also provides that, as the practice of slaughtering and dressing sheep, lambs, and calves in the public markets "occasions Filth, and is offensive to the People in the Neighborhood," a fine of 10 shillings be imposed for every such offence committed after Aug. 15.—From an original broadside (dated Aug. 11, 1774) in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The sloop "Phœnix" arrives from South Carolina with "376 13 Barrels of Rice, to be sold in this Place, and the neat [sic] Proceeds 1774 thereof to be remitted to Boston; being a Present from the People of Aug. Carolina to the Sufferers in the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 15, 1774. This rice "was carted and 13 stored gratis by a Number of our Cartmen."—Ibid., Aug. 22, 1774.

 On Dec. 19, announcement was made that this contribution had yielded a net amount of £1,200, and that another cargo of rice had arrived for the same purpose.—Ibid., Dec. 19, 1774.

15 "This Day is published and sold by Hugh Gaine, (in a or 2 Vol-18 umes, neatly bound and lettered) The Laws of New York From the Year 1691 to the present."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 15, 1774.

18 The county seat of Jacob Walton at this time bore the name of "Belview," as appears by a news report of a drowning accident near there.—See Rivington's Gaz., Aug. 18, 1774. This should be distinguished from the "Bellevue" owned by Lindley Murray, which was acquired by the city in 1798 (q.v.), to be transformed into a hospital.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953. Strangely enough, this contemporary news item appears to be the only authority we now have for the name of Walton's estate, which was afterwards the Archibald Gracie tract (see 1794), at 86th St. and the East River, where the old Gracie house stands to-day in the modern Carl Schurz Park (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 969). Neither the deed to Walton (Land Deeds, XL: 558, 561) nor his will, dated Aug. 3, 1782 (Liber Wills, A12), and proved, April 28, 1791, in the supreme court, refers to the place as "Belview."

20 The Massachusetts delegates to the general congress stop in New York City on their way to Philadelphia. One of them, John Adams, describes, in his diary, their week's sojourn here. At ten o'clock on Aug. 20, they arrive "at Hull's a tavern, the sign the Bunch of Grapes" (see June 4, 1773). From thence they go "to private lodgings at Mr. Tobias Stoutenberg's in King Street, very near the City Hall one way, and the French Church the other," and after dinner start on a sightseeing trip. First they go to the fort, where they see the ruins of the governor's house (see Dec.
 29, 1773). "From the Parade, before the fort, you have a fine prospect of Hudson River, and of the East River, or the Sound, and of the harbor; of Long Island beyond the Sound River, and of New Jersey beyond Hudson's River. The walk round this fort is very pleasant, though the fortifications are not strong. Between the fort and the city is a beautiful ellipsis of land, railed in with solid iron, in the centre of which is a statue of his majesty on horseback, very large, of solid lead gilded with gold, standing on a pedestal of marble very high" (see Aug. 16, 1770). They walk along Broadway, see the old and the new church (the latter, "a very magnificent building cost twenty thousand pounds York Currency"), the prison, the new hospital, a ship yard, and several markets. On the 21st, they attended two services "at the old Presbyterian Society," and met the prominent men and women of the city. The next day, the delegates rode three miles out of town to breakfast at the home of Morin Scott, "a sensible man, but not very polite." Scott had "an elegant seat there, with Hudson's River just behind his house, and a rural prospect all around him." This seat, later known as "The Hermitage," is well shown on Pl. 44, Vol. I. It stood in modern West 43d St., between Eighth and Ninth Aves. Adams seems to have been impressed by the furnishings of the house. He says: "We sat in a fine airy entry till called into a front room to breakfast: A more elegant breakfast I never saw—rich plate, a very large silver coffee-pot, a very large silver tea-pot, napkins of the very finest materials, toast and bread and butter in great perfection."

During the following days, they dined and conferred with all the well-known men, and saw more of the city. They "went upon the new Dutch church steeple," visited Trinity Church and St.
 Paul's ("A new building, which cost eighteen thousand pounds, York money"), were shown through the college, and dined "in the Exchange Chamber, at the invitation of the Committee of Correspondence." On Aug. 26, the delegates went to see "the city hall, the chamber where the Supreme Court sits, and that where the Mayor and Recorder sit." Afterwards they inspected the North Dutch Church, which, in Adams's opinion, was "a much more elegant building than Saint Paul's." At nine o'clock, they "crossed Paulus Hook Ferry to New Jersey, then Hackensack Ferry, then Newark Ferry, and dined at Elizabethtown." After dinner they rode 20 miles, crossed the Brunswick ferry into the city of Brunswick, and lodged there for the night. Thence they travelled by carriage to Princeton and Trenton, by ferry across the Delaware River, and then by carriage and ferry to Bristol, Frankfort, and Philadelphia.—Works of John Adams, II: 345-57.

The water of the well sunk in the Van Cortlandts' land (see Aug. 8) having been tested and found "to be of a very good Quality," the common council decides to adhere to "their former Resolution of carrying the Proposal of Christopher Colles into Execution [see July 21] and also of Issuing Notes to the Value of £2500."
 The form of the notes and their denominations are next agreed upon, and they are ordered to be printed (see Sept. 23). Also, Christopher Colles is directed "to enlarge the said Well & prosecute the undertaking."—M. C. C., VIII: 47-48. See Aug. 29.

Peter Curtenius, a member of the committee appointed on July 19 (q.v.) to take into consideration ways and means of helping the poor in Boston, writes to William Cooper, town clerk of Boston, as follows: "Inclosed is a letter Directed to your Committee which please to let such members read as you can trust." The enclosure is as follows:

"By a paraprag in Rivingtons paper which you have Inclosed, it appears that you Intend to pave your streets with the money arising from the Cargo of Rice reced<sup>d</sup> from S. Carolina. If so it does not answer the Intention for which it was given, & if not publicly contradicted it will put an entire stop to the subscription here as well as elsewhere . . . It betoves you therefore publicly to disavow it & let your disavowal be well authenticated so that it may convince all gansayers, for you well know that your town has many Eonemies in this City who Improve on every report that is spread to your disadvantage—

"If your Streets are to be paved, & it is resolved on by your committee to pay the whole expence out of the charity or out of such as you may receive, I would advise you as a friend to your town to put a stop to it at all events, for the reasons mention'd [a]bove, & in order to set thiogs right I would beg leave to suggest a few hints to you which if put into execution I dare say would be of service & Encourage many to subscribe freely—As to paving streets, I suppose these matters are regulated in your town much in the same way they are here, which is that every man by law is obliged to pave the breadth of his house or Lott as far as the gutter or middle of the street, supposing this to be the case I would have you employ a number of men at the usual days, wages, & contract with every owner of a house at a Certain price the square yard, & it should be 1<sup>d</sup> or two 3<sup>d</sup> yard under the common price, & whatever the loss is let it come out of the charity, if you think this would be too great a sinking fund employ your ship Carpenters to build ships & sell them, & with that money go on Again, If your house carpenters & masons are out of Employ, & you have any public or private buildings going on contract for them 5 or 6 1/2<sup>d</sup> under price, & employ as many hands as you can to keep them in a good humour If your blacksmiths want work purchase Rod Iron, & set them at work to make nails, this is an article which will be much wanting if we should come into a nonimportation agreement, & will sell to a profit, If you have no nail rods you may be amply supplied at Philadelphia or here by our chairman M<sup>r</sup> Low, who is concerned to a slitting mill, & I think it would be no had policy to order a few hundred pounds worth of that article to be purchased of him out of the money raised for your town in this City. If many of your poor women are Idle it would be good to purchase flax & Wool & set them a Spinning, & either sell the yarn & thread or get it wove, & sell the Cloth, In short I would have you be undertakers for you will have a considerable stock in hand when all the subscriptions come in to go on with, which if well maogaged may keep your mechanics & poor some years employed before the Capital is sunk; as to a second subscription I would not have you make much dependance on, for I know by experience how these matters go the Iron must be struck whilst it is hot, therefore husband the money you may receive, & let it be put into the hands of men of property, & if possible let them be such that are known to be men of property in this & the other provinces & let their names appear in the publick prints which will be an inducement for people to subscribe freely,
 . . . I should be glad [if] you would write to our Committee & Inform them what method you propose to employ [for] your poor, which I think would be of service to your cause, provided it is in some such method as I have hinted above. I would not have you hint however, that you got any Information from me because I do not want my name brought in question—Rivingtons Tory paper is Information sufficient for you—

"I should be glad if you write to our committee on this head to have a Copy of the letter for fear it should be suppressed if it should come into the hands of some of our committee who are no friends to the good people of your town; Our Chairman & Deputy Chair-

Extract of a Letter
From Philadelphia,

To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst.

YESTERDAY evening Dr. FRANKLIN arrived here from London in six weeks, which he left the 20th of March; which has given great joy to this town, he says we have no favours to expect from the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no opposition will be made to their troops, those that are now coming are for New-York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New-York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin is highly pleased to find us arming and preparing for the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition, will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition; and lifted up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour. Every letter and every paper from hence, are read by them.

Printed by JOHN ANDERSON, at Beckman's Slip.

1774 man you know will be gone by that time to the Congress. It would be proper that the copy which comes to me should be sign'd by one of your members who is looked upon to be a moderate man & that it comes in the Character of a private letter, for I mean to shew it to facilitate the subscription, in which I can be useful as I am one of three Appointed by the Committee to receive the subscription money for the poor of your town."—From the original letters preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"Whereas it is an object of the highest importance, and greatly conducive to the health and comfort of the inhabitants of the city, that the streets and lanes thereof be frequently swept and cleaned. . . . And whereas the laws hitherto . . . have been found ineffectual for the want of a scavenger, whose particular business is to attend to the same and whereas, in pursuance of the charter . . . Robert M'Ginnis hath been . . . appointed the scavenger thereof, and hath made application . . . for certain laws . . . relating to the sweeping of said streets, and the execution of his office as scavenger," the following regulations are ordained: On definite days in each week in the different wards (season and weather permitting), the inhabitants shall by ten o'clock in the morning "rake and sweep together into heaps . . . before their respective dwelling houses or lots of ground" all the "dirt, filth, and soil." Neglect is punishable by a fine of three shillings. On the days above noted, the scavenger "shall take and carry away to some convenient place . . . all the dirt, dung, ashes, and filth of whatever sort, that shall be found lying in the streets . . . other than such dung or ashes as shall have been brought out of the houses, yards, or inclosures of any of the inhabitants, and which shall not have lain in the streets upwards of twenty four hours." The penalty for neglect shall be 40 shillings. Provided any such "dung or ashes shall be brought and left in the public streets" for 24 hours, the scavenger may dispose of it for his own use. If any rubbish, dirt, etc., unfit for manure, shall be left in the streets, the person whose such rubbish is shall pay the scavenger one shilling for each one horse cart load to be carried off by him. Robert M'Ginnis is granted exclusive right to such dirt, ashes, etc. "as shall under the restrictions aforesaid be found in any of the streets . . . No other person than the above shall take away any of the debris which the scavenger is authorized to have under penalty of three shillings for each one horse cart load."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 8, 1774.

"The common council appoints a committee to inquire what "Repairs are wanting to the Ferry House Barn &c; at St' George's Ferry."—M. C. C., VIII: 49. On Sept. 14, a warrant was issued to Andrew Gautier for £40 to be "applied towards Building a Barn &c; at St' George's Ferry."—Ibid., VIII: 51. On Oct. 10, £100 was ordered paid for repairing the ferry-house at this ferry.—Ibid., VIII: 59. These repairs probably are to be associated with the execution of the order of the board (Sept. 22) that the ferry-house be raised four feet.—Ibid., VIII: 54. Again, on Nov. 15, £200 was appropriated for the buildings at this ferry.—Ibid., VIII: 64.

"The common council appoints a committee of eight "to Superintend the Water Works now carrying on by Christopher Colles [see Aug. 25], to assist in making Contracts, purchasing Materials auditing Accounts &c."—M. C. C., VIII: 49. See Sept. 5.

"An advertisement reads: "William Birchall Tatley, From London, Begs leave to acquaint the public, that he has taken a commodious house the corner of Beaver-Street, and facing General Haldimand's, where he purposes painting portraits in oil, or in miniature for the bracelet, or so small as to be set in a ring."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 29, 1774.

30 An account rendered by Elisha Gallaudet to the corporation reads: "To Engraving Eight plates & Eight head pieces [pieces] for the Water Work notes and Blocking the Same. £7-0-0."—From original preserved in comptroller's office, box of vouchers, No. 1. Payment was ordered by the common council on Oct. 10.—M. C. C., VIII: 59.

Sept. 1 The New York delegates set out for the general congress at Philadelphia. Isaac Low, "being under the Necessity of going by Way of Powles-Hook" is escorted to the ferry stairs by "a considerable Number of respectable Inhabitants, with Colours flying, Music playing, and loud Huzzas at the End of each Street."

James Duane, Philip Livingston, and John Alsop are conducted, in like manner, from the Coffee House to the "Royal Exchange," where Duane, "in a very affectionate and moving Manner, thanked the worthy Inhabitants for the Honour they had conferred upon them, declaring for his own Part, and he had it in command from the whole of his Brother Delegates to acquaint them, that Nothing in their Power should be wanting to relieve this once happy, but now aggrieved Country." John Jay, the fifth delegate, had started on August 29, "without the Inhabitants being apprized of his Departure."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774; N. Y. Jour., Sept. 8, 1774.

"The governour's council meets "at Mr's De Lanceys near Whitehall in Town."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS), IV.

"The provincial council at New York orders that military aid be called against the Bennington mob, on complaint of Benjamin Hough and others.—Gal. Coun. Min., 502. See Sept. 29.

2 Gen. Gage, writing from Boston to the Earl of Dartmouth about conditions in New York, says: "By all accounts, every thing there is quiet; the people in general moderate and well affected to all measures but taxations."—Am. Arch., I: 768.

3 "A letter from London to New York states: "Your Committee disputes have been published in all the papers, over and over, and have been disadvantageous to your cause. Lord Chatham, and all your friends, are anxiously concerned at your critical situation; but your unanimity, and the spirit and propriety of your resolutions, rejoiced the heart of every friend to constitutional freedom, and has done the highest honour to America. Maintain your firmness and unanimity and depend upon Heaven for success; hope nothing from the people here—but if you persevere, we shall soon join you by thousands; more and more daily espouse your cause, and I believe it will shortly be as much ours as yours."—Am. Arch., I: 772.

4 "Major André arrives in Philadelphia on the "St. George."—Gen. Samuel Smith Papers (MS), in Columbia Univ. Library.

5 "The first continental congress meets at Philadelphia.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 13.

"At first, New York City was represented in the congress by only James Duane, John Jay, Philip Livingston, and Isaac Low; John Alsop did not appear until Sept. 14.—Ibid., I: 144, 51. To the proposal, on Sept. 6, that congress be opened with prayer, Jay objected because they were "so divided in religious sentiments," but this was overruled.—Works of John Adams, II: 368-69; Jour. Cont. Cong., (Ford ed.), I: 26.

John Jay and James Duane were on the committee appointed to prepare a declaration of rights and grievances. During the debates in the committee, Jay said, on Sept. 8: "It is necessary to recur to the law of nature, and the British constitution, to ascertain our rights. The constitution of Great Britain will not apply to some of the charter rights. A mother country surcharged with inhabitants, they have a right to emigrate. It may be said, if we leave our country, we cannot leave our allegiance. But there is no allegiance without protection, and emigrants have a right to erect what government they please. . . . I can't think the British constitution inseparably attached to the person of every subject. Whence did the constitution derive its authority? from compact; might not that authority be given up by compact?" Duane, on the contrary, was for "grounding our rights on the laws and constitution of the country from whence we sprang, and charters, without recurring to the law of nature; because this will be a feeble support. Charters are compacts between the Crown and the people, and I think on this foundation the charter governments stand firm."—Works of John Adams, II: 370, 371.

Galloway's "plan of a proposed union between Great Britain and the Colonies," presented on Sept. 28, was seconded by Duane and supported by Jay, but was finally defeated by the close vote of six colonies to five.—Ibid., II: 387-91; Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 69-70.

Isaac Low, in the committee to draw up the association, declared (probably on Oct. 6): "Gentlemen have been transported, by their zeal, into reflections upon an order of men, who deserve it the least of any men in the community. We ought not to deny the just rights of our mother country. We have too much reason, in this Congress, to suspect that independency is aimed at. I am for a resolution against any tea, Dutch as well as English. We ought to consider the consequences, possible as well as probable, of every resolution we take, and provide ourselves with a retreat or a resource." He raised the question whether the people will tolerate a 1774 total interruption of the West India trade. "Can they live without rum, sugar, and molasses? Will not this impatience and vexation defeat the measure. This would cut up the revenue by the roots, if wine, fruit, molasses, and sugar were discarded as well as tea. But a prohibition of all exports to the West Indies will annihilate the fishery because that cannot afford to lose the West India market, and this would throw a multitude of families in our fishing towns into the arms of famine."—Works of John Adams, II: 393-94.

On Oct. 8, the following resolution was adopted: "That this Congress approve of the opposition by the Inhabitants of the Massachusetts-bay to the execution of the late acts of Parliament; and if the same shall be attempted to be carried into execution by force, in such case, all America ought to support them in their opposition." Duane wished to have entered on the minutes his protest against this, but he was refused.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed.), I: 58; Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 72-73.

On Oct. 13, Adams remarked: "Mr. Duane has had his heart set upon asserting in our bill of rights the authority of Parliament to regulate the trade of the Colonies. He is for grounding it on compact, acquiescence, necessity, protection, not merely on our consent."—Works of John Adams, II: 397. On this point, Duane finally won.—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 69.

On Oct. 14, the congress decided upon the resolutions declaring the rights and grievances of the colonies.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed.), I: 63-73.

On Oct. 22, the members resolved that another congress be held at Philadelphia on May 10, 1775 (q.v.), "unless the redress of grievances . . . be obtained before that time."—Ibid., I: 102. The work of the congress was completed on Oct. 26, when it dissolved.—Ibid., I: 114.

This congress drew up: 1. an Association prohibiting importation from Great Britain after Dec. 1, 1774, and exportation to that country after Sept. 15, 1775 (ibid., I: 75-81); 2. an address, drafted by John Jay, to the people of Great Britain (ibid., I: 82-90); 3. a memorial to the inhabitants of the British colonies (ibid., I: 90-101); 4. an address to the king (ibid., I: 115-21); and 5. an address to the inhabitants of Quebec (ibid., I: 105-13).

An advertisement informs the public that "A Merchant Broker's Office, is open'd by William Tongue, At the corner house of Mr. Richard Waldron, near the Exchange, New-York; where all kinds of business will be transacted on commissions, either in buying, selling, or bartering West-India, American, or European goods; also slaves, vessels, or any merchandize, sold in a brokerage way, in the manner practised in London."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774.

An advertisement reads: "New-York Water Works. Notice is hereby given, that a large quantity of pitch pine logs will be wanting for the New-York water works: Such persons as are willing to engage to furnish the same, are desired to send their proposals, in writing, before the 20th of October aed, to Christopher Colles, contractor."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774. The logs were secured from Stillwater, in Albany County (see Nov. 8).

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to Colden: "The King has seen with concern that His Subjects in the different Colonies in North America have been induced upon the ground stated in their different Resolutions to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia.

"If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any Grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such Representations would certainly have come from each Colony with greater Weight in it's separate Capacity, than in a channel, of the Propriety and Legality of which there may be much doubt."

Dartmouth also informs Colden that large quantities of gunpowder are being shipped from Holland to New York, and instructs him to find a means "of putting a stop to so dangerous a Correspondence."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 487. On Oct. 19, the king issued an order in council stopping the exportation of gunpowder from Great Britain, and its importation into the colonies, except by license of the king or privy council.—Ibid., VIII: 509. On Nov. 2, nevertheless, Colden reported that "Americans" are "purchasing large Quantities of Arms & Ammunition in the different parts of Europe."—Ibid., VIII: 510.

Smith says: "The Affairs of this Country grow very serious—Nothing so fully discovered the Spirit of the lower Classes as their Countenances and Speeches, upon a false Alarm which arrived yesterday, of Gen<sup>l</sup> Gages firing upon Boston. Perceiving that we are in the most imminent Danger of a Civil War I wrote this Day & yesterday to Gov<sup>r</sup> Boon, M<sup>r</sup> Sargent & Col<sup>o</sup> Fanning to the Intent that they may know the Truth on the other side of the Water . . . It is astonishing to observe to what a Pass the Populace are arrived Instead of that Respect they formerly had for the King, you now hear the very lowest Orders call him a Knave or a Fool, & reproaching him for the Diversity of his & his Grandfather's Conduct."—

Win. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. In a letter to Dartmouth, of the same date, Colden expresses quite a different view, declaring that the populace is now directed by men who have much at stake, not by demagogues opposed to the government. Men now speak and publish sentiments in favour of the government and argue upon the political subjects of the times. There are "no more burning of Effigies, or putting cut-throat papers upon Peoples Doors." The delegates to "the general Congress" went to Philadelphia last week (see Sept. 1). "Seven Counties of this Province, neither appointed Delegates for themselves nor concour'd in the choice made by the City; and two Counties sent Delegates of their own. . . . the City Delegates were embarrassed by this Dissention of the People."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 488.

In a letter to his nephew, Capt. Maturin, who is secretary to Gen. Gage, Smith declares that "the first Act of Indiscersion on the Part of the Army or the People marked with Blood, would light up a Civil War."—Win. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"A Card.—The thanks of the public are presented to those worthy citizens, who have, to their immortal honour, nobly refused to let their Vessels for the base purpose of transporting troops, ammunition, &c to oppress the brave defenders of American liberty, who are already suffering in the common cause.—Such patriotic conduct merits applause, as much as a contrary one would the contempt and indignation of every generous mind."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 15, 1774; 4 Am. Arch., I: 782. One of the original handbills is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Sept. 14.

John Thurman writes a long letter to "Sargent Chambers & Co.," probably of London: "Tho I hate Politicks from their Late very disagreeable Circumstances it may not be amiss or very disagreeable to you to Present to hear the opinion of a True friend to the Liberties of America, & a sincere Lover of Great Britain—I am Grieved to think she is Weary of her Greatness, & that Prosperity should set so heavy upon her, is there no enemy to found on which she may waste her Blood and Ill got Treasure or has Conquest & Success only Laid a Foundation for Cruelty & Oppression, or has the operations in the Estate given such a Relish to Murder Oppression & Robbery that finding no more Plunder there she should Turn her Voracious desires on Plundering America, her Best Friend . . . every American was Born free we Boast every Liberty our Most Excellent Constitution affords we are loag used to its Benign Influence & would part with Life Sooner than Live under the Fetters of discontent & Slavery, You have often told me America would Become independant of Great Britain, the Sound of which was very disagreeable to me nor could I conceive it Possible or which way it would be brought about it is said Oppression will make a wise man mad I am sure Loss of Liberty & the Horrible expectation of Cruel, and Barbarous oppression is enough to make every American mad what have we done to forfeit our Birth Right or how come our Liberties dependant on the parliament of Great Britain . . . Americans dare dye but dare not tamely give up their Liberties—we dread the Consequences of a Civil Warr & Fighting with our best friends, this seems at hand. Freeman are not to be governed by Power & force, we have no Idea of it & God only knows where it will end. Most People seem prepared for the worst of Consequences . . . It is yet in your power to call back our Love to save your Honour to make us Happy yourselves Prosperous, but should you drive America into a Rebellion you will in my Opinion find it Easier to Conquer France than to subdue them.

"There is not a Man born in America that does not Understand the Use of Fire arms & that well, as we have much Sport Every Man is provided, it is Almost the First thing they Purchase & take to all the New Settlements & in the Cities you can scarcely find a Lad of 12 years old that does not go a Gunning

"We were Shocked with an Larrem that General Gage had Robbed the Magazie of the Powder & that in Attempting to take it Back were fired upon & 6 men killed he did take the Province powder but no further harm was done [see Sept. 7.] It is said above Fifty Thousand Men were in Motion for the Relief of

On Oct. 14, the congress decided upon the resolutions declaring the rights and grievances of the colonies.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed.), I: 63-73.

On Oct. 22, the members resolved that another congress be held at Philadelphia on May 10, 1775 (q.v.), "unless the redress of grievances . . . be obtained before that time."—Ibid., I: 102. The work of the congress was completed on Oct. 26, when it dissolved.—Ibid., I: 114.

This congress drew up: 1. an Association prohibiting importation from Great Britain after Dec. 1, 1774, and exportation to that country after Sept. 15, 1775 (ibid., I: 75-81); 2. an address, drafted by John Jay, to the people of Great Britain (ibid., I: 82-90); 3. a memorial to the inhabitants of the British colonies (ibid., I: 90-101); 4. an address to the king (ibid., I: 115-21); and 5. an address to the inhabitants of Quebec (ibid., I: 105-13).

An advertisement informs the public that "A Merchant Broker's Office, is open'd by William Tongue, At the corner house of Mr. Richard Waldron, near the Exchange, New-York; where all kinds of business will be transacted on commissions, either in buying, selling, or bartering West-India, American, or European goods; also slaves, vessels, or any merchandize, sold in a brokerage way, in the manner practised in London."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774.

An advertisement reads: "New-York Water Works. Notice is hereby given, that a large quantity of pitch pine logs will be wanting for the New-York water works: Such persons as are willing to engage to furnish the same, are desired to send their proposals, in writing, before the 20th of October aed, to Christopher Colles, contractor."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774. The logs were secured from Stillwater, in Albany County (see Nov. 8).

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to Colden: "The King has seen with concern that His Subjects in the different Colonies in North America have been induced upon the ground stated in their different Resolutions to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia.

"If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any Grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such Representations would certainly have come from each Colony with greater Weight in it's separate Capacity, than in a channel, of the Propriety and Legality of which there may be much doubt."

Dartmouth also informs Colden that large quantities of gunpowder are being shipped from Holland to New York, and instructs him to find a means "of putting a stop to so dangerous a Correspondence."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 487. On Oct. 19, the king issued an order in council stopping the exportation of gunpowder from Great Britain, and its importation into the colonies, except by license of the king or privy council.—Ibid., VIII: 509. On Nov. 2, nevertheless, Colden reported that "Americans" are "purchasing large Quantities of Arms & Ammunition in the different parts of Europe."—Ibid., VIII: 510.

Smith says: "The Affairs of this Country grow very serious—Nothing so fully discovered the Spirit of the lower Classes as their Countenances and Speeches, upon a false Alarm which arrived yesterday, of Gen<sup>l</sup> Gages firing upon Boston. Perceiving that we are in the most imminent Danger of a Civil War I wrote this Day & yesterday to Gov<sup>r</sup> Boon, M<sup>r</sup> Sargent & Col<sup>o</sup> Fanning to the Intent that they may know the Truth on the other side of the Water . . . It is astonishing to observe to what a Pass the Populace are arrived Instead of that Respect they formerly had for the King, you now hear the very lowest Orders call him a Knave or a Fool, & reproaching him for the Diversity of his & his Grandfather's Conduct."—

Win. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. In a letter to Dartmouth, of the same date, Colden expresses quite a different view, declaring that the populace is now directed by men who have much at stake, not by demagogues opposed to the government. Men now speak and publish sentiments in favour of the government and argue upon the political subjects of the times. There are "no more burning of Effigies, or putting cut-throat papers upon Peoples Doors." The delegates to "the general Congress" went to Philadelphia last week (see Sept. 1). "Seven Counties of this Province, neither appointed Delegates for themselves nor concour'd in the choice made by the City; and two Counties sent Delegates of their own. . . . the City Delegates were embarrassed by this Dissention of the People."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 488.

In a letter to his nephew, Capt. Maturin, who is secretary to Gen. Gage, Smith declares that "the first Act of Indiscersion on the Part of the Army or the People marked with Blood, would light up a Civil War."—Win. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"A Card.—The thanks of the public are presented to those worthy citizens, who have, to their immortal honour, nobly refused to let their Vessels for the base purpose of transporting troops, ammunition, &c to oppress the brave defenders of American liberty, who are already suffering in the common cause.—Such patriotic conduct merits applause, as much as a contrary one would the contempt and indignation of every generous mind."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 15, 1774; 4 Am. Arch., I: 782. One of the original handbills is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Sept. 14.

John Thurman writes a long letter to "Sargent Chambers & Co.," probably of London: "Tho I hate Politicks from their Late very disagreeable Circumstances it may not be amiss or very disagreeable to you to Present to hear the opinion of a True friend to the Liberties of America, & a sincere Lover of Great Britain—I am Grieved to think she is Weary of her Greatness, & that Prosperity should set so heavy upon her, is there no enemy to found on which she may waste her Blood and Ill got Treasure or has Conquest & Success only Laid a Foundation for Cruelty & Oppression, or has the operations in the Estate given such a Relish to Murder Oppression & Robbery that finding no more Plunder there she should Turn her Voracious desires on Plundering America, her Best Friend . . . every American was Born free we Boast every Liberty our Most Excellent Constitution affords we are loag used to its Benign Influence & would part with Life Sooner than Live under the Fetters of discontent & Slavery, You have often told me America would Become independant of Great Britain, the Sound of which was very disagreeable to me nor could I conceive it Possible or which way it would be brought about it is said Oppression will make a wise man mad I am sure Loss of Liberty & the Horrible expectation of Cruel, and Barbarous oppression is enough to make every American mad what have we done to forfeit our Birth Right or how come our Liberties dependant on the parliament of Great Britain . . . Americans dare dye but dare not tamely give up their Liberties—we dread the Consequences of a Civil Warr & Fighting with our best friends, this seems at hand. Freeman are not to be governed by Power & force, we have no Idea of it & God only knows where it will end. Most People seem prepared for the worst of Consequences . . . It is yet in your power to call back our Love to save your Honour to make us Happy yourselves Prosperous, but should you drive America into a Rebellion you will in my Opinion find it Easier to Conquer France than to subdue them.

"There is not a Man born in America that does not Understand the Use of Fire arms & that well, as we have much Sport Every Man is provided, it is Almost the First thing they Purchase & take to all the New Settlements & in the Cities you can scarcely find a Lad of 12 years old that does not go a Gunning

"We were Shocked with an Larrem that General Gage had Robbed the Magazie of the Powder & that in Attempting to take it Back were fired upon & 6 men killed he did take the Province powder but no further harm was done [see Sept. 7.] It is said above Fifty Thousand Men were in Motion for the Relief of

- 1774 Boston . . . Should the General Voice of America be followed Sept. you would have no Trade in these Quarters—there would be a 14 Non Export as well as a Non Importation Agreement & whatever shall be advised by the Congress I verily believe will be as effectually Observed as ever an Act of Parliament.
- "He that first Began to Exert the power of Parliament over America so as to bring her Right in Question has proved already the Greatest Curse of the Nation that Has Happened since the Revolution."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 289-90.
- "The following handbill is distributed about the city:
"To the Publick.—As the merchants of this city have nobly refused letting their vessels to the tools of Government for the base purpose of transporting troops and military stores to Boston; for enforcing the cruel and arbitrary edicts of a corrupt ministry, on that virtuous people, now suffering in the glorious cause of America's freedom; it is therefore hoped that no pilot will be found so lost to all Sense of duty to his country, as to assist in that detestable work. Mr. Francis Post inadvertently engaged to make some chests for the transportation of arms; and Mr. Jonathan Hampton, in like manner, undertook to contract with house carpenters, for the purpose (as is supposed) of building barracks at Boston; but when their fellow-citizens represented to them the tendency of their conduct, they immediately declined the abominable Service. After these laudable examples of the merchants and tradesmen of this city, there is no doubt but their patriotic conduct will be followed by all their fellow-citizens. But, notwithstanding, should any sordid miscreant be found amongst us, who will aid the enemies of this country to subvert her liberties, he must not be surprised if that vengeance overtakes him, which is the reward justly due to parricides. [Signed] The Free Citizens."—N. Y.

- 29 A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of New York," and signed "Humaous," offers the following arguments against withholding provisions and clothing from the troops at Boston:
1. It is a matter that should be decided by the continental congress.
2. "To attempt to starve and perish the Soldiery, will make every Man of them our Enemy, at a Time we should use every Means to conciliate their Friendship." 3. These measures may lead the soldiers "to sally out against the Inhabitants and seize the Supports of Nature." The resulting riots would injure the American cause in the eyes of English supporters.
4. "Starving an Eoemy is an Act that would be proper in Time of Open and avowed War," but it is not proper while the colouists are trying to secure redress of grievances "in a calm and rational Manner."
5. The plan will not succeed, for "Supplies will be found sufficient to prevent the Soldiers from starving or perishing."—From

- Colden informs Dartmouth that a committee of the more violent citizens went to the merchants and endeavoured to deter them from sending articles to the army at Boston. This caused a us lies, to preserve the peace of the city, we think it necessary, in order to remove the cause of any future murmurings, to make the following declaration: That we will not, from the apprehension of a non-importation agreement, put any unreasonable advance upon our goods; and when such an agreement shall have taken place, we will continue to sell them for a moderate profit, and no

- 13 Gen. Haldimand, a company of the Royal Artillery, "with a large Quantity of Ordnance Stores for Castle-William," three companies of the "Royal Regiment of Ireland," and the 47th Regiment embark on transports for Boston. - 20 The "Association" passed on this day by the continental congress (see Sept. 5) contains the following paragraph: "We will, in our several stations, encourage frugality, economy, and industry, and promote agriculture, arts and the manufactures of this country, especially that of wool; and will discountenance and discourage every species of extravagance and dissipation, especially all horse-racing, and all kinds of gaming, cock-fighting, exhibitions of shews, plays, and other expensive diversions and entertainments. . . ."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 78. This probably accounts for the fact that the John Street Theatre remained closed during 1775 and 1776. It was reopened by British officers in 1777 (see Jan. 6, 1777).
- 22 John Jay, John Watts, Jr., and Henry Livingston have been elected for the season the managers of the "New-York Dancing Assembly," at Hull's Tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 24, 1774.
- 25 At a meeting of the governors of the hospital, Drs. Peter Middleton, John Jones, and Samuel Bard (see March 9, 1770) are appointed physicians to "that truly charitable and benevolent foundation." The house is now "under cover" and preparations are being made "for the speedy reception of patients, which it is hoped will excite a generous and liberal disposition in the public, to render it extensively useful by their beneficent contributions."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 27, 1774. Before the hospital was ready for occupancy, it was consumed by fire (see Feb. 28, 1775).

- 26 The continental congress, which convened at Philadelphia on Sept. 5 (q.v.), disbands. Isaac Low, John Alsop, John Jay, James Duane, William Floyd, Henry Winser, and S. Boorum are the representatives from the colony of New York who sign the articles of association there adopted, which articles provide for a non-importation, non-consumption, and non-exportation agreement among the colonies.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 31, 1774.
- 29 Part of the New York and Connecticut delegates to the continental congress arrive from Philadelphia. The remainder came the following day.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 31, 1774.
- John Thurman writes to Amos Heyton, probably of London: "You will find we are in a Terrible Situation the Bostonians are Ready to draw the sword as is Connecticut they are a Numerous Brave People & will as Surely fight if Hostilities are begun as we Live you know these People all understand fire arms & are daily under arms, the Spirit is gone forth I hope it may be Recaled in Peace if once a Blow is Struck which may be done by some Impudent hand God only knows where it will end."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 290.
- Nov. About 100 men of the Royal Irish Regiment have been left with Colden by Gen. Haldimand; and "About four score Artificers went from hence with the General, to work on the Barracks there [see Oct. 13]; and last week some Iron Potts and Stores were ship'd for the use of the Troops at Boston, without any attempt being made to prevent it."
- Regarding contraband trade, Colden says: "The Vessels from Holland, or S<sup>t</sup> Eustatia, do not come into this Port, but anchor at some Distance in the numerous Bays and Creeks that our Coasts and Rivers furnish, from whence the Counterband Goods are sent up in small Boats. I believe it would be very proper to make some Regulations that might discourage the owners of these small Boats from engaging in this Business. When they are now seized, their Boats are sold at so low a price that the Owners recover them with a Less that the poorest of them does not regard. The risk being so small, they engage with the illicit Traders in low Wages. This increases the Profits of that Trade."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 511, 544.
- 3 The "Maria Wilhelmina," one of the largest and "best built ships ever produced in America," is launched at the New York ship-yard of Thomas Cheeseman. "It is computed that there were upwards of 12,000 people at this launch, who testified their happiness by the loudest acclamations, on seeing so large a vessel floating in our river."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 10, 1774. I am more afraid of New-York—there has been a strange delinquency and backwardness during the whole Summer. If you have any correspondence there I wish you would endeavour to animate them. While they are attending to the little paltry disputes which their own parties have produced, the great cause is suffering in their hands."—4 Am. Arch., I: 964.
- 7 Because the exportation of sheep is contrary to a resolution of the continental congress, several citizens wait upon the captain of a sloop in the harbour and request the return of the 18 sheep on board, which are destined for the West Indies. In the evening, the unfulfilled promise of the captain to do this, together with a rumour that the ship is to sail that night, causes quite an excitement. Two hundred people assemble on the wharf and appoint a committee to consult with the committee of correspondence. The latter advises that the merchant to whom the vessel came consigned be sent for and desired to cause the landing of the sheep. These are then to be delivered to one of the committee for safe keeping until the boat shall sail. Upon the enactment of these conditions, the people peaceably disperse.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.
- Isaac Low issues a call to the "freeholders and freemen" of this city "to assemble together at the usual places of election, in their several wards, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on Friday, the 18th day of this instant November, then and there to elect, and appoint eight fit persons in each respective ward to be a Committee of Inspection."—*N.  Isaac Man Jr. of Stillwater in Albany County "for 60,000 feet of pitch pine Timber, for the making of Pipes of the Water Works" (see July 21), the articles of agreement are signed by the mayor and sealed. The contract provides that the logs shall be from 14 to 20 ft. long, that one-fourth of them shall be 12 in. in diameter at the small end, "exclusive of the sap thereof," that three-fourths shall be 9 in. in diameter at the small end, and that all shall be "straight and free from shakes and large knots." One third of the timber is to be delivered on July 1, 1775, the next third on Aug.
 1, and the last on Oct. 1.—From the original in the city clerk's record-room; M. C. C., VIII: 62-63. Pine logs had been advertised for in New York on Sept. 5 (q. v.).
- 14 Isaac Low issues the following notice from the committee chamber: "Whereas it is intended very soon to transmit the donations that have been collected in this colony, for the support of the poor of Boston, to that city; the committee of correspondence request the favour of the benefactors and collectors of that laudable charity, as soon as possible, to pay the several contributions into the hands of Messrs. Gerard Wm. Beekman,

- 15 John Young advertises a school which will be a benefit to children whose parents are unable to furnish wood. It is conducted in the house where Mrs. Crofts taught school, in Broadway nearly opposite Verlettenburgh Hill. He plans in January to open a night school in which the charge for each study is to be a specified amount "without candles."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.
- From the committee chamber is issued the following notice, which is signed by Isaac Low: "Whereas it is apprehended, that inconveniencies may arise from the mode lately recommended by this committee, for electing a new committee to superintend the execution of the association entered into by the Continental Congress; and this committee of correspondence having taken the same into further consideration, and consulted many of their fellow citizens, and also conferred with the committee of mechanics, and having agreed to dissolve their body as soon as such new committee shall be appointed; public notice is therefore hereby given, that it is now thought fit, that instead of the mode prescribed by the former advertisement [see Nov. 7], sixty persons, to continue in office until the first day of July next, shall be chosen by the freholders and freemen of the said city, to be a committee for the purposes mentioned in the said association, and that the said election shall be held at the City-Hall, on Tuesday next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, under the inspection of the Vestry-men of this city, who shall be requested by the inhabitants to attend for that purpose."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 21, 1774. See

- The clerk of the common council is ordered to "advertise in the public Gazettes, that this Corporation are determined to carry into Execution the Building of a Bridewell, and being desirous of Adopting a plan of Such building, will therefore be obliged to any person or persons that will favor them with a plan of the Same by the tenth day of January next, for their Consideration."

- A broadside, addressed "To the Public" and signed "Citizens 16 of New-York," announces:
- "We have had frequent intimations from England, both by private letters and news papers, that there would be attempts made to bribe the printers of the public papers in America. . . .
 Whether or not Mr. Rivington is really a pensioner from the ministry, or has been influenced by hopes of their future favours, every one is at liberty to judge from the conduct of his press. . . .
 "It is the opinion of a great number here, of the friends to the rights and liberties of British America, that the general scope and tendency of the news papers published by Mr. Rivington, have been to promote the designs of the British ministry—to countenance and support their unconstitutional claims and arbitrary measures, to subject the British colonies to tyrannical power, reduce them to slavery, and finally to destroy the English constitution."
 "From this opinion of the aforesaid paper, and not from enmity to Mr. Rivington on any other account, we have thought proper to publish the following letters, in some measure to prevent the mischievous design of his papers, by shewing that the friends to liberty, tho' in distant parts and unconnected, agree in sentiments, and have the same opinion of it as ourselves." The letters are from a number of citizens in Baltimore to Rivington announcing the withdrawal of their subscriptions to his paper because of his "most notorious partiality" to Great Britain's side of the struggle.—

- Rev. John Ogilvie, assistant minister of Trinity Church, dies. 26
 He was buried in Trinity churchyard the next afternoon.—N. Y.
Merc., Nov. 28, 1774. His obituary is found in the Mercury of Dec. 5. By his will he left £300 to the charity school in this city, £100 to King's College, and £100 to "the corporation for the relief of the widows and children of clergymen in communion with the church of England in America."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 29, 1774.
 For Dr. Ogilvie's successor, see Dec. 1.
- The committee of inspection (see Nov. 22) meets. While the 28 business of the meeting is not made public, it is said that they "enter'd into some proper Rules and Measures for the effectual Discharge of the important Duties of their Appointment, in order to a strict Compliance with the Resolutions and Recommendations of the General Congress."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 5, 1774.
- William Bateman, a Stone Seal Engraver, Lapidary and Jeweller, 29 from London, at the House of Mr. Hopkins, Pilot, in Fair-street, Goldenhill, New-York," informs the public that he "Engraves on stone, steel, silver and copper plate, coats of arms, crests, ciphers, figures, heads and fancies in the neatest manner, and on the most reasonable terms."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 28, 1774. Stauffer, in Am.

 per-plate signed by Bateman.
- "The King's Speech on the Opening the Session" begins thus: 30
 "It gives me much concern that I am obliged, at the opening of this parliament, to inform you that a most daring spirit of resistance and disobedience to the law still unhappily prevails in the province of Massachusetts's Bay, and has in divers parts of it broke forth in fresh violences of a very criminal nature. These pro-

1774 proceedings have been countenanced and encouraged in other of my colonies, and unwarrantable attempts have been made to obstruct the commerce of this kingdom by unlawful combinations. I have taken such measures, and given such orders, as I judged most proper and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late parliament, for the protection and security of the commerce of my subjects, and for the restoration and preserving peace, order, and good government, in the province of the Massachusetts's Bay. And you may depend upon my firm and steadfast resolution to withstand every attempt to weaken or impair the supreme authority of this legislature over all the dominions of my crown, the maintenance of which I consider as essential to the dignity, the safety and the welfare of the British empire, assuring myself that, while I act upon these principles, I shall never fail to receive your assistance and support."

He concludes with this sentence. "They [the people] may be assured that, on my part, I have nothing so much at heart as the real prosperity and lasting happiness of all my subjects."—Parl. Hist. of Eng. XVIII: 33-34. See Feb. 9, 1775.

Dec. 1. The "Rector, Church Wardens and Vestry" of Trinity Church unanimously elect the Rev. Mr. Vardill to be an assistant minister and lecturer in the Episcopal churches of this city. He succeeds the Rev. John Ogilvie, deceased (see Nov. 26).

The following news item notes his appointment as professor of divinity: "Letters from the last Packet bring Information, that his Majesty has been graciously pleased to Found a Professorship of Divinity in the College of this City, with a Salary from Home; and to appoint the Rev. John Vardill, A. M. at this Time in England, to be his first Royal Professor; the prime Instance, we apprehend, of the like Royal in America."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Dec. 8; and *N. Y. An advertisement announces the intended sale at auction of "The very valuable Brewery and Buildings, Situate in the West Ward of the City of New-York, near the Place formerly called Vauxhall, which lately belonged to George Harrison, Richard Nicholls, and James Leadbetter." The buildings consist of:

"I. A Large, well-built Brick Brew-House, allowed by all competent Judges, to be the most commodious and complete of any in America . . .

"II. A large Brick Malt-house, with two Cisterns . . .

"III. An excellent Horse-Mill, with a sizeable Pair of Iron Rollers . . .

"IV. A very large and capacious Brick Vault, which adjoins to, and has a Communication with, the Brew-house Cellar.

"V. A large Storehouse, erected over the vault . . .

"VI. A large, pleasant and convenient Dwelling-house, two Stories high . . .

"VII. A large Dutch Bars, a good Horse Stable, a Cooper's Shop, and two small Dwelling-Houses for the accommodation of Servants.

"The Brewery . . . lies adjoining to Hudson's River, and large Boats can unload the Barley and Wood requisite for its Use, within a very small Distance of the works: There is a large Garden inclosed with a Pale Fence, and many young Fruit Trees, of the best kinds on the Premises. 7 Lieut.-Gov. Colden, writing to Dartmouth, states: "The first thing done here, in consequence of the resolutions of the Congress, was the dissolution of the Committee of 51 in order to choose a new Committee to carry the measures of the Congress into effect [see Nov. 22]. A day was appointed by advertisement for choosing sixty persons to form this new Committee . . . No Tea is to be imported from any part of the world after the first day of this month. . . . It is a dreadful situation. If we are not rescued from it, by the wisdom and firmness of Parliament, the Colonies must soon fall into distraction and every Calamity annexed to a total annihilation of Government."—*N. Y. Col. 22 "Mr. Johnson, an Indian of the Mohegan Tribe, is to preach this Evening in the Old Presbyterian Church, in this City, when a Collection is to be raised for him, to defray a considerable Expence he has been at, in preparing the Way for the Removal of his Tribe, and the Remains of six other Tribes in that Vicinity, who are Chiefly Christians, unto the Oneida Country. An Event that promises the most salutary Effects to this Province."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 22, 1774.

27 A number of people styling themselves "the Mohawks and River Indians" write to Andrew Elliot, collector of the port (see Dec. 15): "A Number of fire-arms of British manufacture, legally imported, having been lately seized by your orders and conveyed on board the man of war, by which arbitrary step you have declared yourself an inveterate enemy to the liberties of North-America; in this light we view you, and from you we shall demand these arms when ever they are wanted, which [it] is probable will be soon. You will therefore, if you have the least regard to the safety of yourself or your servants, who seized them, be careful to prevent their being sent away, as you may depend upon answering for a contrary conduct with a vengeance . . ." A copy of this letter is immediately posted up at the Coffee House, together with the collector's answer: "Mr. Elliot calls upon the person to appear, that can in any instance accuse him of having acted either arbitrarily or illegally in his office, that he may have an opportunity of answering him properly.

"If the letter is wrote with a view to deter an officer from his duty, Mr. Elliot assures the writer, that as long as he has the honour to act as Collector . . . he will exert the same attention and firmness, that he has for ten years past, enabled him to give satisfaction to his superiors in office; and to live happily among the inhabitants of this city."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775.

28 A handbill appears addressed "To the Inhabitants of New York," and signed by "Plain English," which states, in part: "your country has been basely robbed (by the officers of the customs) of a considerable number of arms, which were legally exported from Great-Britain, and imported here, in the ship Lady Gage, and therefore not liable to a seizure, upon any pretence whatsoever, as they are actually the manufacture of England.—Those arms (I am credibly informed) are now on board the man of war, and are in a few days to be sent to General Gage, and of consequence are to be used for your destruction; . . . In the name of Heaven, throw off your supineness; assemble together immediately, and go in a body to the Collector, insist upon the arms being relanded, and he must see them forth-coming, or abide the consequences; delays are dangerous; there is no time to be lost." In spite of this, most of the prominent people of the city were in sympathy with the collector's action, and declared themselves ready to support him.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775. — Prof. Johnston estimates that the population of New York City and County, given as 21,863 in the last official census, of 1771 (p. v.), "must have risen to full 25,000. Philadelphia's population was somewhat larger; Boston's less."—Johnston, The Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 36, footnote.

— The first of Hugh Gainé's series of almanacs, or hand-books (see Dec. 12, 1774), this one having the title Gainé's Universal Register, or, American and British Calendar, bears this date. In his introductory statement in this volume (a 16mo.), he says that this work is "the first of its Kind that ever appear'd in this Province, . . ." He adds: "At this Time, when all America is united in one great political Compact, for their common Security, it is certainly necessary that we shou'd be furnish'd with as intimate a Knowledge as can be obtain'd of every Province . . ." His work has the merit, he states, "of containing more useful Matter than the Court Kalendar." It contains also "as much as either of the American Registers already publish'd in two Provinces." He has "selected every Thing from the British and Irish Lists worthy of Notice, and, besides the General Establishment of America, the Public is presented with an Account of every Province from West Florida to Quebec inclusive." Among the features relating to New York Province, mentioned or described, is "New-York College." Of this it states, among various facts: "The Building (which is only one Third of the intended Structure) consists of an elegant Stone Edifice, three complete Stories high, with four Stair-cases, twelve Apartments in each, a Chapel, Hall, Library, Museum, Anatomical Theatre and a School for experimental Philosophy.

"All Students, but those in Medicine, are obliged to lodge and diet in the College, unless they are particularly exempted by the Governors or President. The Edifice is surrounded by an high Fence, which also encloses a large Court and Garden; and a Porter constantly attends at the front Gate, which is lock'd at 10 o'Clock each Evening in Summer, and at 9 in Winter; after which Hours, the Names of all that come in, are delivered weekly to the President.

"The College is situated on a dry gravelly Soil, about 150 Yards from the Bank of Hudson's River, which it overlooks; commanding a most extensive and beautiful Prospect." From pp. iii, and 102-3 of the above-mentioned Kalendar. The work also contains "The American Bill of Rights" and the articles of "Association," taken from "the Proceedings of the Continental Congress assembled at Philadelphia." See Sept. 5, 1774.

"In 1775 there were seven students graduated Bachelor of Arts, but 'there was no public Commencement [of King's College] this year on account of the absence of Dr. Cooper.'"—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 50. See May 10.

R. Aitken begins the publication at Philadelphia of The Pennsylvania Magazine; or, American Monthly Museum. He continued it until July, 1776. It was edited by Thomas Paine.—Sabin, XIV: 394 (item 60346).

4 Colden writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "I have received your Ldps Commands of the 19th of October, with his Majesty's order in Council of the same date, which I shall endeavour by every means in my power, to execute in the most effectual manner. I immediately communicated to Mr Elliot the Collector of this Port, the orders which I had received, and gave him the necessary directions for the conduct of the officers of the Customs [see Dec. 15, 1774]. I am well assured he will be very attentive to this important duty. A day or two after this order was received one of the Custom House officers discovered ten chests of Arms, three Boxes of Lead and one Barrell of Gun-Powder on Board a Vessel bound to Rhode Island. It has been found on enquiry that these arms were lately imported on board the ship Lady Gage . . . and it is said, were shipped at London as Hardware; but there was no Cocket for them under any Denomination. Mr Elliot secured them all, and for greater safety sent them on Board the Man of War in the Harbour where they remain.

"That set of people who lay waiting for every opportunity to raise a Mob and throw the City into confusion, made an infamous attempt to frighten Mr Elliott into a surrender of the Arms, which they insisted were legally supported [see Dec. 27 and 28, 1774]. The principal Gentlemen and Merchants, to prevent mischief waited upon Mr Elliott in a body, assured him they were perfectly satisfied with his behavior, and declared warmly against any who should attempt to insult him on account of what had happened which silenced the others who were working in the dark and endeavouring to raise the populace . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 528; cf. N. Y. Merc., Jan 2, 1775, and N. Y. Jour., Jan. 5, 1775. On Feb. 1, Dartmouth replied: "The Discovery of the Arms, Lead and Gun Powder imported in the ship Lady Gage is a proof how necessary our precautions were, and Mr Elliotts spirited and proper conduct is very much approved, as well as that of the gentlemen

- 20 In the British parliament, Lord Chatham proposes an address to the king "for recalling the troops from Boston." This motion was ushered in and supported by a long speech in which he represented this measure as a matter of immediate necessity . . . the present situation of the troops rendered them and the Americans continually liable to events, which would cut off the possibility of a reconciliation . . . this mark of affection and good-will on our side, will remove all jealousy and apprehension on the other and instantaneously produce the happiest effects to both."
In addition, Lord Chatham condemns all the recent laws and measures relating to America, and warns the ministers "of the humiliating disgrace, of repealing those acts through necessity, which they refused to do from other motives." He is said to have concluded his speech with these words: "If the ministers thus persevere in misadvising and misleading the king, I will not say that they can alienate the affections of his subjects from his crown, but I will affirm, that they will make the crown not worth his wearing.—I will not say that the king is betrayed, but I will pronounce that—the kingdom is undone!"—*Ann. - " In an address to Colden, the members of the assembly say: "Affected with the deepest Concern, by the distressed State of the Colonies, and impressed with a due Sense of the fatal Consequences attending the unhappy Dispute between Great Britain and his Majesty's American Dominions, we feel the most afflicting Anxiety at this alarming Crisis. Fully convinced that the Happiness of our Constituents depends greatly on the Wisdom of our present Measures, we shall exercise the important Trust they have reposed in us, with Firmness and Fidelity; and with Calmness and Deliberation, pursue the most probable Means to obtain a Redress of our Grievances. . . . Anxious for the Interest and Happiness of our Country, and earnestly solicitous for the Re-establishment of Harmony with Great-Britain, we shall Discontinue every Measure which may tend to increase our Distress; and, by our Conduct, shew ourselves truly desirous of a cordial and permanent Reconciliation with our Parent Kingdom."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 14. See Jan. 21.
- " The public is informed "That the Town Clerk's Office is removed to the House lately occupied by John Jay, Esq.; in the Broad-Way, next Door to the one in which the late Mr. Chambers lived."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 23, 1775.
- " Colden informs Dartmouth that the assembly's address (see Jan. 20) has given him so much satisfaction that he is sending it to England immediately. He adds: "It was some days before a sufficient number of the members of Assembly got to town . . . and there are still twelve of them absent; which has occasioned the House to put off the farther consideration of their important business to the seventh of next month. . . . It is thought, my Lord, that there [are] at least as many friends to Government among the absent members, as advocates for the late congress and that the House will therefore when they are all together, be able to act up to the sentiments of their address.—Every Machination that restless spirits can devise, will in the mean time be exerted to obtain an approbation of the Proceedings of the Congress which is the grand point the[y] aim to carry" (see Jan 26).—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 530.
- 25 A gentleman in Philadelphia, in a letter to a New Yorker, says: "I am not without hopes that a Petition will be sent to our Assembly, at their meeting next month, to rescind their approbation of the Proceedings of Congress. Nothing but a shameful fear of popular resentment ever could have extorted from them such a Resolve. Your Assembly is revered by all sensible men in this City, for their great prudence and undaunted resolution in first making a stand against lawless usurpers of power, and violators of liberty; from that period it date the fall of anarchy, and the commencement of good order."—4 Am. Arch., I: 1180; cf. Feb. 6.
- " Dirck Schuyler and others, manufacturers of chocolate in New York City, petition "that the colony duty of four shillings per hundred weight, payable on all cocoa imported, may be taken off."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 15.
- " Samuel Holland of New York and David Rittenhouse of Philadelphia, appointed to fix the beginning of the 43d degree, north latitude, make their report.—Cal. Coun. Min., 503.
- 26 By a vote of eleven to ten, the assembly refuses to "take into consideration the proceedings of the continental congress held in the city of Philadelphia, in the months of September and October last."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 18. See Feb. 17 and 22.
- " Samuel Baldwin petitions for "Leave to Surrender to this board his Lease of Peck's Slip's ferry on the first of February or May next on his paying his rent to the day of his surrendering up the same." The common council gives him permission to do so on May 1, and orders that the ferry be advertised to be sold on March 20 (q. v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 75. The advertisement appeared in the N. Y. Merc., Feb. 6, 1775 and in Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 9, 1775.
- 27 A New Yorker, in a letter to Boston, says: "The present Assembly has existed since 1769, and most of the Members who were against an inquiry into the measures of the Congress [see Jan. 26], as preparatory to the approbation of them, have long since forfeited the esteem of their constituents, and are therefore looking for favours from the Crown for themselves and families. Others of them were imposed on from mere ignorance, and some from fear. . . . In short, sir, no virtuous or spirited act could be expected from a House, which had, by its votes, violated the right of Election, suspended the Habeas Corpus Act, deprived the subject of his right to a trial by a jury, and provided support six years for Troops kept here for the express purpose of enslaving America; but although these miscreants are the legal Representatives of the people, yet I can assure you they are not their true Representatives, and therefore you have no cause to fear that this City will depart from the Association."—4 Am. Arch., I: 1191. Cf. Jan. 30.
- " About 300 of the inhabitants of New York City and Charlotte 1775 County petition for permission to introduce a bill "to declare an Jan. oath administered according to the usage of North Britain to be 27 legal."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 19. When taking an oath, the people in Scotland merely raised the right hand instead of kissing the Bible. The Scotch form was made legal in New York by an act passed on April 1 (q. v.).

30 The committee of 60 appoints a sub-committee "to observe the conduct of all Vessels which may arrive after the first day of February next, having on board any Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, not allowed to be imported by the Association."—4 Am. Arch., I, 1203. See Feb. 2 and Feb. 16.

" A letter from New York to Boston says: "Since the glorious eleven [see Jan. 26], with Colonel Phillips at their head, have carried the day, two more Members are come, both of which are of the right side, so that there is now no chance of the Assembly's aiding or abetting the Congress. The friends of Government plume themselves on this victory, and are now open-mouthed against the proceedings of Congress, and no one dares, among gentlemen, to support them. Worthy old Silver Locks, (Lieutenant Governour Colden) when he heard that the Assembly had acted right, cried out, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.'"—4 Am. Arch., I, 1203. Cf. Jan. 27.

" An advertisement reads: "Samuel Prince, Cabinet-Maker, At the sign of the chest of drawers, in William-Street, near the North Church, in New York: Makes and sells all sorts of cabinet work in the neatest manner, and on the lowest terms. . . . He has on hand for sale,

"A parcel of the most elegant furniture, made of mahogany of the very best quality, such as chest of drawers, chest upon chest, cloth presses, desks, desks [sic] and book cases of different sorts, chairs of many different and new patterns, beuro tables, dining tables, card tables, breakfast tables, tea tables and many other sorts of cabinet work."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 30, 1775.

Feb. The lieutenant-governour, with great satisfaction, reports 1 to Dartmouth the action of the assembly on Jan. 26 (q. v.). He then goes on to say: "When your Lordship considers that every American Assembly which has met since the Congress was held at Philadelphia, have approved of and adopted the Proceedings of the Congress. . . . the loyalty and firmness of the Assembly of this Province, and of the People in general, will appear in a very striking light. . . . I have strong expectations, my Lord, that the conduct of this Province will every day more evidently shew the loyalty and affection of the People for their gracious Sovereign, and their earnest desire for a Reconciliation with great Britain."— N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 531-32.

2 The house of commons debates "upon the Disturbances in North America." Previous to the debate, "the avenues leading to the House were so extremely crowded, that there was not room for the members to pass" until orders were given for the lobby and gallery to be cleared. "Lord North recapitulated the information contained in the papers; discriminated the temper of the colonies; pointed out those where moderation prevailed, and where violence was concealed under the appearance of duty and submission. . . .
He spoke of arts which he asserted were employed on both sides the Atlantic to raise this seditious spirit. He drew a comparison between the burdens borne by the people of Great Britain and those of America. The annual taxes of Great Britain, he said, amounted to ten millions sterling, exclusive of the expenses of collection; and the number of inhabitants of Great Britain he supposed to be eight millions, therefore every inhabitant paid at least 25 shillings annually. The total taxes of the continent of America amount to no more than 75,000 l.; the number of inhabitants of America were three millions, therefore an inhabitant of America paid no more than sixpence annually. He then proceeded to lay down the legislative supremacy of parliament; stated the measures adopted by America to resist it, and the almost universal confederacy of the colonies in that resistance. Here, he said, he laid his foot on the great barrier, which separated, and for the present disunited both countries; and on this ground alone of resistance and denial, he raised every argument leading to the motion he intended to make."

The measures which he suggested to punish the colonies were
"to send more force; [and] to bring a temporary Act to put a stop to all the foreign trade of New England, particularly to their fishery on the banks of Newfoundland." He concluded thus:
"Whenever any of the colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that, at the same time, we consider it our indispensable duty, humbly to beseech his Majesty, that his Majesty will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme legislature; and that we beg leave to assure his Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by his Majesty, against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament."

Mr. Dunning answered as follows (in part): "You passed Acts in the last session, which instead of governing America, carried tyranny into the bowels of America. . . . You executed those Acts by force of arms; the people of the colonies thinking themselves tyrannically used, . . . convened a general congress; the deputies met in that congress, came to resolutions declaratory of their ideas of their submission unto Britain, full of duty and allegiance to the King, and respect towards parliament. . . . A people . . . professing the utmost loyalty and obedience to the King, and using no violence against his troops, nor being any where in arms, cannot, but by the utmost perversion of sense and expression be denominated rebels. . . . I insist that every appearance of riot, disorder, tumult, and sedition which the noble lord has so faithfully recounted from news-papers, arises not from disobedience, treason, or rebellion, but is created by the conduct of those, who are anxious to establish despotism."

Attorney General Thurlow then called attention to the fact that "the several provincial meetings have ordered an arrangement of the militia. . . . and the inhabitants of the colonies are so alert in obeying these orders, that they go beyond their commission, and seize upon the King's artillery and stores; the whole continent joining in one universal voice of disobedience to the legislature of this country. . . . By every principle of policy we ought to render ourselves as secure as possible; and if we heard that such menacing circumstances as I have mentioned were breaking out in Scotland, in Ireland, or Cornwall, would not the ministry deserve impeachment. Should they wait till all parties had joined, and were on one march to London?"

Among the other speakers was Charles Fox, who pointed out
"the injustice, the inexpediency, and folly of the motion; propo-sied defeat on one side of the water, and ruin and punishment on the other." He further said "that the measures taken by his Majesty's servants tend rather to widen than to heal the unhappy differences. . . . between Great Britain and America."

Mr. Cruger "strongly recommended to all parties to go into an examination of the question, free from resentment or prejudice. . .
He then attempted to vindicate the Americans both in courage and gallantry."

Captain Luttrell pointed out the necessity of keeping at home all of the already depleted fleet. "Can we believe," he said, "that the French and Spaniards will look any longer with an eye of indifference on these disputes. . . . or that they have not at this very hour, priests and emissaries in America. . . . to blow the coal of contention between America and this country? Do we not know, Sir, that the Spaniards have never abandoned the claim they set up to Jamaica. . . . ? Or can we believe that the French will ever forget the manner in which you made reprisals, previous to the commencement of the late war?"

The solicitor-general concluded the day's debate. He said "that descriptions of the immense consequences of America trade were arguments rather against the opposing members than for them; for the greater the consequence of the commerce, the greater the care ought to be, and the firmer the policy that was to preserve it; that the question was not now the importance of the American colonies, but the possession of the colonies at all."—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 221-33.

The ship "James" arrives from Glasgow with a cargo of coal and dry goods, but as importation is no longer permitted, a strict watch is kept "to prevent the landing of any Goods in a clandestine manner." Some "Ministerial tools" assemble a few vagrants with a view to landing the goods, but these "banditti" are soon suppressed by the inhabitants. Thinking the ship in danger, the captain has her stationed "four miles below the City." On Feb. 9, she was again brought into the harbour by an officer and some of the men belonging to the "King-Fisher." "As soon as it was known that the Ship was coming up again, the people were greatly exasperated; began to assemble together in great numbers, and immediately went to the Captain's lodgings, seized him, and after conducting him through many of the principal streets, attended by a 1775 a prodigious concourse of people, he was, without suffering the least Feb. 2 hurt or injury, put on board a boat, with some hands to row him, and sent off." As his ship was then two miles below the town, he went on board the man-of-war until the morning of Feb. 10 when the "James" came to anchor "under the cannon of the King-Fisher."

On Feb. 11, after some trouble over clearance papers, the "James" got under sail "accompanied by a boat, with two of the Committee, and a number of inhabitants on board." This convoy left her "about a league to the Southward of Sandy Hook," and two hours later she was out of sight.—4 Am. Arch., I: 1243-44. See Feb. 8.

6 "A Freeman" issues an address "To the Freeholders, Freeman, and Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York." It begins:
"As the Conduct of the General Committee is not understood by some, and misrepresented by others, it will not be improper to inform you, that a few Persons interested in the Impartation of Goods, pretended to be in Doubt, whether it was necessary according to the Association entered into by the Congress, that the Goods which should arrive here, after the first day of February, should be sent back in the same Vessel. In order to determine this Matter, and to prevent any Disputes . . . on Monday Night last [Jan. 30], a Member made a Motion to get the Sense of the Committee on the Question: The Association was then read, and the different Articles of it which relate to the Point, were duly considered and fully argued, upon which the Committee determined unanimously, that accordi'g to the true Intent and Meaning of the Association, the Goods, Wares, or Merchandize which should be imported after the first Day of February, should be sent back in the same Vessel in which they were impured." The author then publishes the names of those present at the meeting.

On Feb. 2 (q. v.), he continues, the committee decided that the ship "James" could not land her cargo, and at a meeting on Feb.
3, reiterated its decision of Jan. 30. The writer concludes: "What now must you think of the Impudence and Wickedness of those Men who attempted last Saturday to bring the said Ship [the "James"] to the Wharf, in order to land her Cargo, and thereby plunge this City into Confusion. Are three or four Men of no Considerable, Tools to the Enemies of our Country—to be suffered with Impunity, to attempt a Violation of the Engagements entered into by our Delegates, in our Behalf? Are they, and not the Committee [sic], to speak the Sense of the City. Forbid it Heaven! Such Men must incur your Indignation. For your Duty, your Honour, your Liberty, is highly concerned, to support your Engagements to the other Colonies, which can only be done by supporting the Determination of your Committee, which hath been fully stated to you."—From an original broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Philadelphian writes to his correspondent in New York:
"It is much to be lamented that your Province has not yet adopted the Proceedings of the Congress; but a faithful adherence to the Association will go far to remove the infamy which must certainly fall upon that Province, whose defection may tend to defeat the virtuous struggles in which we are engaged. We observe a number of publications in Rivington's Paper from your City, to which there is not the least spark of credit due. They are not offer them to our Printers, because their notorious falsehood would ruin the credit of the Paper."—4 Am. Arch., I: 1215. Cf. Jan. 25.

7 "The Vestry of the City of New-York, Acquaint the Public, That in and by an order of the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, now holding for the city and county of New York, they were appointed overseers of the several public wells and pumps within the said city, for one year." They ask that any person who is desirous of contracting for the work attend a meeting "at the tavern of John Simmons, near the City-Hall" (see Oct.
8, 1770) on Feb. 14.—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 13, 1775. For the creation of the first vestry in the city and for the responsibilities of that body, see Sept. 22, 1693. These vestrymen were civil, not ecclesiastical, officers, elected annually by the voters of the city.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 328-31. V: 85-86. After 1745, they numbered fourteen, two from each ward, with two wardens elected by the city at large.
The city vestry being dissenters, at times clashed with Trinity's vestry.

under the British military régime, see Dec. 27, 1777.

7 8 "Calden writes to Capt. Montagu of the "King Fisher": "Altho' no Complaint or Information has been laid before Me by any Person, relative to the ship from Glasgow which arrived last Week in this Port [see Feb. 2], yet the act of Outrage and Violence by which she was carried from the wharf & is detain'd near the Watering Place is so notorious, that I thought it was my Duty to take the Opinion and advice of his Majesty's Council upon it, who have advis'd Me to apply to you to go down to the ship and to offer the master your Assistance." On Feb. 9, Colden wrote to the captain again: "The Letter of this Day which I had the favour to receive from you informing me that . . . the Sloop with arm'd Men on board, close to the Glasgow Ship, to prevent her from coming up to Town, I have laid before his Majesty's Council; and by their advice I do request that you will take care that no Injury be done or any restraint laid by the said Sloop, on the Glasgow Ship; and that if the Master of the Ship do apply to you, you do assist him in bringing his Vessel up to Town, or give him every other necessary aid he may ask for."—Colden Papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1877), 384-85.

On Feb. 20, in a letter to General Gage, Colden said: "I was much shagreen'd that a ship which arrived here from Glasgow should be sent away with her Cargo in compliance to the orders of the Congress. The Capt'n was a stupid Body who would neither make a complaint nor ask for assistance. None of the Consignees had Resolution enough to Demand their Goods, so that it was impossible for Government to interfere to any good purpose."—

A "Tory" is defined as "a thing whose head is in England, and its body in America, and its neck ought to be stretched."—

An extract of a letter from New York reads: "The King's speech [see Nov. 30, 1774] has had a surprising effect in this province. Those people who were moderate before, and even inclined to favour government, are now become keen and resolute in defence of the injured rights of America. Several ships have arrived within this fortnight from England, and two or three from Scotland; all of them are obliged to depart without unloading a single article."—London Packet, April 14 to 17, 1775.

A cylinder is cast at the furnace of Messrs. Sharp and Curteis 10 (see April 22, 1773) for the "Steam Engine of the Water Works now carrying on here [see July 21]; being the first performance of the kind ever attempted in America, and allowed by Judges to be extremely well executed."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 16, 1775.

Mr. Bayard, deputy-secretary, brings to the assembly from 15 Colden "sundry accounts of monies expended in repairs at Fort George and the Battery . . . amounting to £64 16 4."—Assembly Jour. (1775), 56. On March 22, this account was ordered paid.—

Col. Schuyler moves that certain letters from the committee of 16 correspondence of Connecticut, the answer of the New York committee, and a letter from the assembly to Edmund Burke, all written in 1774, "be forthwith entered on the journals of this house, and that the clerk of this house be ordered to deliver copies of the same to the printer of this colony, that they may be by him inserted in the public newspapers." The motion is lost by a vote of 16 to 9.—Assem. Jour. (1775), 37.

The ship "Beulah" arrives "at the Watering Place, about 17 three leagues from this City [New York], in nine weeks from London. The Pilots, we are informed, were ordered not to bring her up, lest her being in the Harbour should give uneasiness to the City.
The same night, a Sloop with some members of the Sub-Committee of Observation [see Jan. 30], and other citizens on board, went down and anchored near the said Ship, to observe her conduct, and they will continue there till she departs. The Ship wants a new bowsprit; when she is furnished with this, and other necessaries for her voyage, she will be despatched without delay."—4 Am. Arch., I: 1257.

By a vote of fifteen to nine, the assembly refuses to thank 17 Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, James Duane, Simon Boerum, William Floyd, and Henry Wisner, "for their faithful and judicious discharge of the trust reposed in them by the good people of this colony, at the continental congress, held at Phila-1775 delphia, in the mouths of September and October last."—Assemb.

18 In a letter to Messrs. Remington & Briggs, of London, John Thurman writes: "Politics Run so high here that we do not know any Property is safe amongst us . . . the neighbouring Provinces seem so determin'd on no Submission & have done Little towards an accommodation that should as Little be done by Parliament all will be confusion . . . we begin to think what Property we have in New England very precarious as the most of the Inhabitants in this Place are averse to any Violence & wish to Support Law & order we are abused by our neighbors because we do not run into the same violent measures with them yet I dare be hold to say this province would be as firm in any constitutional opposition to unconstitutional Impositions as any of them."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 291.

Mr. John Schoonmaker, of Ulster County, overhears two negroes plotting to set fire to a number of houses in the vicinity. This being reported to the magistrates, the negroes were imprisoned. "The Motive for this Conspiracy, was the Recovery of their Freedom. A large Quantity of Powder and Ball was found with several Negroes and there are said to be Advices in Town, that . . . seventeen or eighteen more have been committed to Goal." A report has been current that the negroes were to have been joined by five or six hundred Indians, but there seems to be no foundation for this.—N. Y. Jour., March 2, 1775. It is said that the negroes were to be divided into parties, "to fire the houses, cry fire, and kill the people as they came out."—N. Y. Merc., March 6, 1775. "From Jamaica, on Long-Island, we are also informed, that several of the Negroes at that Place, were last week committed to Goal there, on account of a Conspiracy said to have been discovered among them to destroy the White People; and we are told most of the Slaves for many Miles round are concerned in this Plot."—Ibid., March 6, 1775. On April 27, the Journal reported: "We can inform the public from good authority, that sundry negroes have lately been committed to the goal at the White Plains in Westchester county, upon suspicion of conspiring the death of the whites."—N. Y. Jour., April 27, 1775.

20 The ferry to be established "from the Dock belonging to this Corporation, at the Bear Market at the North River to Hobcock," is leased for two years to Hermanus Talman at an annual rent of £50.—M. C. C., VIII: 78. On May 8, the lease was signed by the mayor and ordered to be delivered to Talman.—Ibid., VIII: 91. Talman must have made some private arrangement with Cornelius Haring, for, on May 1, the latter opened the ferry (see May 11). As late as May 24, 1776, Talman was considered the lessee.—M. C. C., VIII: 140. For more about this ferry, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942.

21 By a vote of 15 to 10, the general assembly refuses to thank the merchants and inhabitants of the city "for their repeated, disinterested, public spirited, and patriotic conduct, in declining the importation, or receiving of goods from Great Britain, and for their firm adherence to the association entered into and recommended by the Grand Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 40.

23 A motion "that the sense of this house be taken, on the necessity of appointing delegates for this colony, to meet the delegates for the other colonies on this continent, in General congress," is lost by a vote of 17 to 9.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 44-45. See April 5. Samuel Seabury, M. A., "Rector of the Parish of Westchester," advertises that he "Hath opened a School in that Town, and offers his Service to prepare young Gentlemen for the College, the Compting-House, or any genteel Business for which Parents or Guardians may design them. Children who know their Letters, will be admitted into his School, and taught to read English with propriety, and to write it with a fair Hand, and with grammatical accuracy. They will be instructed in Arithmetic, if required, in its utmost extent; and in the Elements of Geometry; in Trigonometry, Navigation, Surveying, &c.—The Latin and Greek Languages will be taught those who are intended for a learned Education.

"There are already eleven Students under Mr. Seahury's Care, and as soon as the Number of Scholars shall require it, a good Usher will be provided: And no Care or Diligence shall be wanting to give Satisfaction to those Gentlemen, who shall favor him with the Education of their Children.

"Proper attention will be paid to the young Gentlemen, that they be kept clean and decent, and that they behave with propriety; and as the most essential part of Education is to qualify them to discharge the Duties and Offices of Life with Integrity and Virtue, particular Care will be taken to explain to them the Principles of Morality, and the Christian Religion, by frequent short Lectures, adapted to their Capacity.

"Board, (Washing included) may be had, in unexceptionable Families, at about twenty Pounds per Ann. and the Tuition will be six Pounds, New-York Currency, and eight Shillings for Fire-wood.

"Westchester is about nineteen Miles from New-York, by Land, and about fifteen by Water; and a Water-passage may be had almost every Day, when the Weather will permit, in good safe Boats."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 23, 1775. In this school there are five young gentlemen from the island of Jamaica, one from Montreal, four children of gentlemen now in England and others from New York and the country.—Dawson, Westchester County in the Rev., 139. For the raid on Seabury, see Nov. 22.

The Gazetteer reports a meeting of the "committee of observation" (see Nov. 22, 1774). It is proposed that they "nominate delegates, to the continental congress, for the approbation of the city and county," but being opposed, the final resolution of the committee is deferred to the next meeting.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 2, 1775. See March 13.

At a meeting of the New York committee of correspondence, it is ordered "That as the Non-Importation of India Tea is to take place in a few days, the third article of the Association be printed in all the publick Papers of this City, in order that the inhabitants be apprized thereof."—4 Am. Arch., I: 1269. This order, together with the third article of the "Association," appeared in Rivington's Gazetteer, March 2, 1775. The third article read: "As a non-consumption agreement, strictly adhered to, will be an effectual security for the observation of the non-importation, we, as above, solemnly agree and associate, that, from this day, we will not purchase or use any Tea imported on account of the East-India Company, or any on which a duty hath been, or shall be paid; and from and after the first day of March next, we will not purchase or use any East-India Tea whatever; nor will we, nor shall any person for or under us, purchase or use any of those goods, wares or merchandise, we have agreed not to import, which we shall know, or have cause to suspect, were imported after the first day of December, except such as come under the rules and directions of the tenth article hereafter mentioned."

"By private Sale, All that valuable house, many years known by the name of the Queen's Head Tavern, near the Exchange, is three stories high, with a tile and lead roof, has fourteen fire places, a most excellent large Kitchen, fine dry cellars, with good and convenient offices, sufficient for a large family, the business above-mentioned, a merchant, or any other trader, is a corner house, very open and airy, and in the most compleat repair, near to the new Ferry. Further particulars and a good title will be given by Samuel Francis, who, so far from declining his present business, is determined to use every the utmost endeavour, to carry on the same to the pleasure and satisfaction of his friends, and the public in general."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 27, and April 17, 1775. Francis did not sell the house until ten years later, and continued to keep tavern here until the Revolution, and again after 1783 until its sale, on Apr. 23, 1785 (q. v.).

The New York Hospital (see Sept. 3, 1773), "at Ranelagh, a 28 large pile of buildings lately erected and nearly finished," is almost totally destroyed by fire; "the Workmen being all gone to Dinner, and the Rooms lumbered with combustible Materials, the Flames spread so fast, that before any Help could be called, they were got to too great a Height to be suppressed, and the whole wooden Part of the Building, the erecting of which had been the Work of many Months, was, in about one Hour, reduced to Ashes.—It is unknown

1775 by what Means the Accident happened, but it is supposed that the Feb. shavings might have been left too near the Fire.—It is hoped, how-28 ever, that Charity, which reared this Structure, will cause another to spring from its Ashes for the Relief of the distressed Poor.— N. Y. Jour., March 2, 1775. The Legislature responded to the appeal for aid on April 1 (q.v.).

Mar. The committee of correspondence summons the freeholders and freemen to meet at the exchange on March 6 (q.v.), "to signify their sense of the best method of choosing . . . Delegates [to the second continental congress], and whether they will appoint a certain number of persons, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing out of their body, Delegates for the next Congress."—4 Am. Arch., II: 4. The conservatives objected to this action of the committee of 60. For their protest, see March 4.

"The general committee of Charlestown, S. C., writes to the New York committee: "It was with equal surprise and concern that we read in the public prints what passed in your House of Assembly on the 26th of January [q.v.], with respect to the proceedings of the General Congress. It is impossible for us, at this distance, to conjecture the reasons which induced the Assembly to refuse their formal assent to the Solemn Agreement of all these Colonies. . . . We are not insensible of the consequence of your Colony in the great chain of American Union.—Nor do we imagine the Ministry insensible of it; we are well aware of your unhappy situation, and of the many artful measures that have been, and now are, taking, if possible, to throw you into confusion. . . . We are not ignorant of that crowd of placemen, of contractors, of officers, and needy dependants upon the Crown, who are constantly employed to frustrate your Measures. We know the dangerous tendency of being made the headquarters of America for many years. All these things, though they necessarily tend to clog the wheels of publick spirit, yet do not cause us to doubt of publick virtue, as a Colony; say, we assure ourselves, that your love to Constitutional Liberty, to justice, and your posterity, however depressed for a little while, will at last surmount all obstacles, and do honour to New York."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1-2.

"Colden writes to Dartmouth that "the non importation association of the Congress is ever rigidly maintained in this Place. The enemies of Government do all they can to propagate an opinion that the Ministry will yet draw back and quiet the Colonies by a Recall." He sends him "a pamphlet lately published in this Place," saying: "We have had several good political peices published here this winter this is esteemed one of the best; it is wrote by MF Galloway of Philadelphia."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 543-44.
 The pamphlet was A candid Examination of the Mutual Claims of Great Britain and the Colonies, etc. (ibid., 544, foot-note).

"The Whigs of Newport, R. I., draw up the following resolution:
 "whereas, a certain James Rivington, a Priester and Stationer in the City of New York, impelled by the love of sordid pelf, and a haughty domineering spirit, hath, for a long time, in the dirty Gazetteer, and in pamphlets, if possible still more dirty, uniformly reported [sic] in publishing every falsehood which his own wicked imagination, or the imaginings of others of the same stamp, as ingenious perhaps in mischief as himself, could suggest or fabricate, that had a tendency to spread jealousies, fear, discord, and disunion through this country; and by partial and false representations of facts, hath endeavoured to pervert truth and to deceive and mislead the incautious into wrong conceptions of facts reported, and wrong sentiments respecting the measures now carrying on for the recovery and establishment of our rights, and the supporters of those measures. . . . Resolved, therefore . . . that no further dealings or correspondence ought to be had with the said James Rivington; and we recommend it to every person who takes his Paper . . . immediately to drop the same."—4 Am. Arch., II: 12-13; Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., II: 215-16. Similar resolutions were adopted at Freehold, N. J., on March 6 (4 Am. Arch., II: 35-36), and at Ulster County, N. Y., on March 14 (ibid., II: 132). See March 29.

"This City, after being one of the most refractory on the Continent, is become the most submissive and obedient in all America, for they have not only built excellent barracks for the army, but also supply the troops with every necessary of life; and lately the Assembly voted 2000l. for the current year, and notwithstanding the passing the Stamp Act, and duties on paper, glass, painters colours, and on tea, and their Assembly annihilated by tyranny, yet that very Assembly, when afterwards suffered to meet, immediately granted fifteen hundred pounds to be invested in an equestrian statue of his Majesty, on the arrival of which it was erected in a Square near the Fort, and yesterday being the anniversary day of its erecting, Governor Colden, with his wretched council and assembly, the Mayor, Aldermen, with the military, went in procession on the Spot, where, after surrounding the leaden horse and his rider, the common cryer made proclamation for the whole company to be uncovered, when an oration was made by the Town Clerk, in which he recited the many blessings they enjoy under this pious reign; after which they drank his majesty's health, and returned to their respective homes, amidst the Hisses of the people.

"The wretches above mentioned met in Council and Assembly, have by a majority voted, not to obey the General Congress resolution, but to protest against and oppose all the Continent of America, who are making so noble a stand in defence of their liberty, whilst the people of this Province wish to do the same; but they are unhappily in the hands of dependant Placemen, Contractors, Informers, a refugee Roman Catholic Family, and other, the veriest reptiles on earth. This therefore is the only Colony, on which the British junto must rely to enslave America."—From newspaper clipping in the Upcott Coll., IV: 299.

"A Londoner writes: "The friends of America, on the arrival of the Packet, were much alarmed at a report, that New York was disaffected to the common cause, and determined to break the Resolves of the Congress, especially that of non-importation; however we had the pleasure, from the best accounts, to find it otherwise, and that we had little reason to fear the late Resolutions of your Assembly would produce any change in your proceedings."— 4 Am. Arch., II: 24-25; cf. March 4.

"The notice of March 1 (q.v.) meets with the disapproval of the conservative element in the city. John Thurman, as chairman of a meeting of a "very respectable number of . . . friends to constitutional liberty," issues an address "To the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New York." These "friends" oppose the meeting of March 6 (q.v.) because "the sense of the city [concerning the choice of delegates] ought to be taken in a most satisfactory manner, for which, next Monday is a day much too early." They think that, if the meeting is postponed until April 20,
 "it is highly probable that we shall have such advices from England as will enable us then effectually to determine on the most expedient mode of acting, whereas in the present situation of things, we may resolve on that which we may soon have reason to repent of." For this reason, they ask the people to vote (on March 6) "for postponing the said Meeting until Thursday 20th of April next, as you will thereby prevent the many ill consequences, which will probably ensue, on so hasty a determination, and give yourselves time to deliberate on the most expedient mode, of benefiting your Country, and securing your invaluable liberties."

"This handbill arouses a storm of protest from the radicals, who,
 on the same day, issue several answers to it. "A Tory" tells John Thurman "That the sense of this city on the question now before them, may as well be taken on Monday next, as at any time: For although it may take much time to make him understand it, his fellow-citizens labour under no such incapacity. . . . That advices from England have nothing to do with our appointing Delegates for the next Congress, and therefore that we may as well wait till the conversion of the Pope, as the arrival of the Packet . . . that between the 20th of April, and the 10th of May [q.v.], there is not sufficient time to write to, and receive an answer from all the countries."

"Another writer, signing himself "Americanaus," addressing the "Freeholders and Freemen," declares: "Their [the Conservatives'] insinuation that the day is too short, for your consideration, is an insult upon your understandings: All of our sister colonies, have already chosen their Delegates, and shall we delay concurring in a measure, that has been the subject, of consideration, ever since the last Congress? You cannot be ignorant that if we do not appoint Delegates, all the Colonies will, and must withhold their trade and connection with us; whereby . . . we shall not only act a dis-honourable part, but our debt due from them will remain unpaid; we shall be destitute of many necessities which we now receive from them, and the next Congress may be induced to enter any Measures against us, for our perfidy. . . . We have already chosen a respectable and approved Committee; as such, let us strenuously support them in the measures they have adopted and frustrate the wicked attempts of our enemies."

1775 There is also an address "To the Inhabitants of the City and Mar. County of New-York" by "A Citizen." He pleads: "consider 4 what you are about—take care that you don't become a bye word, and a reproach throughout the world, and through out all ages—
You have hitherto preserved your reputation, preserve it still—you have hitherto been free, be so still . . . Go then, on Monday, to the Exchange, and delay not to pursue the advise of the Congress, by forthwith declaring, that Deputies shall be chosen to meet those from the other Counties, and in conjunction with them, appoint Delegates for the next Congress."—From the broadsides in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The one signed by John Thurman is, by misprint, dated 1774.

" A letter from London contains the following: "The news which the Packet brought us of the conduct of the people of New-York, has filled every heart with joy, and employed every tongue in your praise. Even faction itself admires in sullen silence. Pursue the same line of mild and prudent counsel and conduct, and you will secure the liberties of your Country, and obtain immortal gratitude from the posterity of even your rivals."—4 Am. Arch., II: 29. Cf. March 2.

6 The meeting previously announced (see March 1) takes place at the exchange. In preparation for this meeting, a "Union Flag, with a red field, was hoisted on the Liberty-pole, where, at nine o'clock, the friends of Freedom assembled." They marched to the exchange, "attended by musick." Later (see March 4), members "of the other company" arrived. Among them were "some Officers of the Army and Navy, several of this Majesty's Council, and those Members of the House of Representatives, who had refused taking into consideration the proceedings of the Congress [see Jan. 26], together with Officers of the Customs, and other dependants on the Court, &c. . . some confusion arose, but subsided without any bad consequences." By a majority vote, it was decided to authorize the committee to nominate 11 deputies (see March 16) "to meet such Deputies as the Countees may elect" on April 20 (q.v.) and appoint delegates to the next Congress.—4 Am. Arch., II: 48-49.
Cf. Becker, Hist. of Pol. Parties in the Prov. of N. Y., 182-85.

" Two Tories, William Cunningham (see Aug. 4, 1774) and John Hill, are handled roughly by "a mob of above two hundred men" near the liberty pole. The former is called upon "to go down on his knees and damn his Popish King George," but he exclaims instead "God bless King George." This so enraged the people that they "dragged him through the greco, tore the cloaths off his back, and robbed him of his watch." Hill was treated in a like manner.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 9, 1775. Cunningham became later the British provost-marshal (see Sept. 16, 1776).

7 The members of the committee appointed, on March 11, 1774 (q.v.), "to fix on a suitable place for building a government house, and to prepare a plan or plans, and an estimate of the expense," report that they think "the most proper place . . . is in Fort George, either in the front towards the broad way, or in the rear near the back curtain, provided the front curtain be pulled down."
They present plans for the building and an estimate of the expense, which are referred to a committee of the whole house.—*Assemb.
Jour.* (1775), 59-60.

8 By a vote of 14 to 12, the assembly adopts the following resolutions:

1. That the people of New York "owe the same faith and allegiance to his most gracious Majesty King George the third, that are due to him from his subjects in Great Britain."

2. That they owe obedience "to all acts of parliament calculated for the general weal of the whole empire, and the due regulation of the trade and commerce thereof and not inconsistent with the essential rights and liberties of Englishmen."

3. That "it is essential to freedom, and the undoubted right of Englishmen, that no taxes be imposed on them but with their consent, given personally, or by their representatives in general assembly."

4. That the parliamentary acts for raising revenue, for extending the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, and for depriving the colonists of trial by jury "are destructive to freedom, and subversive of the rights and liberties of the colonists."

5. That the practice of seizing inhabitants of the colony suspected of treason or other offences and sending them out of the colony to be tried "is dangerous to the lives and liberties of his Majesty's American subjects."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 63-65.

9 The general assembly resolves to grant £4,000 towards rebuilding the hospital.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 67. On March 16, the governours of the hospital thanked the assembly for the resolution.

—Ibid., 78.

10 On or about this date, a broadside, addressed "To the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of New-York," and signed "A Freeman," was published. This attacked the city committee for suggesting that the delegates to the second congress be chosen by a provincial convention instead of by the inhabitants at large. It urged the inhabitants to resist the holding of such a convention because many of the counties would refuse to send representatives and because the members would probably assume powers not delegated to them. In conclusion, "A Freeman" called upon the people of the city to re-elect the five men who had attended the first congress and to allow the other counties to choose their representatives separately.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub.
Library. For an answer to this, see March 14.

11 A letter from London contains this news: "The plan of this accursed Ministry is, to divide and govern, in hopes of completing their principle of slavery, by the base advantages and preferences now held out to New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia . . .
with what contempt ought the base majority of the New York Assembly to be held! Have they not been honoured with that disapprobation, to wit: Tarring and Feathering? It ought to be administered as a deterrent to others. For if that defection had not happened, we had the utmost reason to expect other measures would have been adopted than these villainous Acts passed and passing."—4 Am. Arch., II: 118. Cf. March 4.

13 Colden, in a message to the assembly, says: "The very insufficient state of the public office of the Secretary of the province [see III: 975] is obvious. The records and papers, which are of the greatest importance to the whole province, are, from the ruinous state of the house, daily exposed to the worst effects of the weather."
—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 71. On March 22, Gerard Banker was allowed a sum, not to exceed £50, "to be laid out by him in repairing the Secretary's office of this colony."—Ibid., (1775), 84.

" James Rivington having printed in his paper (see Feb. 27) a paragraph which the New York committee considers "entirely and wholly false and groundless," two members of the committee report on their interview with him. When asked what authority he had for the statement, Rivington told them "he published it from common report, but would be more careful in the future, and was willing to contradict it." The committee thereupon resolves, "That common report is not sufficient authority for any Printer in this City to publish any matters as facts relative to this Committee, and tending to expose them to the resentment of their Constituents, and the odium of the Colonies; for that the transactions of this Committee are not kept secret, and any person may, with ease, know the truth of such reports, by applying to any of the Members."
In the Gazetteer of March 16, Rivington objected to the committee members' report, and claimed that he actually said: "what was related in my Paper was credited; yet if they would furnish me with accounts of their Proceedings, I might be able to print them without error."—4 Am. Arch., II: 50-51.

" Phileleutheros," in an address "To the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New-York," headed "No Placemen, Pensioners, Ministerial Hirelings, Popery, nor Arbitrary Power," advises the people to resist British tyranny and uphold the candidates of the city committee. He assails the "Minions and Tools of Power," who, he says, assembled at the Exchange on March 6 (q.v.), "with a View of opposing the Nomination of Deputies to serve in Provincial Congress." He adds: "There are Letters in Town, received per the Packet, which mention 'That Lord North declared, he had received Letters from some of the principal Men in the City of New-York, urging him to pursue his Measures against the Colonies, and promising him their aid, to carry the same into Execution.'—Can there be the least Doubt of the Existence of such Parricides among us, after the Proceedings on Monday last" (March 6).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub.
Library.

" A Tinker" issues a notice "To the Free and Respectable Mechanicks, and other Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," in which he praises the plan of a provincial convention. He says: "This is the only way to get a proper representation of the Colony as the Assembly has not thought proper to take up the matter. Let your suffrages be given free. Mark the men who oppose this equitable mode, as foes to your liberty . . . Behold them, as those who are doing all in their power to distract

- 1775 judgments, increase your animosities, and finally, if possible, to Mar. divide and destroy you; and though they may possibly come to 13 you with oil on their lips, the poison of asps is under their tongues . . . Are not the men, who now oppose the Deputies the very same who appeared at the Exchange, in company with a train of ministerial tools, such as officers of the navy and army, with their servants; custom-house officers, and their runners; counsellors of the King, and their dependents, &c. Men, whose immediate interest it is to support administration; men who would gladly see you enslaved, that they might riot on the fruits of your honest industry . . . Does not their proceedings discover intentions to overturn every measure that your Committee are taking for your peace and safety? They undoubtedly do. I beseech you then, as you regard your own safety, as you are desirous of keeping off that deplorable stroke of despotism that is intended for you.
Watch the motions of these incendiaries, follow the counsels of your virtuous Committee, and a delightful field of freedom lays before you."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- " The provincial council receives a letter from Gov. Tryon recommending moderate treatment of the people; and one from Lord Dartmouth stating that no delegates ought to be sent to the general congress at Philadelphia. The advice of council is against issuing a proclamation to this effect.—Cal. Coun. Min., 504.
- 14 "Another Freeman" issues an address "To the Freeholders and Freeman of the City of New-York." This contains a justification of the actions of the committee, a plea for sending delegates to the continental congress and for allowing the provincial convention to choose them, and a refutation of the charges made by "A Freeman" on March 10 (q. v.).
- " On the same day, "A Friend to the Congress" publishes a broadside, addressed "To The Freeholders & Freemen of the City and County of New-York," in favour of the provincial convention.
He shows that the five men who represented the city and county in their names will not be excluded from the second, for their names are on the list of eleven nominated by the committee.—From originals in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- " The "Stalls & Standings of the several Markets of this City and likewise the Docks and Slips" are to be let, by public outcry, for two years to the highest bidder at the common council chamber on April 3 (q. v.), at three o'clock. The clerk is ordered to insert in the weekly newspapers an advertisement to this effect.—M. C. C., VIII: 82. The notice appeared in the N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775, and in Rivington's Gazetteer, March 23, 1775.
- 15 Isaac Low, in an address "To the respectable Public," makes known his decision not to be a delegate to the continental congress, even if chosen, because he has "long been weary of Politics, which appear . . . to be too much influenced by Melevoience and Faction."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- 16 The Journal gives the list of nominees for deputies (see March 6) who were chosen yesterday by the freemen and freeholders to attend the provincial convention (see April 20). It adds: "From the time of the nomination, every artifice was used (by the same party who have constantly exerted their utmost abilities, to obstruct and disconcert every measure of opposition to the tyrannical acts of the British ministry) in order to prevent the election of the Deputies nominated by the Committee, and to frustrate the design of a Provincial Congress [see May 22], and of sending Delegates . . . to the next General Congress [see May 10]. Before the day of election, a great number of pieces were published on both sides;
full of artifice on the ministerial part, and of sound weighty argument on the other. Between the two, the argument, and the views of each party, were pretty well understood at the day of decision, when the votes of the Freeman and Freeholders were fairly taken." The election resulted in a very large majority in favour of the committee's nominees.—N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775.
Gilbert Forbes, a gun-maker, advertises his shop, opposite Hull's Tavern in Broadway.—N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775.
- 17 The common council unanimously approves and adopts "a Plan of the intended Bridewell [see Nov. 15, 1774] drawn by Theophilus Hardenbrook."—M. C. C., VIII: 82. For the location of the proposed building, see March 27.
- 20 The news from Newport states: "We are well informed that Gen. Gage has 400 of Rivington's papers regularly sent him every week by the post, which are distributed among the army, navy, and such others as are thought most proper to promote the infamous plan of enslaving this country. These papers are doubtless paid for out of the American revenue: Thus, Americans, you already begin to see your own money employed for enslaving yourselves and your children.
- "It is confidently asserted that 60,000 pounds sterling have been remitted from the treasury in England, to be distributed among some hungry d—gs at New York."—N. Y. Jour., March 30, 1775.
- " This being the day appointed for the sale of the ferry from Pecks Slip (see Jan. 26), it is "Struck off to Thomas Ivory for one year from the first of May next for Sixty two pounds, and Subject to the Conditions of Sale by him Signed."—M. C. C., VIII: 83.
- 22 Edmund Burke delivers in parliament his celebrated speech on conciliation with the American colonies. He says almost at the very start that the proposition which he offers is peace. "Not peace through the medium of war. Not peace to be hunted through the labyrinth of intricate and endless negotiations. Not peace to arise out of universal discord, fomented from principle in all parts of the empire. . . . It is simply peace sought in its natural course, and its ordinary haunts. It is peace sought in the spirit of peace, and laid in principles purely pacific. . . .
- "Peace implies reconciliation; and where there has been a material dispute, reconciliation does in a manner imply concession on the one part or on the other. In this state of things I make no difficulty in affirming that the proposal ought to originate from us.
Great and acknowledged force is not impaired, either in effect or in opinion, by an unwillingness to exert itself. The superior power may offer peace with honor and with safety. Such an offer, from such a power, will be attributed to magnanimity. But the concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear."
- He observes that the questions which must be decided are whether parliament ought to concede and what the concession ought to be. He then examines, with minuteness and accuracy, the internal and external, the natural and accidental circumstances of the colonies; he considers them with respect to situation, resources, extent, numbers, amazing growth in population, rapid increase in commerce, fisheries, and agriculture; and from these he points out their great strength and importance. England's export trade had increased tenfold between 1704 and 1772, and the exports in 1772 to the colonies alone were almost equal to the entire export trade of Great Britain in 1704.
- After giving these statistics, Burke continues: "America, gentlemen, I say, is a noble object. It is an object well worth fighting for. Certainly it is, if fighting a people be the best way of gaining them. . . . But I confess . . . my opinion is much more in favor of prudent management than of force; considering force not as an odious but a feeble instrument, for preserving a people so numerous, so active, so growing, so spirited as this, in a profitable and subordinate connection with us."
- He declares that the Americans, through their heredity, education, manners, religious principles, forms of government, and distance from Great Britain, have been imbued with an intense passion for liberty, and will under no circumstances yield to force.
Then he discusses and controverts the different schemes which have been either proposed or talked of for the government of America, and finally offers his resolutions, which, he says, "mean to establish the equity and justice of a taxation of America by grant and not by imposition. To mark the legal competency of the colony assemblies for the support of their government in peace, and for public aids in time of war. To acknowledge that this legal competency has had a dutiful and beneficial exercise; and that experience has shown the benefit of their grants, and the futility of parliamentary taxation as a method of supply."
- Burke presents each of his six resolutions separately, advocates the repeal of the Boston Port Bill and the other coercive laws applied to Massachusetts, and, in conclusion, enters this plea:
"Let us get an American revenue as we have got an American empire. English privileges have made it all that it is; English privileges alone will make it all it can be. In full confidence of this unalterable truth, I now . . . lay the first stone of the temple of peace."
- After a lengthy and animated debate, the resolutions are defeated by a large majority.—Niles, Principles and Acts of the Rev. in Am., 429-53; Ann. Reg. (1775), *105-10.
- Theophilus Hardenbrook, for sundry papers on the battery and the garden at Fort George, ordered by Gov. Tryon, is allowed £9:11:—Assem. Jour. (1775), 84; ibid. (1774), 33.
- 25 The assembly draws up a petition to the king. It states: "The present unhappy and unnatural disputes between the parent state

1775 and your Majesty's American dominions, give us the deepest and Mar. most unfeigned concern . . .

25 "Your Majesty's American subjects have hitherto been in a state of infancy . . . they have now reached the period of maturity, and think themselves entitled to their birthright, an equal participation of freedom with their fellow subjects in Britain. It is with this view we now address your Majesty. We mean not to become independent of the British Parliament; . . . we wish only to enjoy the rights of Englishmen, and to have that share of liberty, and those privileges secured to us which we are entitled to . . .

"Your Majesty's subjects in this colony, think it essential to freedom, and the undoubted right of Englishmen, that no taxes should be imposed on them without their consent given personally, or by their representatives . . .

"We likewise beg leave to declare to your Majesty, that we consider the acts of Parliament raising a revenue in America, but more especially those to provide for the support of civil government, and the administration of justice [see June 29, 1767] . . . and extending the courts of admiralty beyond their ancient limits . . .
 as grievous and destructive of our rights and privileges . . .

"That the imposition of duties upon articles of commerce imported from Great Britain, is oppressive and impolitic, as it gives the greatest encouragement to illicit trade . . .

"We likewise think, the act prohibiting the legislature of this colony from passing any law for the emission of paper currency to be a legal tender therein [see April 18, 1764], is disadvantageous to the growth and commerce thereof . . .

"The late acts for shutting up the port of Boston, and altering the charter of the Massachusetts Bay, we presume not to mention to your Majesty, without first assuring you that we, in many instances, disapprove of the conduct of that province, and beseeching your gracious interposition in their favor; we cannot however help observing that those acts . . . establish a dangerous precedent, by inflicting punishment without the formality of a trial." Addresses similar to this are directed to the two houses of parliament.
 —Assemb. Jour. (1775), 109-17. These were all forwarded on the "Charming Peggy" which sailed March 30 (q. v.).

27 John Thurman writes another letter to Rutgers Bleeker of Albany: "I think we are all in the Wrong both Parties in the House & out, Committees Congresses & Conventions a Spirit of Opposition so frequently excludes Reason & Moderation that Matters are Now got to such a pass as to require more than Human Wisdom to set them right . . . We are told by all the Governours on the Continent if we ask a Redress of our Grievances thro our Assemblies we shall be heard & if our Grievances are real they shall be redressed I am for taking them at their Word & would follow Peace in any way & so far agree with our assembly in their mode—

"I think it was very Wrong to Hurry the House in the Consideration of the Congress [see Jan. 26] this would have come well at the Last of the Session . . . If it were Possible for Great Britain to make peace with America without Degrading herself below the Dignity of a Superior & leade to new Broils I should be easier than I am. But as I think she Cannot grant all thatts asked I fear the Breach will not be healed."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 291.

"The Corporation of this City have laid out a Lot of Ground between the Work-House and the Liberty Pole, for erecting the Bridewell, so much, and so loog wanted in this Place; and we hear the said Building will be set about immediately" (see April 6).—

 started, but the British, in spite of this, used it as a prison (see

"A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be Let, (and entered on the 25th June next) all the large and convenient store-houses at the North-River, which have been for many years past occupied by the crown as provision stores."—N. Y. Merc., March 27, 1775.
 This seems to be the "Arsenal" shown on Pl. 42, Vol. I. It faced the North River between Cortlandt and Dey Sts. To-day, the boundaries of the plot would be Cortlandt, Dey, Greenwich, and Mar.

At a meeting of the committee of 60, in the committee chamber, an advertisement is drawn addressed "To the respectable Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," stating that the committee views with concern and uneasiness the unusual exportation of nails, and fears the distress which a monopoly of this or any other article may occasion, and recommends avoiding "drawing the people of this City into any difficulties or discontents, by exporting or encouraging the monopoly of such great quantities of Nails as may leave a provision for our own consumption precarious, especially as it is not certain whether these Nails, so hastily bought up and exported, are designed to be used or to be stored." The committee also warns the citizens against the "propriety of supplying the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and articles essential to hostilities."—4 Am. Arch., II: 242-43. These recommendations were considered at a meeting of the inhabitants on April 6 (q. v.).

A gentleman in Connecticut writes to John Holt: "Mr.
 James Rivington has often been animadverted on in a public manner, and sundry Resolves have been passed in the differet Colonies, respecting his conduct as a Printer [see March 1]; not only as being partial, but as publishing falsehoods tending to disunite them in their great struggle to support constitutional liberty, destroy their mutual confidence, and render abortive that system of conduct recommended by the Congress as the most certain and advisable expedient for obtaining a redress of our grievances. Mr.
 Rivington, or his partisans, have represented this as an attempt to destroy the liberty of the press. But shall a press disgorge calumny and falsehood with impunity? Shall the most innocent actions of a community be traversed, and the most reputable characters, even Legislative bodies, be traduced with passive tameness? This would be a tacit acknowledgement of the charge. Is it not notorious, that he, while America is anxiously struggling to preserve her constitutional liberties, like an invidious spy, watches every motion towards the grand point, and strives to frustrate every design, by disseminating distrust and falsehood among the people, in order to intimidate or divide them, thereby rendering his press an engine of tyranny, as well as a sink of the most impure productions."—

The sloop "Charming Peggy" sails for Bristol. The general assembly of New York sends by it "an humble, firm, dutiful and loyal petition to his Majesty; as also a memorial to the Lords, and a representation and remonstrance to the commons of Great-Britain [see March 25] requesting their mutual endeavours for a settlement of the present disputes between the mother country and the colonies."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 6, 1775.

A Loudoner writes to a correspondent in Philadelphia: "The behaviour of the New-Yorkers has raised the drooping spirits of the Ministry, and has been the cause of their pursuing their tyrannical measures towards America with tenfold vigour."—4 Am.
Arch., II: 252.

In response to the petition of Jan. 27 (q. v.), the assembly passes "An Act for an indulgence to Persons of Scrupulous Con-sciences in the manner of Administering Oaths."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 783-84. Acts are also passed "to regulate the Pilots and establish their Pilotage between Sandy Hook and the Port of New York" and for the revival of "An Act for the better and more effectual collecting of Taxes in the City of New York."—Ibid., V: 746-52, 766.

The law of Dec. 31, 1761 (q. v.), "for the more effectual prevention of fires," etc., is amended so as to permit the erection of wooden buildings, with roofs of shingles or boards, north of a certain irregular line drawn across the city (as described in the act); but such buildings shall not exceed fourteen feet in height from the street level to the eaves, or have a roof whose elevation exceeds its breadth.
 The act also makes it lawful south of the line above mentioned "to cover the Flat of any roof with Boards or Shingles, provided such Flat do not exceed two equal fifth Parts of the Span of such Roof and there be erected around the same Flat a substantial Balcony or Balustrade and a Platform and Steps to the top of every Chimney."
 —Col. Laws N. Y., V: 743-46. See May 2, 1774.

The last Militia Act of the provincial legislature is passed. It follows the general plan, and, in the main, the provisions of the act of March 24, 1772 (q. v.), with few amendments. It introduces the new provision that the blue coats of the troopers of Albany shall have "White metal Buttons;" and it provides for a uniform

- for the troopers of Kings County which shall be "blue Coats and red Jackets and their Hats laced with Silver Lace." Persons free from enlistment now include "all Firemen within this Colony, . . . All Supervisors, One Founder and six Men to every Furnace and six Men to every Forge, all Colliers and their necessary Servants employed in burning of Coal and all bought Servants during their Servitude," in addition to those persons previously exempted (see Dec. 17, 1743). Every Quaker producing a certificate from one of the monthly meetings of his denomination, that he has been deemed a Quaker for a year or more, shall be exempted "from the ordinary Duties of Training or Mustering unless upon an Alarm, Invasion, Insurrection or Rebellion" (cf. act of Feb. 19, 1755). By the terms of this Militia Act it is to be in force until May 1, 1778.—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 732-43. It then expired.
- " The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay "Unto the Governors of the Society of the Hospital of the City of New York in America [see June 13, 1771] the Sum of Four Thousand Pounds for rebuilding the said Hospital lately consumed by Fire" (see Feb. 28)—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 729. Before the building was finished, the war between Great Britain and the colonies broke out, and the New York "Committee of Safety," on April 2, 1776 (q. v.), ordered that it be used as a barracks for the soldiers.
- " The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay £33:8:2 to John van Dalsam "for Repairs done to the Battery."—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 728.
- 3 The legislature passes an act "to confirm the Proceedings of the Commissioners heretofore appointed by a Law of this Colony [see March 24, 1772] to settle the Line or Lines of Division between the City of New York and the Township of Harlem, and for establishing the Boundary between the said City and Township."—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 841-44.
- " The stalls and standings in the public markets (see March 14) are sold to Abraham van Gelder at the yearly rent of £375, and the wharves and slips to John Bingham at the yearly rent of £500, "subject to the Covenants Contained in the Conditions of Sale."—M. G. C., VIII, 88. For prior leases, see ibid., VIII, 349.
- 5 Colder writes that as the assembly has refused to appoint delegates to the second continental congress (see Feb. 23) the "disaffected party are . . . exerting their utmost influence to obtain an appointment of Delegates by the people. It is not in the power of Government to prevent such measures; they are supported by individuals in their private characters and do not come within the energy of our Laws."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII, 566.
- " The king grants to Drs. Cooper and Chandler allowances of £200 per annum in consideration of their "merit & Services."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII, 569.
- " A royal commission is sent to James Rivington (see March 17) "to be His Majesty's Printer within the Province of N York," and an allowance of £200 per annum is made to him, to be paid out of such fund as the lords commissioners of the treasury shall think proper.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII, 568.
- 6 The address of the committee of 60 to the inhabitants of New York concerning the exportation of nails (see March 29) is read at a public meeting and unanimously approved. The question whether the troops at Boston ought to be supplied with "implements of war, and other necessaries, for carrying on their operations against the people of the Massachusetts Bay" is decided in the negative. Because William and Henry Utick have purchased "spades, shovels and other trenching tools, for the use of the army now at Boston," and have thus helped Gen. Gage, they are voted "invertebrate foes to American freedom," and the people agree "to break off all connection, and dealing with them for the future." After this, a committee of seven is "appointed to wait on the importers of Nails, and request them, not to dispose of those, which they have on hand to any person, who may purchase them with a design to export them out of the province."—N. Y. Jour., April 13, 1775. See also April 13.
- " The common council appoints a committee "to superintend the Building of the Bridewell, to make Contracts, purchase Materials, Audite Accounts &c."—M. G. C., VIII, 88. See July 21.
- 7 A news item in the London Packet reads: "A gentleman lately arrived from New York reports, that the Americans are likely to hold out as long a contest with their enslavers, as any of the ancient Vice-Roys of Mexico ever did against Old Spain; he saw nothing but rubbing up of arms, illisting, exercising, and every other preparation, denoting a vigorous resolution in the people to defend themselves against all opposers to the very last."—London Packet, April 5 to 7, 1775.
- A ship arrives from England with the latest news. Smith says: "Lord Chatham's Speech of 20 Jan<sup>y</sup> [q. v.] gave the utmost animation to the Populace, and there were conventions immediately on it to obstruct the Exportation of Provisions & Straw & Timber & Boards shipping in Transports for Boston. They began with intimidating Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding" (see April 13). At a council held on April 13, the chief business was "to approve a Procl<sup>am</sup> agt<sup>t</sup> those Designs on Representations of Brig<sup>ad</sup> Gen<sup>l</sup> Robertson to the L<sup>o</sup> Gov<sup>t</sup>"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, in N. Y. Pub. Library. Gen. Robertson's report seems to have concerned "a riot in which two transports were cast off from the wharf, and threats of destroying the magazine at Turtle Bay made."—Cal. Coun. Min., 505. At Smith's suggestion, the council decided "that the magistrates be directed to inquire, take Depositions & lay them before us, that we might know the Truth & have solid Grounds to act upon." The mayor and Gen. Robertson were immediately informed of this decision.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. For the mayor's action in regard to the matter, see April 15.
- The "King Fisher" (see Jan. 12) sloop-of-war weighs anchor and proceeds to the North River, "in Order to protect two Transports [see April 24] which lately arrived here from Boston, to take in necessaries for carrying on the Siege of that Place."—N. Y. Jour., April 13, 1775.
- A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," states that "a number of the Freeman, Freeholders, Merchants, and others," met "at the house of the Widow Van de Water" and appointed a committee to dissuade Messrs. Utsticks and others from supplying the British army under General Gage with implements of war. This broadside, which is signed "By Order of the Meeting," adds that, "to our inexpressible grief, they were found to be so infatuated with the hopes of gain, that no impression could be made on their minds, of the cruelty, or injustice of their conduct." It is therefore thought by "the Meeting" to be absolutely necessary "once more, in the present posture of affairs, to collect the sense of the city and county, on the propriety of furnishing the troops with hay, straw, &c. as well as boards and plank; the former of which will enable the General . . . more effectually to take the field, and the latter to make platforms for the artillery, &c." Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding have been employed to furnish these articles, for which transports have been sent to New York. It is "earnestly requested that the Freeman, Freeholders, and other inhabitants of the city and county will meet at VI o'clock on next Saturday evening [April 15], at the Liberty-Pole, in order to signify their sense on the present occasion. . . ."—From one of the original broadsides in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- An effigy is hung up "by some of the lower class of inhabitants, at New-Brunswick, . . . representing the person of Mr. Rivington, the printer at New-York, merely for acting consistent with his profession as a free printer."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 20, 1775.
- In executing the council's orders (see April 11), Mayor Hicks makes a blunder. He mistook one's intention merely of gaining "Information," Smith says, and on this day "Sears & one Willet were brought before him on warrants. "Willet gave Bail—Sears refused & was carried to the New Jail & there rescued at the Door, & paraded thro' the Town at 4 in the Afternoon & then carried to the Liberty Pole where agreeable to previous notices by printed Billets the Populace convened to punish Thurman & Harding—Sears took this opportunity to ask them, whether he should give Bail & the majority were for it—Hardings House was search'd but he escaped—Thurman's was not attacked. . . . the magistrates & others expressed the Fury of the Multitude—The poor Mayor was in the Fields, while these Councils were held with all his Bailiffs, as meer Cyphers. . . . Thus every Day produces fresh Fuel to the General opposition. . . . De Lancey was in the Crowd in the Fields, help'd to save Will Bayard who by Speeches exposed himself to Insult. . . . & in the Even<sup>g</sup> he patrolled alone between the Mob & Thurman's in Oswego Street."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, op. cit. On April 21 (q. v.), Mayor Hicks explained to Smith his reasons for issuing the warrants against Sears and Willet.
- The battle of Lexington occurs, and the Revolutionary War begins. About 1,000 British troops under the command of Lieutenant-Col. Smith, having been ordered by Gen. Gage to destroy the 1775 colonial stores at Concord, crossed the Charles River on the night of the 18th and started toward Lexington. The people, however, had been aroused by patriot expresses, and the troops found a company of Minute-men drawn up on Lexington green. A skirmish ensued in which several provincials were killed, and then the British proceeded to Concord. Here they destroyed cannon and ammunition, and set fire to the court-house. One party left to guard Concord bridge was opposed by a body of provincials. Shots were fired from both sides until finally the detachment had to retreat to the main body at Concord. By this time, the militia had begun to assemble from all parts of the country in such large numbers that Col. Smith found it imperative to retreat from Concord. He had sent to Gage for reinforcements, but the 1,200 men despatched by the general under Earl Percy did not meet the retreating troops until they had reached Lexington. With the aid of two field pieces brought by Percy, the British made a stand at Lexington for about an hour. When they again proceeded on their march, they were closely pursued by a large force of colonial militia under the command of Maj.-Gen. Heath. Firing continued all the way to Charles-town Neck, and then the British, under the protection of the "Somerset" man-of-war, got safely into the city.

American sources claim that the regulars fired first at both Lexington green and Concord bridge, and British accounts put the blame on the provincials. For a good bibliographical list of sources, see Justin Winsor's The Reader's Hand Book of the Am. Rev., 26-34.

John Thurman of New York writing on May 6 to Thomas Brown, probably of London, said that "3 or 400 [colonials] beat 1200 [regulars] & Really put them in Confusion Several Times & had they been 10 miles farther from Boston by all accounts they never would have got Back."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser. IV: 292. For the arrival of the news in New York, see April 23. See also Addenda.

Rev. Samuel Auchmuty, in a letter to Capt. Montresor, says: "We have lately been plagued with a rascally Whig mob here, but they have effected nothing, only Sears, the King, was rescued at the Jail door. He was ordered there by the Magistrates upon his refusing to give bail for being guilty of misdemeanors, &c. [see April 15]. Our Magistrates have not the spirit of a louse; however, I prognosticate it will not be long before he is handled by authority."—4 Am. Arch., II: 350.

The provincial convention summoned for the purpose of appointing delegates to represent the colony of New York in the second continental congress meets at the exchange. Deputies from the counties of New York, Albany, Ulster, Orange, Westchester, Dutchess, Kings, Suffolk, and Queens are present. Philip Livingston is unanimously elected president. On April 21, the convention chose James Duane, John Alsop, John Jay, Simon Boerum, Philip Livingston, William Floyd, Henry Wisner, Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Lewis Morris, Francis Lewis, and Robert K. Livingston as the delegates to the congress. Their credentials as such were read and approved on April 22.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 1-5.

A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of New-York, and all the British Colonies," containing extracts from London letters, is published. One, of March 2, reads: "Part of the troops now ordered for embarkation here and in Ireland, are to rendezvous at New-York, to make it a place of arms, securing the defection of that Province, from the general alliance in the cause of Freedom . . . and to prevent the communication, between Virginia, Maryland, and the other southern Colonies, with New-England, where General Gage, with such assistance as he may get from New-York, is to subdue those Colonies first, and then all America; in which, if he succeed, New-York is to be a garrison town and place of arms, and with the assistance of Quebec, to rule with a rod of iron all the States of America; for without New-York, every Gentleman and man of knowledge in this kingdom is fully convinced the schemes is impracticable."

Another letter, dated March 1, states: "The measures of Ministry, will, I hope do more towards uniting the colonies, than any efforts of America itself . . . They have high hopes of success from the last accounts from New-York—I trust the people of that province, will soon disperse those treacherous varies, in your assembly, who dare thus negatively to encourage the system of despotism now adopted for your government . . . Several names are made use of here, as authorities to warrant the defection of America . . . in New-York—the Delanceys—J. Watts, &c. &c. &c. . . They most assuredly correspond with some ministerial people here . . . Pray print this short hint for the observations of the honest men among you."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Loyalist correspondent ("Anti-Licentiousness") discusses in Rivington's paper the disturbances created in the city by the Sons of Liberty, which he likens to the buzzing of "harmless insects" which "have at length made a feeble essay to sting as well as make a noise." After a published notice regarding non-importation of nails, a "certain set," assembled "first at Philips' beer-house [the Horse & Cart Inn], next at Bardin's [Hamden Hall], then at the Liberty Pole, and lastly at Van Der Water's [Nassau St.] . . ." A later meeting, he records, was held, on April 15, at the "Liberty Pole," at which Capt. Sears was apprehended and carried before the mayor. Bail was refused him and he was carried toward the jail, but was "set at liberty from the officers of justice, and led in triumph through the town." After describing these events, the writer continues: "For fear of being too prolix, I shall omit the exploit to Turtle Bay, the march to the Transport in the North-River, in consequence of which she was cut off from the wharf, and the buzzing through the town, and cry of No Boards! at the Albany Pier; which being on the evening of Captain Lawrence's arrival, doubtless proceeded from their joy on the good tidings he brought [see April 11], and is a mark of gratitude and a proof that they are actuated by nothing but the pure dictates of liberty."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 20, 1775.

"The Wind-Mill in the Bowers Lane, with the six valuable lots of ground on which it is built," is advertised to be sold on this day at the Merchant's Coffee House.—N. Y. Merc., March 20, 1775.

In relation to the events of April 15 (q.v.), Smith writes: "I saw the Mayor at my own House—ask'd him why he did not take my Hint & bring in his Depositions for the Council to act upon them that the Saddle might be put upon the right Horse. Out came the Secret, that some of the Council had urged him on to save themselves . . . That within ½ an Hour after he left us he was accosted by a Person who told him that he heard the Council had ordered Sears to be taken up—He remembered well he said that I told him in Council that he was to inquire & bring in his affidavits—That he so intended if he had not been urged by Reports as before—That he finds he was made a Catts Paw of by Fellows who had not the Courage to support him after the Rescue in preventing the Search of Hardings House—That Sears & Mc Dougall were useful in preventing Thurman's—He said he suspected some wanted Matter of Accusation ag<sup>t</sup> him—That he called all the Magistrates together on Saturday morning [April 15] & they all agreed to his issuing the Warr<sup>t</sup> that Day ag<sup>t</sup> Sears & Willet." After giving this account Smith adds, in a note, his private opinion concerning the occurrence: "I suspect that Morris the Friend & Wallace the Brother in Law of Isaac Low hoped to find a Way to make Low Mayor next Michaelmass. The Mayor has disappointed them—Low refuses this Day to set in the Convention of Deputies—This is probably part of the Scheme, but Tryon will be hear before that Time, as he writes me . . . That he has Leave of absence only till May & hopes to see me in June or July."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

News of the battle of Lexington (see April 19) reaches the city at about noon on this day (Sunday) by an "express," who left while the conflict was still in progress. His story was substantiated by documents signed by the principal men of the New England towns through which he passed. In the afternoon these "interesting advices" were issued as a broadside without the printer's name. One of these is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. and is here reproduced as Pl. 42A, Vol. IV. Although this broadside is mentioned by Evans (No. 14337), that of April 25 (q.v.), printed by John Holt, is often erroneously spoken of by collectors as "the Lexington broadside."

On April 24 this account of the battle was published in the N. Y. Merc.

Col. Marcius Willett relates that the receipt of this news in New York "occasioned an Impulse in the Inhabitants which produced a general Insurrection of the Populace who assembled and not being able to procure the Key of an arsenal where a number of arms belonging to the Colonial Government were deposited forced open the door and took possession of those arms consisting of about 600 Muskets and Bayonets & Catridge boxes to each filled with ball Catridge 3. These arms were distributed among the most active of the Citizens who formed themselves into a Voluntary Corps and assumed the Government of the City. They possessed themselves of the keys of the Custom-house and took possession of all the public stores. There was a general stagnation of business. The armed Citizens were Constantly parading about the City Without any Definite object.—From "Colonel Marius Willett's Narrative," in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 54-55; cf. Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, under date of April 24.

In a signed certificate dated Sept. 6, 1775, Jacobus Stoutenburgh stated that when the account of the battle of Lexington arrived there were 522 muskets under his care in the city hall, and that "sundry persons" took these away with the "Accoutrements;" that 28 muskets and their "Accoutrements," which had been given to Isaac Stoutenburgh to clean, were also taken, and six iron bullet-moulds. He estimated each musket and its accoutrements to be worth £3:5. On Sept. 29, 1784, the common council ordered an investigation, with the intention of applying to the legislature for reimbursement.—M. C. C. (MS.), VIII: 171.

Judge Thomas Jones gives this account of the happenings in New York: "On Sunday morning the 23d of April, a confused account arrived from Boston, of a skirmish at Lexington between a detachment of the Kings troops, and a party of the rebel army; the republicans instantly took the alarm; they had wished for it for a long time, they received the news with avidity. Isaac Sears, John Lamb and Donald Campbell (a half pay officer) paraded the town with drums beating and colours flying, (attended by a mob of negroes, boys, sailors, and pick-pockets) inviting all mankind to take up arms in defence of the 'injured rights and liberties of America.' The posts were stopped, the mails opened, and the letters read. In the afternoon, a number of the faction under their old leaders, of whom Peter R. Livingston, John Smith, Joshua Hett Smith, Leonard Lispenard, Jr., and Anthony Lispenard, were the most active, seized upon a sloop loaded with provisions for Boston, unloaded her, and cast the cargo into the dock. On the same evening the same set of fellows, under the same leaders broke open the Arsenal in the City Hall, and forcibly took away 1,000 stand of arms, belonging to the City Corporation, and delivered them out to the rabble, to be used as the demagogues of rebellion should direct. The whole city became one continued scene of riot, tumult, and confusion. Troops were enlisted for the service of rebellion, the Loyalists threatened with the gallows, and the property of the Crown plundered and seized upon wherever it could be found.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 39-40.

Private letters sent to England in the early part of May, after mentioning the unloading of the provision ships and the seizure of the arms, stated that "most of the Soldiers were made Prisoners."—St. James's Chron., June 10-13, 1775. For other reports of the effect in New York caused by the news of the battle, see April 27 and 29, and May 3; also the "Diary of Rev. Mr. Shewkirk, pastor of the Moravian Church, New York," in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 101.

A letter from Wethersfield, Connecticut, reads: "The eyes of America are on New-York; the Ministry have certainly been promised by your leading men, that your Province would desert us. . . . Take care of your selves; we have more than men enough to block up the enemy at Boston, and if we are like to fall by treachery, by Heaven we will not fall unrevenged on the traitors; but if balls or swords will reach them, they shall fall with us. It is no time now to dally, or be merely neutral; he that is not for us is against us, and ought to feel the first of our resentment. You must now declare most explicitly, one way or the other, that we may know whether we are to go to Boston or New-York. If you desert our men will be cheerfully attack New-York as Boston; for we can but perish, and that we are determined upon, or be free."—4 Am. Arch., II: 363.

Lieut.-Gov. Colden informs the council "that last Night a Number of Persons violently Seized five hundred and thirty stand of Arms which belonged to the City and were Lodged in the City Hall, that they also Seized the public powder House, and have put a Guard of fifty Men to maintain it; that they have been Parading thro' the Town this Day, and have Proclaimed a meeting of the Inhabitants this Afternoon, in order as it is said to chuse Military Officers, when they declare their Intention is to oblige his Majesty's Troops, which are now in the Barracks in this City to lay down their Arms." The advice of the council is desired "in this Alarming Exigency of Affairs."—Coun. Min. (MS.), XXVI: 431 (Albany). Apr. 24

Smith reports that, in order "to know our Strength," the council decided to hold another meeting at half past four and ordered "the Judges in Town the Field officers of the Militia the Mayor & Recorder" to attend. At this conference "Lispenard said he could give Gov't no Aid from the Militia for they were all Liberty Boys who would keep the Peace of the City in other Respects—The Mayor said that the Magistrate Authority was gone—Judge Livingston that all was quiet in Dutches, & Jones said the same of Queens—They withdrew Lispenard asserting that he did not believe there was any Design upon the Soldiers—We were then unanimously of Opinion that we had no Power to do any Thing & the best mode of proceeding for private Safety and general Peace was to use Disavowal from Violence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

Judge Jones, erroneously reporting the meeting under date of April 23, states that he "boldly proposed that the militia should be called out, the riot act read, and if the mob did not thereupon disperse, to apprehend and imprison the ringleaders, and by such coercive means to secure the peace of the City. This proposal was instantly opposed by William Smith, one of his Majesty's Council, who openly declared 'that the ferment which then raged in the city was general and not confined to a few; that it was owing to a design in the British Ministry to enslave the Colonies, and to carry such design into execution by dint of a military force; that the battle of Lexington was looked upon as a prelude to such intention, and that the spirit then prevailing in the town (which he represented as universal) would subside as soon as the grievances of the people were redressed, and advised to let the populace act as they pleased.' Nobody replied, the times were critical, a declaration of one's sentiments might be dangerous, the Council broke up, and nothing was done."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 40-41.

A letter from New York, printed in the Penn Journal, states: "I do not doubt but the interesting news from Boston [see April 19] must give every good and virtuous man much concern, that from present appearances a reconciliation between us and Great-Britain, is at a farther distance than we of late had rational grounds to hope, surely this proceeding on the part of General Gage, is not the olive branch held up by government. Yesterday this whole city was in a state of alarm, every face appeared animated with resentment, soon after the news arrived by express, many citizens went to two transports loaded with bread, flour, &c. for the troops, and they were speedily unloaded."

Another letter of this date, written from New York, reports: "When the accounts from Massachusetts-Bay came to town yesterday, the inhabitants went immediately down to two sloops that were loaded with provisions for the parliamentary army at Boston, and discharged them before night; so that in future there will not be found any hardly enough in this place to send any articles thither for the navy or army."

Still another letter of April 24 gives this account: "This city [New York] was alarmed yesterday [April 23, 9 a.] by a report from the eastward, that the king's troops had attacked the Massachusetts Bay people; the report was confirmed a few hours after by the arrival of St. Croix from Rhode-Island and an express from near Boston; the Committee was soon called and an express sent off to your city [Philadelphia], as you will have particulars by him before this reaches you I need say no more. There were two sloops here loaded with flour for the soldiers at Boston, by Mr. Watts; the people went Sunday as it was, and unloaded them in a hurry. Towards evening they went and secured about half the city arms, a guard of 100 men I am told was to be placed at the city hall to secure the rest of the arms, and another hundred at the powder house, this was not done by the magistrates but by the people—Several arrivals from the eastward since the express, confirm the report of a battle between the Regulars and Provincials, but differ in the number of killed, &c. The last account I think is, that about 100 Regulars were killed, among whom were two Captains, and 30 taken prisoners,—and about 50 Provincials killed and 4 taken prisoners."—Penn. Jour., April 26, 1775. Cf. Cal. Coun. Min., 505; Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. Wars, I: 40.

A broadside, "Printed from the attested Original, by John Holt," is published. It begins: "This Day, about Noon, arrived a second Express from New-England, with the following important Advice;—i. e., a letter from Wallingford, of April 24, giving more 1775 particulars of the battle of Lexington. The account is attested by Apr. committees in the towns through which the express passed. One of these handbills is owned by Miss A. B. Jennings, New York; see also Evans, No. 14338.

" A Virginia delegate to the congress (see April 20) writes: "The storm thickens very fast. The New-Yorkers have received intelligence that their Town is to be fortified, and fourteen Regiments to be sent there to cut off the communication between the Southern and Eastern Colonies; this has united them to a man in the American cause. They are forming themselves, and beg assistance from the Southland."—4 Am. Arch., II: 387

" An address from Philadelphia is directed "To Messieurs Delancy, White, Colden, Watts, and Cooper, of New-York." This paper, signed "Three Millions," declares: "It appears, from a number of authentick letters from London, that the present hostile preparations against the American Colonies were occasioned by nothing but assurances from you of the defection and submission of the Colony of New-York. It is impossible to unfold the extensive and complicated nature of your crimes. You have defeated the attempts of the Congress to bring about a constitutional reconciliation with Great Britain. You have involved your fellow-subjects in Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies, in all the distresses which must speedily fall upon them from an interruption of their Trade with America. But you have done more; You have unsheathed the sword of Britain, and pointed it against the bosom of your Country. You have held up a signal for a civil war; and all the calamities of Towns in flames, a desolated Country, butchered fathers, and weeping widows and children now lay entirely at your doors. Go now, ye paricides, to the Press of your associate, James Rivington, and there satiate yourselves with your triumph. But do not presume too much upon the impunity of Bernard, Hutchinson, and other traitors to America. Repeated insults and unparalleled oppressions have reduced the Americans to a state of desperation. Executions of villains in effigy will now no longer gratify their resentment. The blood of your unfortunate British and American fellow-subjects, who have already fallen in Massachusetts-Bay, calls to Heaven for vengeance against you. The injury you have done to your Country cannot admit of a reparation. Fly for your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners."—4 Am. Arch., II: 389.

16 The committee of 60 issues the following notice: "The Committee having taken into consideration the commotions occasioned by the sanguinary measures pursued by the British ministry [see April 19] . . . are unanimously of opinion, that a new Committee be elected by the freeholders and freemen of this city and county. . . . That the said Committee consist of 100 persons. . . . And this Committee is further unanimously of opinion, that at the present alarming juncture, it is highly advisable that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned; and that it be recommended to the freeholders and freemen . . . to choose at the same time that they vote for the new Committee aforesaid, twenty deputies to represent them at the said Congress . . . to meet at New-York on . . . the 22d of May next" (q.v.).—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The same notice, as a broadside, is in the collection of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See May 1.

17 Judge Robert R. Livingston writes to his wife that "the town has been in a continual bustle enquiring into the Boston News of which we have not yet a clear account. . . . People here are perfectly fearless, I mean the Whigs and the Tories turn Whigs so fast that they will soon be as much united as they are in the Massachusetts Colony."—Biographies of Francis Lewis and Morgan Lewis, by Julia Delafield (N. Y., 1877), II: 224.

" "The ill Success of the Troops at Boston concerning which we know nothing certain but that they had the worst of it, has induced all Parties here to cry out for committees & Congresses, & a Hand Bill now circulates for the Enlargement of the Committees, & for a provincial Congress. Arm'd Men parade the Town & there is to be a great Meeting to form Companies this Day in the Fields."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

" A broadside is published announcing the names of 100 men "recommended to the Public, as proper to be elected for a General Committee for the City and County of New-York, in the present alarming Exigency," and the names of 20 men recommended as deputies to the provincial congress. One of these is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. and is reproduced as Pl. 43, Vol. IV.

18 A letter of this date from the New York committee to the counties, requesting them to elect delegates to the provincial Apr. congress, and signed by Isaac Low, chairman, states: 28

"Most of the Deputies who composed the late Provincial Congress, held in this city [see April 20], were only vested with powers to choose Delegates to represent the Province at the next Continental Congress; and the Convention having executed that trust, dissolved themselves

"It is therefore thought advisable by this committee, that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned to deliberate upon, and from time to time, to direct such measures as may be expedient for our common safety.

" . . . We therefore entreat your county heartily to unite in the choice of proper persons to represent them at a Provincial Congress, to be held in this city, on the 22d of May next. Twenty deputies are proposed for this city. . . ."—Jour. Provin. Cong., (1842), 5. See May 22.

29 Wm. Smith records in his diary: "It is impossible fully to describe the agitated state of the Town since last Sunday [April 23] when the News first arrived of the Skirmish between Concord & Boston.—At all Corners People inquisitive for News—Tales of all Kinds invented believed, denied, discredited—Sunday in the afternoon . . . 2 Sloops laden by Watts for Boston with Provisions unladen On that Night the City Army broken open & Powder taken out of the Powder House—The Taverns filled with Politicians at Night—Little Business done in the Day—few Jurors and Witnesses attend the Courts. armed Parties summon the Town publicly to come and take arms & learn the Manual Exercise—They are publicly delivered out and armed Individuals shew themselves at all Hours in the Streets—Consternation in the Faces of the Principal Inhabitants. . . . Sears yesterday afternoon with 360 armed men waited on Eliot the Collector and got the Keys of the Custom House to shut up the Port—The Merchants are amazed & yet so humbled as only to sigh or complain in whispers. They now dread Sears's Train of armed Men—Friday Morning [April 28] he went with the Pride of a Dictator & forbid the Polls objecting to the List proposed by the Committee—The better Sort Whigs & Tories were astonished and cry out for a Committee. In the afternoon the Post arrives from Phil<sup>a</sup>—a Paragraph in Bradfords Paper charging as in a Letter from England De Lancey Watts Cooper & White with sending for Troops—The Populace rage—De Lancey went among the Crowd & offers his Oath of Denial—The Utmost Pains taken to assuage the Multitude who meant to proceed to execute them immediately . . . Saturday White called upon me & drew up a Denial upon oath Watts & De Lancey having published affidavits—a meeting in the Fields at 2 P.M.—I did not attend tho' some of the Council did Watts & De Lancey in Particular—All Parties ran this Morning to sign an Association at the Coffee House—This seemed to give Peace and moderated the Field Business which evaporated in approving the Association—Thanking Sears for removing Cannon from the Docks to Kings Bridge which he began upon yesterday on News that Gen<sup>l</sup> Gage had given orders for seizing Cannon & Merchant Ships at Marble Head & Salem—Whiggs & Tories formed this Day's convention at the Liberty Pole in earnest for establishing the Power of the Committee as a general Provincial Congress . . ."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV; cf. Shewkirk's diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 102.

" A "General Association," bearing this date, is agreed to, and subscribed by the freeholders, freemen, and inhabitants of the city and county of New York. It is as follows:

"Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America depends, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants, in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety; and convinced of the necessity of preventing the anarchy and confusion on which attend a dissolution of the powers of government: We, the freemen, freeholders and inhabitants of the city and county of New-York, being greatly alarmed at the avowed design of the Ministry to raise a revenue in America; and shocked by the bloody scene now acting in the Massachusetts Bay, do, in the most solemn manner resolve, never to become slaves; and do associate under all the ties of religion, honour and love to our country, to adopt and endeavour to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress, or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention for the purpose of preserving our Constitution, and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary and oppressive acts of the British Parliament,

1775 until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America, on Apr. 29 constitutional principles, (which we most ardently desire,) can be obtained: And that we will, in all things, follow the advice of our General Committee, respecting the purposes aforesaid, the preservation of peace, and good order, and the safety of individual and private property. Dated in New York, April and May, 1775.—Jour. Provin. Cong. (1842), I: 5; N. Y. Jour., May 4, 1775; The Remembrancer (1775), 90.

30 "This afternoon some of the new England Provincials came to Town."—From Shewkirk's Diary, op. cit., 102.

" A New Yorker, in a letter to the committee of correspondence in Portsmouth, N. H., says: "At this time of general confusion through the Colonies, nothing can give greater pleasure to every well-wisher to his Country, than the unanimity that takes place through the Continent, more especially at this City; as it is evident . . . that Administration have put the greatest dependence on the Yorkers breaking with the other Colonies [see April 25]

. . . Yesterday about six or seven thousand men were out on the plain, among whom were some families who have been in the opposition; one and all unanimously voted to defend their liberties, &c., at all hazards [see April 29]. They have stopped clearing to the Custom-House, have taken all the city arms and ammunition from the Hall and Magazine [see April 19]; every preparation is making to completely arm the inhabitants; great numbers of people are employed hauling the cannon from the City to King's bridge, about fourteen miles, where they will immediately intrench.
 All denominations are under arms, and in high spirits. It is the opinion of almost every one in this place that the Acts of Parliament would have been repealed, had it not been for the encouragement given Administration by this place, that the Colonies would break their union. No people can be more despised, nor more frightened than those here who have been inimical to their Country, particularly the eleven Members of the House [see Jan.
 26]. Mr. Rivington has made a recantation; President Cooper has decamped; and it was with much difficulty the people were prevented from taking the lives of those who they have considered as traitors to their Country. All Government seems to be laid aside. The City is now to be regulated by a Committee of Safety, consisting of one hundred worthy men" (see May 1).—4 Am.
Arch., II: 448-49.

May 1 A New Yorker writes to a friend in England: "The News of the Attack at Boston reached New-York on Sunday the 23d, and that very Day the Populace seized the City Arms, and unloaded two Provision Vessels bound for the Troops at Boston. In the Course of the Week they formed themselves into Companies under Officers of their own chusing, distributed the Arms, called a Provincial Congress, demanded the Keys of the Custom-House, and shut up the Port, traioed their Men publicly, covenanted the Citizens by Beat of Drum, drew the Cannon into the interior Country, and formed an Association of Defence in perfect League with the Rest of the Continent, which is signing by all Ranks, Professions, and Orders.

"The Congress sits in ten Days: If General Gage does not irritate us again, perhaps, they may propose Terms for a Re-Union; but I almost despair of it."—St. James's Chron., June 15-17, 1775.

One hundred men (see April 26) are chosen a "General Committee for the City and County of New-York, in the present alarming Exigency." At the same time, twenty-one delegates to the provincial congress (see May 23) are elected.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775; N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 600-1. For the list of names, see Pl. 43, Vol. IV. The committee of 100, this chosen, did, so far as membership is concerned, represent the city.
 Fifty-five of the old Sixty were members of the One Hundred.
 Of these fifty-five, seven at least became loyalists, fifteen at least were prominent radicals, the rest were men who were likely to follow the lead of Jay, Duane, and Philip Livingston. . . . Of the forty-five new members, seven had been members of the Fifty-One; of these seven, two became loyalists, one was a radical, and the other four cannot be very definitely placed. Thirty-eight members of the One Hundred had never been members of either the Fifty-One or the Sixty. Of these at least nine became loyalists; three were among the most conspicuous radicals in the city, John M. Scott, John Lamb, and Daniel Dunscomb. . . . the rest reflected all degrees of loyalty, and were included doubtless precisely for that reason."—Becker, Hist. Political Parties in the Prov. of N. Y., 1760-1776, 197-98.

The committee of 100 receives an address from Samuel Broome, May 1 in behalf of the "Military Association" of 100 inhabitants which he has been chosen to command. It is an expression of the desire of the company "to support your resolutions respecting the preservation of American liberty, of the peace and good order of the City, the safety of individuals (unless proscribed by you) and of private property; upon every occasion we will cheerfully take our tour of duty."—4 Am. Arch., II: 467; cf. Leake, Life of John Lamb, 102-3.
 This is undoubtedly the company or "Military Association" referred to in the undated document reproduced as Pl. 45, Vol. IV.
 See May 4 and 15.

The public is informed that the treasury office "is removed to the House where Mr. Justice Livingston formerly lived, nearly opposite to Chapel-Street."—N. Y. Merc., May 1, 1775.

The provincial council grants leave to Col. Lisenpard to call out his regiment of militia for drill.—Cal. Coun. Min., 505.

Edward Willert, formerly of the York Arms in Broadway, opens a tavern in Broad St. near the exchange.—N. Y. Merc., May 1, 1775.

In a voluminous letter, addressed to "Dear Vardill," and signed "A Real Churchman," the recent events to prevent political conditions in New York and the country generally are cursorily described, and advice is given how the situation should be met by Great Britain. The original of this pro-British, anti-Republican, letter is among the Egerton MSS. in the British Museum (cited 2135
 f. 5), and there is a copy of it in the Library of Congress.

The committee of 100 (see May 1) sends forth from the "Committee-Chamber" this resolution: "Resolved unanimously, that it be recommended to every inhabitant, to perfect himself in Military Discipline, and be provided with Arms, Accoutrements, and Ammunition, as by law directed. Ordered, That the above resolve be immediately made public. By Order of the Committee, Isaac Low, Chairman."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 11, 1775.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "the first accounts of an action between the Kings Troops and People, near Boston [Lexington], was published [see April 23] with horrid and aggravating circumstances. The moment of consternation and anxiety was seized.
 The people were assembled, and that scene of disorder and violence begun, which has entirely prostrated the Powers of Government, and produced an association by which this Province has solemnly united with the others in resisting the Acts of Parliament." 3

The committee has caused the custom-house to be closed. The military force at New York consists of a sloop of war ("King Fisher"—see April 12) and 100 men of the Royal Irish Regiment, commanded by Major Hamilton. "This small Body of Troops are quartered in the City Barracks without any kind of Protection but in their arms. Lord Dunmore when in this Governm't converted the Fort Barracks into Stables, and dismantled the Fort itself which before that time was a sufficient security against the attempts of a Mob. . . . The Posts between this place and Boston are stopped."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 571-72.

The committee of 100 has learned that the post master has discharged the "Eastern Post-rider." A sub-committee appointed to discover the reason reports that the post master said "That the four last mails between New-York and Boston have been stopped, the mails broken open, many of the letters taken out and publicly read . . . and that the riders informed him that it was not safe for them to travel with the mail; in consequence of which, they were dismissed by him until they could carry the mail with safety as heretofore." The sub-committee issues a notice stating as its opinion of the best way to continue a correspondence with the eastern colonies that "the present Eastern Post-riders be employed to depart from this City on the usual days, and to go the usual stages; and the public is hereby informed that Mr.
 Ebenezer Hazard has undertaken to receive and forward Letters from this City. . . . it will be necessary (in order to prevent Letters from being opened by the Committees on the road) that they be inspected here by some well known member of the General Committee, and by him endorsed."—4 Am. Arch., II: 480-82.

A letter from New York says: "The late unhappy affair at Boston [see April 19] has had most amazing effects through every part of America; in this city it is astonishing to find the most violent proposals meeting with universal approbation!—The whole city is arming and removing the cannon to a strong pass about 18 miles off, where a camp will be formed. . . . Many families are retiring into the country, all business declining fast, and in a few weeks we expect will totally cease. The port here was stopped in 4

1775 a tumultuous manner a few days ago, and is not yet opened; but May that will be done this day . . . The Governor and Council have 4 represented to the King the state of the province, and given as their opinion that no propositions of reconciliation are likely to take effect until all hostilities are suspended . . . God only knows what will be the issue of these unhappy disputes; every hour and every drop of blood spilled, put the hope of a reconciliation at a farther distance. It is my opinion, from the present spirit of the people, that there is a determined resolution to die with arms in their hands, or establish the liberties of the country on a permanent footing.—London Chron., June 13-15, 1775. See May 25.

" Instructions are given to Gov. Tryon at Whitehall to return to New York. He is informed that "The rebuilding the Governors House, Secretaries office, and the Hospital, are considered by the King as very commendable Services, and his Majesty is graciously pleased to allow you to assent to any Bills, that either have been, or shall be preferred, for making provision for defraying the expense of those services, either by Lottery or in any other mode the Assembly shall think fit to adopt." The subject of granting charters to the Dutch and Presbyterian Churches, and to King's College, was also considered.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 572-74.

" An advertisement of this date reads: "Those Gentlemen who incline to iolish in a Company of Foot, are requested to send their names to the house of Mr. Jasper Drake, where may be seen the articles of the Company. Note, no person can be admitted that is above 5 feet 8 inches high.—N. Y. Jour., May 4, 1775.

" "In the Harriet Packet, which will this day sail for England, goes [as] passenger Lieutenant-Colonel John Maunsell [see May 15, 1767], (who has resided in this province 12 years, and is well acquainted with it) in order to lay before administration a true state of the colony: It must be supposed, as this gentleman has long served his Majesty, and being still a servant of the Crown, that his report will be favourably received.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The ship carries a letter from Lieut-Gov. Colden to Lord North which says: ". . . So many gentlemen have since taken the resolution to go over in this Packet, that your Lordship may have the best Information from a variety of Hands."
 —Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 20. Roger Morris and John Watts, of the provincial council, are among the passengers.— N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775. Morris returned in the autumn of 1777 (q. v.).

" James Rivington addresses the public in these words: "As many Publications have appeared from my Press which have given great Offence to the Colonies, and particularly to many of my Fellow Citizens; I am therefore led by a most sincere Regard for their favourable Opinion, to declare to the Public, that Nothing which I have ever done, has proceeded from any Sentiments in the least unfriendly to the Liberties of this Continent, but altogether from the Ideas I entertained of the Liberty of the Press, and of my duty as a Printer. I am led to make this free and public Declaration to my Fellow Citizens which I hope they will consider as a sufficient Pledge of my Resolution, for the future, to conduct my Press upon such Principles as shall not give Offence to the Inhabitants of the Colonies in general, and of this City in particular, to which I am connected by the tenderness of all human Ties, and in the Welfare of which I shall consider my own as inseparably involved.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. See May 10.

5 The "General Committee of Association" (committee of 100) draws up a letter to the lord mayor and magistrates of London
 "on the Subject of American Wrongs." Among Great Britain's offenses against the colonies are listed: "The Duty on Tea—oppressive Restraints on the Commerce of the Colonies,—the Blockade of the Port of Boston,—the Change of internal Policy in the Massachusetts and Quebec,—the Establishment of Popery in the latter,—the Extension of its bounds,—the Ruin of our Indian Commerce by Regulations calculated to aggrandize that arbitrary Government,—unconstitutional Admiralty Jurisdictions throughout the Colonies,—the Invasion of our Right to a Trial in the most capital Cases by a Jury of the Vicinage,—the horrid Contrivance to screen from Punishment the bloody Executioners of ministerial Vengeance,—and, not to mention the Rest of the black Catalogue of our Grievances, the hostile operations of an Army who have already shed the Blood of our Countrymen." The committee has been induced to send this address by "A sincere Regard to the public Weal and the Cause of Humanity, an hearty desire to spare the further Effusion of human Blood, our Loyalty to our Prince . . . and a full Conviction of the warmest Attachment in the Capital of the Empire to the Cause of Justice and Liberty," and it is confident that "the same cogent Motives will induce the most vigorous Exertions of the City of London, to restore Union, mutual Confidence, and Peace to the whole Empire." The letter is signed with 91 names.—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., II: 510-12. Among miscellaneous N. Y. City MSS. (in box Ch.-El.) in MSS. Div., N. Y. Pub. Library, is a pamphlet containing a facsimile of this letter. The original is probably in the Guildhall, London.

" Lieut-Gov. Colden informs the provincial council of his intention to go to his country seat at Flushing, L. I. On June 3, the council meeting was held in "Brookland," but on June 28 (q. v.), when Gov. Tryon returned, meetings were resumed in New York.

6 The Massachusetts and Connecticut delegates to the continental congress arrive in New York on their way to Philadelphia.
 "They were met a few Miles out of Town by a great Number of the principal Gentlemen of the Place, in Carriages and on Horseback, and escorted into the City by near a Thousand Men under Arms; the Roads were lined with greater Numbers of People than were ever known on any Occasion before. Their Arrival was announced by the ringing of Bells and other Demonstrations of Joy:
 They have double Centries placed at the Doors of their Lodging."

8 Philip Livingston, James Duane, John Alsop, and Francis Lewis, of New York City, with Col. William Floyd of Suffolk and Simon Boerum of Kings county, delegates from New York (see April 20), set out to attend the continental congress at Philadelphia. They are attended "by a great train to the North River Ferry . . . and it is said about 500 Gentlemen crossed the ferry with them, among whom were 200 of the militia under arms."

" A broadside, entitled "Extract of a Letter From Philadelphia, To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst." published on this day, reads: "Yesterday evening Dr. Franklin arrived here from London in six weeks . . . which has given great joy to this town, he says we have no favours to expect from the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no opposition will be made to their troops, those that are now coming are for New-York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New-York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin is highly pleased to find us arming and preparing for the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition, will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition, and lifted up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour, every letter and every paper from here, are read by them."—From an original in 9 Another resolution is published by order of the committee of 100: "Resolved 1st. That any person in this City, or County, who has arms, ammunition, or the other articles necessary for our defence, in dispose of; or shall import any of those articles for sale, and shall not within ten days after the publication of these resolu-

1775 tions, or in ten days after the importation, of such arms, ammunition, &c. aforesaid, inform the Chairman, or Deputy Chairman, of this Committee, of the quantity, and quality of the same; he shall be held up to the public as an enemy to this country.

9 "Resolved 2d. That any person in this city or county, who shall, during the unhappy contest with our parent state, dispose of any arms, ammunition, or other articles aforesaid, to any person, knowing, or having reason to believe such person to be inimical to the Liberties of America; or shall put those articles in the hands of any such person; or any other person, knowing or having reason to believe that they are to be used against those liberties; he shall be held up as an enemy to this country."—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775; Rivington's Gazetteer, May 18, 1775.

10 The second continental congress assemblies, in Philadelphia. Only three of the New York delegates, Livingston, Duane, and Alsop, are present. Peyton Randolph, of Virginia, is chosen president.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 11.

" Dr. Myles Cooper, president of Kings College, barely escapes from a mob attack. During the night, "his lodgings in the College were forcibly entered by a mob, to the fury of which, had he been found there, he would probably have fallen a victim. A few days previous had been published a letter, dated Philadelphia, April 25, 1775, addressed to Dr. Cooper and four other obnoxious gentlemen of New-York, ascribing to them, and to their assurances of the defection of the latter city, all the hostile proceedings of England . . . They are denounced as parricides, and told that the Americans, reduced to desperation, will no longer satisfy their resentment with the execution of villains in effigy; and the letter concludes—'Fly for Your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners. [Signed] Three Millions.' But the design of his enemies was frustrated by one of Dr. Cooper's former pupils, who, preceding the throng of several hundred men, admonished him of his danger just in time to save him. He escaped, only half dressed, over the College fence; reached the shore of the river, when he found shelter in the house of Mr. Stuyvesant, where he remained for that day, and during the night following took refuge on board the Kingfisher."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 297-98, footnote.

Lieut-Gov. Colden thus describes the incident in a letter of June 7: "The recent instance of Disorder . . . was a most scandalous outrage upon Dr. Cooper, the president of our College. He narrowly escaped being seized by a Mob, who broke the College Gate open, and would certainly have committed the most violent abuse upon him if he had not happily saved himself by Flight. The Doctor is since gone from this distracted country to England . . . The odium excited against him is for warm attachm<sup>t</sup> to Government and his being a supposed author of almost every peice that was published on that side of the Question."—Ibid., VIII: 581.

In 1774, Cooper had published The American Querist, "By a North American. New York 1774." "This pamphlet on the 8th of September was, in full convulge of the Sons of Liberty in New-York, committed to the flames by the hands of the common executioner." Another pamphlet, The Friendly Address to all Reasonable Americans on the Subject of our Political Confusions, published in 1774, is commonly attributed to him (see Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1904, p. 46), although Dr. Hawkins, in Historical Notices of the Church of England in the Colonies, says it was written by Rev. Dr. T. B. Chandler of Elizabethtown.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 297, footnote. The proceedings of the continental congress called down his wrath again, and he published his opinions of that body under the title, What think ye of Congress now? He included in his condemnation "the nominal sons of Liberty but the real sons of Licentiousness, Faction and Confusion." Such productions soon made Cooper "one of the most thoroughly hated men in America. . . . Among those who answered him was one anonymous writer of great acuteness, one who finally got the better of him in the argument. This proved to be young Alexander Hamilton, then a student. Cooper, however, took no personal offense."

It must be conceded that Cooper's "Torism inflicted upon the College incalculable injury. The institution was—naturally, perhaps, but most unjustly—believed to sympathize with his views, and so came to be regarded as a nest of Tories; Whereas, as subsequent events proved, the President was the exception, and both officers and students were with almost entire unanimity heartily devoted to the cause of their country. To Cooper's personal unpopularity, and to the false impression which his attitude had created, may be attributed the peremptory demand of the Committee of Safety that the College buildings be surrendered for military purposes, the sudden suspension of all exercises, the dispersion of the library and scientific apparatus, and the much more serious loss of popular confidence. It remained for the alumni to restore that confidence and to vindicate the loyalty of their Alma Mater, and this task they nobly achieved."—From A. Leroy Jones's sketch of Myles Cooper LLD., in Columbia University Quar., I: 347-57. See May 17.

Foiled of their prey, in the attack upon Dr. Cooper, the mob next attacked Rivington, who was rescued by one or two friends, and subsequently sought refuge on board a man-of-war in the harbour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 568, footnote. In writing of the event to Dartmouth, Colden said: "Mr Rivington the Printer of one of our newspapers was attacked by the same Mob and rescued out of their Hands by the Resolution of one or two friends. He has since taken refuge on Board of the Man of War and will not yet venture to return to his House. His Crime is only the Liberty of his Press."—Ibid., VIII: 581. See, further, May 20.

The New York "Association" draws up an address to Lieut-Gov. Colden, stating, among other things, that "This City and County, as well as the rest of the Colony, have exercised the greatest Patience in waiting thro' in vain, for a redress of the many unconstitutional Burdens upon which this whole Continent has groan'd for several years past. To their inexpressible grief they have found, that the most dutiful applications for Redress have not only been rejected but have been answered by reiterated violations of their Rights." The members declare: "That our Constituents, while they cheerfully yield that the legislative of the Parent State may make Provisions in their Nature merely calculated to regulate the Trade of the empire, yet they claim as their indefeasible Birth-right a Total exemption from all Taxes internal and external by Authority of Parliament," etc. A recital of specific grievances follows. They inform Colden that, though they are arming, it is "to defend the liberties of the subject, and to enable your Honor and those in office under you efficaciously to administer the just Government of this Colony." They express their apprehension of the results which may follow the arrival of troops which are expected from Great Britain. They appeal to Colden to see that the troops do not land or encamp here.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 583-85; 4 Am. Arch., 533-35.

Colden answered this address of the association on May 13, exhorting them "not to irritate the present enraged state of [the people's] minds, nor suffer them to plunge into Labrynthos from whence they can neither advance nor retreat, but through Blood and Desolation." He informed them that he suspected the report of the expected coming of troops from Great Britain (of which he had not been informed) had been invented "to facilitate the introduction of an arm'd Force from Connecticut," which he is told is meditated.—Ibid., VIII: 586. The Mercury states that the address was presented to Colden and his answer given on the same day, May 13, and that in answering he was "so affected that he shed many Tears."—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775.

A New Yorker writes: "By the last accounts from England we hear that the Americans are to expect no favour from the Ministry; that there were four thousand troops and some men of war coming out for this place; the people seem determined to oppose their landing; it is expected this place will soon be reinforced with five or six hundred troops from Connecticut to assist the opposition. I dread the consequences."—London Chron., June 22-24, 1775.

A committee of the Massachusetts congress writes from Water-town to the "Committee of Inspection" at New-York: "Gentlemen: We are directed by the Congress of this Colony, who are just informed that two men-of-war, the Asia, and one other, with three or four companies of Troops on board, sailed yesterday from Boston for your place, to give you the earliest notice thereof."

"It is supposed that they have orders to secure the ammunition and military stores in the Fort of your City, etc., and your noble exertions in the common cause have given the Congress reason to think that a timely information relative to the matter would be important to you. . . ."—4 Am. Arch., II: 556. See May 26.

"Till a constitutional post office is settled by the Continental Congress, letters will be received at, and carefully forwarded, both eastward and westward, from J. Holt's Printing Office, in Water-street, near the Coffee-House, by riders of character and 1775 property, whose ability and faithfulness may be depended on." May 11 The posts "set out every Thursday morning, eastward and westward, from New York."—N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775. See, further, June 1, and Oct. 23.

" Cornelius Haring, Presents his most respectful Compliments to the Public, and informs them that on . . . the first of May, he opened the New Established Ferry, from the remarkable pleasant and convenient situated place of William Bayard, Esq. at Hobuck—from which place all Gentlemen Travellers and others . . . will be accommodated with the best of boats . . . to convey them from thence to New York, near the new Corporation Pier, at the North River, opposite Vesey-Street, at which place a suitable house will be kept for the reception of travellers . . . by Mr. Talman [see Feb. 26] . . . The boats are to be distinguished by the name of the Hobuck Ferry, painted on the stern."—N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775.

15 Edmund Burke, in the house of commons, moves "That the Representation and Remonstrance of the General Assembly of the colony of New York [see Mar. 25] be brought up." In presenting the motion, Mr. Burke said that the paper was a "complaint in the form of a Remonstrance, of several acts of parliament, some of which as they affirmed, had established principles, and others had made regulations subversive of the rights of English subjects. That he did not know whether the House would approve of every opinion contained in that paper; but as nothing could be more decent and respectful than the whole tenor and language of the Remonstrance, a mere mistake in opinion upon any point, ought not to hinder them from receiving it, and granting redress on such other Matters as might be really grievous, and which were not necessarily connected with that erroneous opinion. They never had before them so fair an opportunity of putting an end to the unhappy disputes with the colonies as at present; and he conjured them, in the most earnest manner, not to let it escape, as possibly the like might never return. He thought the application from America so very desirable to the House, that he could have made no sort of doubt of their entering heartily into his ideas, if the noble lord (North) some days before, in opening the budget, had not gone out of his way, to pass a panegyric on the last parliament; and in particular to commend as acts of lenity and mercy, those very laws, which the Remonstrance considers as intolerable grievances. This circumstance, indeed, did somewhat abate the sanguine hopes of success which he had entertained from this dutiful procedure of the colony of New York. That he was so ill as not to be able to trouble them, if he were willing with a long speech. He had several times in the session, expressed his sentiments very fully upon every thing contained in that Remonstrance; as for the rest it spoke so strongly for itself, that he did not see how people in their senses could refuse at least the consideration of so reasonable and decent an Address."

Lord North spoke with appreciation of New York, and said that "he would gladly do any thing in his power to shew his regard to the good behavior of that colony: but the honour of parliament required, that no paper should be presented to that House, which tended to call in question the unlimited rights of parliament. That they had already relaxed in very essential points; but could not so much as hear of any thing which tended to call in question their right of taxing. As to Quebec duties, by which the province of New York was affected, as he did not pretend to be infallible, he confessed they were not laid exactly as they ought to be, and he was willing to give satisfaction in that point immediately. This however was but a trifle to the general objects of the Remonstrance."

Mr. Cruger modestly pointed out that "The assembly of New York have pursued this path; they have endeavoured to put a truce to resentment and tumult, and, while the other colonies (in the frenzy of riot, commotion, and despair) have nearly annihilated the powers of their legislatures, and rush on to civil war, they dutifully submit their complaints to the clemency of the mother country."

"Such conduct Sir, cannot but meet the approbation of this House . . .

"Policy and justice recommend the encouragement of such a spirit and conduct. It will induce others to copy their example. . . . In their present addresses to the throne, and both Houses of Parliament, though they may have extended their claims and complaints a little too far, . . . they could not at this particular crisis, wholly disregard the opinion of their sister colonies."

He further showed the injustice of stating, "as a reason for rejecting a petition from British subjects and in an English House of Commons, that they [the colonists] claimed a right of giving and granting their own money by their own representatives.

"And, Sir, as a retutation of many unjust charges alleged against them, they particularly disclaim all intentions and desire of independence. They confess the necessity of a superintending power in parliament. . . . Permit me then, Sir, to beseech the House not to turn a deaf ear to their requests."

Mr. Aubrey remarked that the right under which parliament had taxed the colonies "is at best obsolete, if a thing never practised can become so. Now, a right that has become obsolete is very near akin to no right at all; and when revived is as offensive as if it had never previously existed. . . . And here the Americans seem equally excusable (as the rebels against Charles I) for not admitting a principle, which may be abused to their ruin. . . . Whenever a minister wants money for bad purposes and finds the nation clamorous against his raising it at home, what so natural for him as to supply his wants by the Plunder of another nation."

Mr. Fox pointed out the folly of not listening to the petition of New York. "What is there," he said, "to hinder the people of New York from trading with the interior country as before? Every thing is just the same; there are no troops to hinder them passing and repassing as usual. Is there so much as an officer to receive that duty which is directed to be paid? It is mentioned, to convince you of your ignorance in taxing America. You make an act of parliament to raise a revenue in that country, and you not only make a capital blunder, but stumble at the threshold of collecting it."

Gov. Johnstone observed: "Ministers have long declared, they wished for a dutiful application from one of the colonies, and now it is come they treat it with scorn and indignity." He was severe on Mr. Cornwall for saying it came only from 26 individuals. "These 26 are the whole assembly," he said. "When the question to adopt the measures recommended by the congress, was negatived by a majority of one only, in this assembly of 26 individuals, the ministers were in high spirits; and these individuals were then represented as all America."—Parl. Hist of Eng., XVIII: 645-50.

"The City and County of New-York having through the delegates of that colony, applied to the congress for their advice how to conduct themselves with regard to the troops expected there, —The Congress . . . Resolved, That it be recommended for the present to the inhabitants of New-York, that if the troops, w<sup>ch</sup> are expected should arrive, the s<sup>d</sup> Colony act on the defensive so long as may be consistent with their safety and security: that the troops be permitted to remain in the barracks, so long as they behave peaceably and quietly, but that they be not suffered to erect fortifications, or take any steps for cutting off the communication between the town and country; and that if they commit hostilities or invade private property, the inhabitants should defend themselves and their property, and repel force by force; that the warlike stores be removed from the town; that places of retreat in case of necessity be provided for the women and children of New-York; and that a sufficient number of men be embodied and kept in constant readiness for protecting the inhabitants from insult and injury."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 49-52.

"The Martial Spirit diffused through this Province at this Juncture is almost beyond Conception; many new Companies have been already raised in this City, and several more are in Contemplation, most of them are in very neat Uniforms; much of their Time is spent in perfecting themselves in the Manuel Exercise, and several of them are already so compleat as to vie with the best Veterans."—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775. See also May 1 and 4.

The committee of 100 resolves, "That it be recommended to the Ward Companies of Militia . . . to enroll their men in the different beats, so that they may be in readiness to take their tour of duty as a Military Night Watch for this City, and it is recommended to the men in the different Wards to appear punctually for that purpose."—4 Am. Arch., II: 618; N. Y. Jour., May 18, 1775.

The Penn. Jour. observes: "We hear from New-York, that the well known Dr. Cooper, and his Printer, James Rivington [see May 10], have taken sanctuary on board a man of war, from whence it is said they intend for England. We hope the Non-exportation Agreement to Great-Britain will always except such traitors to the Liberties of America."—Penn. Jour., May 17, 1775. See May 24.

The committee of 100 decides upon the following "Directions for a Military Watch in the City of New York:"

"First. That a guard be mounted every evening at eight o'clock, at the City-Hall, consisting of not less than forty men properly officered.

"Second. That detachments be made from the said guard to patrol the streets every two hours, under the command of a non-commissioned officer, accompanied by a constable or other civil officer, who may be directed by a Magistrate to attend from nine o'clock in the evening until five o'clock in the morning.

"Third. That they pay particular attention that no Provisions be exported from this City; and if any persons are discovered exporting Provisions contrary to the Resolves of this Committee, to take particular notice of them, and endeavour, by persuasion and other peaceable methods, to prevent it, and that they make a report thereof.

"Fourth. That the patrols do not challenge persons, boats, &c., but watch their motions, if suspected, and by all means endeavour to prevent outrage on person or property, and report the perpetrators.

"Fifth. That no unnecessary and wanton alarm be given to our fellow-citizens, either by firing of guns, beating of drums, or otherwise, in the night, but that all their operations be conducted with that manly prudence and discretion becoming citizens zealous to support their freedom without tumult and disorder.

"Sixth. That the commanding officer of the guard dismiss his guard at five o'clock in the morning, and report in writing by ten o'clock, to the Chairman, Deputy, or Chairman pro tempore, all extraordinary occurrences which may have happened during the time of his being on duty, signed by himself."—4 Am. Arch., II: 636-37; N. Y. Merc., May 22, 1775. For later regulations see Dec. 15.

James Rivington sends the following address to the continental congress: "Whereas the subscriber, by the freedom of his publications during the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and her Colonies, has brought upon himself much public displeasure and resentment [see March 29], in consequence of which his life has been endangered, his property invaded, and a regard to his personal safety requires him still to be absent from his family and business; and whereas it has been ordered by the Committee of Correspondence for the City of New-York, that a report of the state of his case should be made to the Continental Congress, that the manner of his future treatment may be submitted to their direction [see June 3] . . . He humbly presumes that the very respectable gentlemen of the Congress . . . will permit him to declare, and, as a man of honor and veracity, he can and does solemnly declare, that however wrong and mistaken he may have been in his opinions, he has always meant honestly and openly to do his duty as a servant of the publick . . . He declares that his press has been always open and free to all parties, and for the truth of this fact appeals to his publications, among which are to be reckoned all the pamphlets, and many of the best pieces that have been written in this and the neighbouring Colonies in favour of the American claims. However, having found that the inhabitants of the Colonies were not satisfied with this plan of conduct [see March 1], a few weeks ago he published in his paper a short apology, in which he assured the publick that he would be cautious, for the future, of giving any further offence [see May 4]. To this declaration he resolves to adhere, and he cannot but hope for the patronage of the publick so long as his conduct shall be found to correspond with it. It is his wish and ambition to be an useful member of society . . ."—4 Am. Arch., II: 836-37. Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., II: 216-18. See May 28 and June 3.

Deputies from several colonies in the colony assemble at the "Exchange" for the purpose "of forming a Provincial Congress." As there are not enough members present, the meeting adjourns.

On May 23, the majority of the deputies had arrived, and the provincial congress began its session. Isaac Low, Peter van Brugh Livingston, Alexander McDougall, Leonard Lispenard, Joseph Hallett, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasier, Isaac Roosevelt, John de Lancey, James Beckman, Samuel Verplanck, Richard Yates, David Clarkson, Thomas Smith, Benjamin Kissam, John Morin Scott, John van Cortlandt, Jacobus van Zandt, John Marston, George Fulliot, and Walter Franklin represented the city and county of New York. Deputies from the counties of Albany, Dutchess, Ulster, Orange, Goshen, Suffolk, Westchester, Kings, and Richmond were also present. Peter V. B. Livingston was elected president, and the rules of the congress were decided upon. —Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 7-9; N. Y. Merc., May 29, 1775; 4 Amer. Arch., II: 1241.

A gentleman in New York writes to a friend in London: "Upon a calculation made here, we have upwards of 600 tons of lead in and about this town, which will be removed as soon as possible. The women and children are quitting the town fast. I expect to see it in ashes before long; which, I hope, may be the case of every one in the continent rather than our liberty should be wrenched from us. We are in expectation of receiving another supply of powder very soon."—London Chron., June 27-29, 1775.

An advertisement announces: "The New Caravan to drive from Powles Hook to the New Bridge above Hackensack to set out from Powles Hook on Saturday the 28th inst."—N. Y. Merc., May 22, 1775.

Dartmouth writes to Tryon that if a reconciliation between Great Britain and the colonies be affected, "it will be and ought in Justice to be attributed in great measure to the moderation and good disposition which has appeared in the Assembly of New York."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 575.

The provincial congress resolves: "That this Congress will, before they rise, provide the best ways and means in their power, as Representatives of the People, for the discharge of such money as is now lent or shall be subscribed, or otherwise advanced or supplied on the public faith, to defray the charges that are or shall be incurred in the present exigencies of the Colony . . . or that shall hereafter be expended or incurred by recommendation of the Continental or of this Provincial Congress."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 10; N. Y. Merc., May 29, 1775.

Dr. Cooper (see May 10 and 17) sails for Bristol in the "Exeter," having remained for near two weeks previously on board the "King Fisher," commanded by Capt. Montagu, "where he thought fit to shelter himself from the resentment of a people, who consider him as the writer of several pieces highly injurious to the liberties of America."—Penn. Jour., May 31, 1775.

The continental congress decides upon the following: "1. Resolved, that a post be immediately taken and fortified at or near King's bridge in the colony of New York, that the ground be chosen with a particular view to prevent the communication between the city of New York and the country from being interrupted by land.

"2. Resolved, that a post be also taken in the highlands on each side of Hudson's River and batteries erected in such manner as will most effectually prevent any vessels passing that may be sent to harass the inhabitants on the borders of said river. . . .

"3. That the militia of New York be armed and trained and in constant readiness to act at a moments warning; and that a number of men be immediately Embodied and Kept in that city and so disposed of as to give protection to the inhabitants in case any insult should be offered by the troops, that may land there, and to prevent any attempts that may be made to gain possession of the city and interrupt its intercourse with the country.

"4. That it be left to the provincial congress of New York to determine the number of men sufficient to occupy the several posts above mentioned, . . . as well as to guard the City, provided the whole do not exceed the number of three thousand men, to be commanded by such officers as shall be thereto appointed by said provincial congress; and to be governed by such rules and regulations as shall be established by 6th Congress until further order is taken by this Congress. . . .

"5. That it be recommended to the 6th provincial congress that in raising those forces they allow no bounties or clothing, and that their pay shall not exceed the establishment of the New England colonies."—*Jour. 1775 In my letter of March 1st . . . I informed your Lordship that May I had suggested to Admiral Graves the propriety of sending one 26 of the large Ships to this Place. He answer<sup>d</sup> that I might expect the Asia here by the 1st of April. I am heartily sorry she was not, for I really think the Countenance of that Ship would have had a good effect by encouraging some and discouraging others—The friends of Government saw no security for their persons or property but by joining with the multitude.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 581-82. See May 27.

Samuel Tuder writes to the provincial congress in behalf of the officers of the “Independent Company of Artillery:” “That they have made considerable progress in forming, training and exercising the said company; and flatter themselves that, if properly supplied, they may, at this critical period prove of signal service to the Province. There are no carriages for even such cannon as they have pitched on to use until brass field-pieces be provided. Quite destitute of ammunition, and the necessary apparatus, they cannot exert themselves with that effect for the defence of the Colony, which they are emulous of contributing to. They therefore pray you will take the matter into consideration, and grant such relief in the premises as you in your wisdom shall think fit.”—4 Am.
Arch., II: 845. On June 1, the congress ordered that Tuder “be desired to provide carriages, rammers and sponges, and such other things as are necessary for four guns for training his company.”— “Military Club. The officers of the Independent and Ward Companies of Militia of the city of New-York, are requested to 27 Colden writes from “Spring Hill” to Capt. Vandeput of the “Asia:” “Your arrival at New York [see May 26], with his Majesty’s Ship under your Command gives Me particular Satisfaction. I only regret that the Admiral did not find it consistent with his Majesty’s Service to send Me so necessary an Aid much sooner. You will be surprised Sir to find how entirely the legal authority of Govern<sup>mt</sup> is now superceded in this place, where only a few Months agoe the Prospect of public affairs gave so much satisfaction to the Friends of Government.

“When Congresses and Committees had taken the entire direction of the Government, it was extremely disagreeable to Me to remain a Spectator of the Proceedings and confusions in Town, which I had it not in my Power to prevent; I therefore retired to this Place on Long Island where I shall be very happy to see you whenever you can make it agreeable to yourself.

“I entirely agree with C<sup>t</sup> Gage that it will be most proper for the five Companies of the royal Irish Reg<sup>t</sup> under Major Hamilton’s Command to embark on board the Asia. I have advised the Major to consult with you upon this Proposition, and think it is necessary that the Embarkation should be conducted both with secrecy and caution to avoid the wicked Measures that may be stir<sup>d</sup> up on the Occasion.”—Colden Papers (1877), 413.

“In a letter to Maj. Isaac Hamilton, Colden says: “The very disagreeable Situation the five Companies under your Command have been in for some Time past has given Me a great deal of Concern. I am of Opinion that it cannot in any way advance his Majesty’s Service to keep the Troops in that Situation, and therefore have no doubt that the Measure proposed to You by Gen<sup>l</sup> Gage is the most proper of any that can be pursued at this Time
 . . . My advice to you is Sir that after consulting with him [Capt. Vandeput] and fixing on the best Plan for embarking you should get the five Companies on board the Asia as soon as possible. It will be necessary to keep this Intention entirely secret, and to effect the Embarkation in such way as to give the People the least Notice you possibly can of it.”—Colden Papers (1877), 413-14.

“Abraham Lott, having received an order from the purser of the “Asia” to supply the ship with provisions, writes to the provincial congress to ask “whether the order shall be complied with, and whether he shall be at liberty to supply the said ship with such other provisions as she may from time to time have occasion for, for her own use, during her stay in this Colony.”—4 Am.
Arch., II: 846. In regard to this, the congress decides that Lott may furnish any provisions asked for, but that he shall report, from time to time, to the congress or to the committee of 100, “a list of the supplies so made.”—Ibid., II: 1257. See June 20.

Richard Henry Lee writes from Philadelphia to Gouverneur May Morris: “The friends of virtuous liberty in New York have certainly effected a most important change in the political system of that flourishing City. . . . It is most certain that a profligate Ministry have greatly relied on the assistance of your fine fertile Province for carrying into execution their cruel system; a system by which existing millions, and millions yet unborn, are to be plunged into the abyss of slavery, and of consequence deprived of every distinction that marks the man from the beast. But happily for the cause of humanity, the Colonies are now united, and may bid defiance to tyranny and its infamous abettors.

“You will see that Mr. Rivington’s case [see May 20] is involved in all of a similar nature, which are to be determined on by the Colony Conventions where the offence is committed. I am sorry, for the honour of human nature, that this man should have so prostituted himself in support of a cause the most detestable that ever disgraced mankind. But he repents, and should be forgiven. It is not yet too late to exert his powers in defence of the liberty and just rights of a much injured Country.”—4 Am. Arch., II: 726. See June 3.

The committee of 100 passes the following resolution: “Whereas the public Service of the Colony may render large supplies of the following Articles absolutely necessary, upon sudden emergencies, this Committee doth therefore recommend, to all our fellow-citizens, who are possessed of any Onzaburgs, Ravens Duck, Brown Russia Sheetting, etc, Not to dispose of them until the Provincial Congress shall determine on the expediency of detaining them for our own use. . . .”—From one of the Banker broadsides (lot 81), sold by Henkels, Phila., March 25, 1898.

The New York provincial congress, in writing to the colony’s delegates at the continental congress, says that “there is no powder to be purchased in this City, and scarce any in the whole Colony; . . . a very considerable number of the inhabitants are without arms.”—4 Am. Arch., II: 1260.

Francis and Campbell announce that they have “opened the large commodious house lately occupied by Edward Bardin, the corner of Warren-Street, in the road to the Water Works,” where “coffee, hot rolls, mead, cakes, and every other genteel entertainment,” will be provided. They also announce that they continue to keep the Queens Head Tavern, near the Exchange.—N. Y.
Merc., May 29, 1775. See Feb. 27.

An advertisement reads: “Henry Pursell, Engraver, Begs leave to acquaint his friends in particular, and the public in general, that he has removed from Broad-Way to Dock-Street, nearly opposite the Old Coffee-House, where he carries on the Engraving Business in its different branches.” He engraves copper plates of all kinds, arms, crests, “Free Masons medals, . . . mourning rings, door plates, dog collars, &c.”—N. Y. Merc., May 29, 1775. “Pursell also probably engraved in wood; as the English coat of arms included in the head line of Rivington’s ‘Royal Gazette,’ New York, 1780 is signed ‘H. P.’” For a further account of Pursell, see Stauffer’s Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 216-17. One engraving by him is listed in Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 219.

A further appropriation of £600 is made for “the New-York Water Works.”—M. C. C., VIII: 93. For earlier appropriations,

The inhabitants of Mecklenburg County, N. C., at a general meeting agree to resolutions savouring strongly of independence: “Whereas by an Address presented to his Majesty by both Houses of Parliament in February last, the American colonies are declared to be in a state of actual rebellion, we conceive, that all laws and commissions confirmed by, or derived from the authority of the King or Parliament, are annulled and vacated, and the former civil constitution of these colonies, for the present, wholly suspended. To provide in some degree, for the exigencies of this county in the present alarming period, we deem it proper and necessary to pass the following Resolves.” Other resolutions declare that the provincial congress of each colony, under the direction of the continental congress, is vested with “all legislative and executive powers within their respective provinces, and that no other legislative or executive power, does or can exist at this time, in any of these colonies;” announce a county meeting at which the inhabitants are to form themselves into nine companies and choose a colonel and other military officers; and provide for the preservation of peace, the administration of justice, and the collection of taxes. One states that anyone who hereafter receives

1775 a commission from the king, or attempts to exercise a commission May received heretofore, "shall be deemed an enemy to his country," June 31 and shall be tried.—N. Y. Jour., June 29, 1775. Regarding the controversy over the date and substance of the "Mecklenburg Resolves," see Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 256-57

" It is resolved in the provincial congress at New York: "That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this Colony in general, immediately to furnish themselves with necessary arms and ammunition; to use all diligence to perfect themselves in the military art; and if necessary, to form themselves into companies for that purpose, until the further order of this Congress."—*Jour. Provin.
Cong.*, I: 21; The Remembrancer (1775), 117.

" Colden writes from "Spring Hill" to Gen. Gage: "Major Hamilton having communicated to me your Excellency's Letter to him, I had no doubt of the Propriety of advising him to put the five Companies of the 18th Regt. under his Command on board the Asia [see May 27]. They have never made above 100 Men, and have ever since the affair at Boston [see April 19] been in a very critical situation.

"After writing my opinion on this subject I had the pleasure of a visit from Capt<sup>n</sup> Vandepout . . . and then found that there was such a Number of Women and Children belonging to the Troops, as would by no means be taken on Board the Asia [see June 5], it was therefore agreed by Us that the Troops must remain in the Barracks. You will hear from Major Hamilton what Pains are taken to debauch his Men, and how successfully high Temptations are offered to Deserters.

"I hear the spirit of arming and parading still continues to rage High in Town, & that several Independent Companies are form'd, who are clothed in this form, & Exercise every Day. I have no room to expect that affairs are yet in a State among Us to take a Turn for the Better.

"It is said to be resolved by the Continental and our provincial Congress that a very large Sum of Paper Money shall be issued.
That the Port of New York shall be shut up when the others are.
A fortification is to be raised at Kings bridge, and one on each side of Hudson's River. The Impositions which such Measures must produce, may make the People uneasy & dissatisfied, and they may then perhaps take up Resolution enough to return to legal Government."—Colden Papers (1877), 415-16.

June John Holt announces in his newspaper that "A Constitutional 1 Post-Office is now kept, at J. Holt's Printing-Office, in Water-Street, near the Coffee House, New York Where Letters are received in, and carefully dispatched by Riders." He publishes full particulars. He explains that he has been a great sufferer "by the Stoppage and Obstruction given to the Circulation of his News-Papers by the Post Office, which has long been an Engine in the Hand of the British Ministry, to promote their Schemes of enslaving the Colonies, and destroying the English Constitution." He expresses the hope that those who have encouraged him will favour his application for the position of post master; and "He humbly requests the Favour, Concurrence and Assistance of the Honorable Convention of Deputies for this Colony, in his Appointment to the said Office."—N. Y. Jour., June 1, 1775.

3 The members of the provincial congress "being informed that orders have been received from the General [Gage] for the embarkation of the troops now in this city . . . earnestly recommend it to the inhabitants . . . not to obstruct the embarkation of the said troops, but to permit them to depart this City peaceably."— Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 28. See June 6.

" Rivington writes to the provincial congress: "Having been just now informed that my case has been referred to the judgment of the gentlemen of the Provincial Congress of this City [see May 28], and that it may probably be considered by them this morning, I have been employed the little time allowed me, to copy and enclose the letter from the gentlemen of the New-York Committee, and my own address to the Delegates in the Continental Congress [see May 20], and added a newspaper, in which is inserted my address to the publick [see May 4], that the gentlemen of the very respectable Board . . . may be acquainted with the whole proceedings in the matter."—Am. Arch., II: 899.

The letter from the committee of 100 reads: "The agitation of this Town respecting Mr. Rivington, as a printer, has given this Committee much concern. Some of the warm friends of liberty seem not to be fully satisfied that his former offences, as they were

June against the whole Continent, are within our authority; and we are 3 concerned that nothing less than a determination of the General Congress will give full satisfaction on that head, much less secure him in his person and property. We have therefore resolved to refer his case to your respectable body, and would beg leave strongly to urge it as a subject of their consideration. We have adopted temporary expedients; but as they are merely temporary in effect, as far as concerns him, we beg the direction of that body, whose determination we doubt not will be a law to the Continent.
His transgressions are known to your whole body. He has subscribed our Association, and we know not that he has since his subscription done any thing contrary to its true intent and meaning."—Ibid., II: 899-900. See June 7.

4 This being the king's birthday, a royal salute is fired by the "Asia" (see May 26). "The crew then gave three cheers, which were answered by some of the inhabitants from the docks.—There were we hear no illuminations in the city . . . except one house, the lights of which, it is said were, on the request of the spectators, presently withdrawn. Not that the people had the least disaffection to his majesty's family or person; on the contrary, they approve his title, and are friends to monarchical government.— But take every opportunity to shew their abhorrence of the public measures pursued during the greatest part of his reign, the permission of which is imputed to him."—N. Y. Jour., June 8, 1775.
On June 3, an announcement had been made that there was "No power in the magazine for the usual salute to the king's birthday."
Cal. Coun. Min., 505.

" A Londoner writes: "The duplicity of New York will ever render them suspected. The many and repeated assurances given to the Ministry by their quondam leaders, will justify a suspicion, which the conduct of some of the merchants and traders confirms, that they would adopt any means to break through or elude the Association."—4 Am. Arch., II: 903.

5 Colden writes to Gerard Banker, the provincial barrack-master: "Major Hamilton intending soon to move the Troops out of the Barracks, has desired Me to lend them some Blankets and Utensils, which appearing to Me to be necessary in their present Situation, you will please to let the Major have what Blankets and utensils he wants taking particular and proper Receipts for whatever you lend."—Colden Papers (1877), 418.
In a letter of the same date to Major Hamilton, Colden reveals that the difficulty entertained earlier (see May 31) in regard to the removal of the troops has been obviated "by removing the Women to Governor's Island."—Ibid., 417.

" William Smith, writing to Col. Lewis Morris, delegate from Westchester Co. to the continental congress at Philadelphia, says:

"You are called upon by every Motive of Honor & Interest, Policy and Patriotism, to ponder well upon the strange look of this tremendous Hour. . . .

"Among the many Objects that probably present themselves to your Mind, I think your Attention should be principally directed, to the present overture of Administration, however disinclined you may be to subscribe an Assent to it. Remember that the last Congress widened the Controversy unnecessarily, by a Denial of the whole Legislative Authority of Great Britain. . . . It was a just Idea formed by our English Friends in the Commencement of this unhappy Quarrel, that an Authority to tax us, was not requisite to maintain the Legislative Supremacy of the Nation—And if the contending Parties, could be brought to adopt this Principle in a reasonable Extent, all Animosity would instantly cease. . . .

"The present is the precise Moment for attempting this good Work. . . .

"As to the Mode of answering the British Proposal, it cannot be very Material. . . . The Nature of the Answer itself is the great desideratum.

"Certainly it should in the most explicit Manner shew your Loyalty to the King—your Affection to Great Britain, and your abhorrence of a Separation. . . . You will next lament the present Calamities so destructive to both Countries, and (without a Word about Rights) proceed to state the Line of Conduct that will calm the stormy, troubled Sea of Discontent—Then you will in Terms of the most explicit Affection, declare your Readiness to contribute to the Expencies of the Nation, upon Confidence that all future Aids are to be expected in the Way of Requisition, and . . . that your internal Police, civil and Ecclesiastical, be left to the Colonies, you engaging for such a liberal Support of Government, as shall give the Executive no just Foundation for Complaint. . . . Concluding with a Recommendation to every Province and Colony in the Confederacy, that whenever it shall please his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, to signify their Approbation of this Plan, as a Foundation of the Restoration of the Harmony of the Empire, to liberate the Commerce and cultivate their antient Affection. . . .

"This Course of negotiating, will feel the Pulse and try the Sincerity of the Ministry; and appears to me to be recommended, by so many cogent Reasons, that I cannot now enumerate them . . . Remember that Time will give you every Thing, which the most sanguine Zeal for your Country can desire."—Wm. Smith MSS. (folio 208) in N. Y. Pub. Library.

6 The several companies of the royal regiment of Ireland march from the upper barracks, and embark on board "his Majesty's ship Asia, of 64 guos, commanded by George Vandeput, Esq. The rest of the regiment are at Fort Chartres and at Boston."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 8, 1775.

Col. Marinus Willett gives this description of their departure: "There was a public house near Beekman Slip kept by a Mr. Jasper Drake. At this house the warm friends of the opposition to the British measures used to meet daily. I was at that place with about half dozen more when word was brought that the troops had Commenced their march. And that beside the arms and accoutrements they carried they were taking with them sundry Carts Loaded with Chests filled with arms—As we were among the number of those who consider the permitting the troops to depart at any rate when we had it in our power to make them Prisoners proceeded from fear or something worse and as the permission given by the Committee did not extend to their taking any spare arms with them It was suddenly determin to hazard the Consequence of endeavouring to seize upon these spare arms. The persons present by agreement set out on different routs through the City to alarm our friends. My rout led me to pass the Coffee-house where after notifying the measure about to be pursued I proceeded through Water Street to the Exchange which then stood at the Lower End of Broad street from whence I discovered the Troops on their March down Broad Street I proceeded up the street and on discovering several Carts Loaded with Chests of arms in front of the troops under a small guard I stopt the front Horse which of Course caused a halt in the whole line of march. On the appearance of the Commanding officer to Enquire into the cause of the halt I informed him that the permission of the Committee did not extend to the troops taking with them any other arms than those they carried about them . . . The halt of the troops afforded time for the Collection of the Citizens. The Carts loaded with arms were turned out of the line of march, And the troops under arms addressed with an Invitation to such as disliked the Service in which they were to recover their arms And receive the protection of the Citizens who considered them as Brethren of the same family. But if their sentiments corroborated with the violent measures of the British Government and they were disposed to Join in the Barbarous work of shedding the blood of their fellow citizens we were ready to meet them in the Crimson field. One of the Soldiers recovering his arms was received with repeated huzzas and Led away by the Exulting citizens, some few afterwards followed and were Conducted with the taken arms to a place of Safety. The troops marched to the river and embarked under the Hisses of the citizens."—N. Y. during the Am. Rev., 57-59.

On June 7, Colden gave Dartmouth a report of this affair. He wrote: "As soon as the Troops march'd from the Barracks, several People began to Harrangue them exhorting them to desert, and assuring them of sufficient protection. Two or three fellows had the hardness to turn off with their Arms from the Ranks, and were immediately carried away by the People. When the Troops got upon the Dock where they were to embark the Capt's following in the Rear with their Baggage were stop'd, and in the face of the Mayor Aldermen Congress and Committee Meo, turn'd about by a few Desperate Fellows, carried to a Place at some Distance, where they open'd the Baggage and took out a number of Spare arms and all the Ammunition belonging to the Detachment. The Troops embarked without their Baggage. This violent Outrage has much alarm'd the Inhabitants and many of the Congress and Committee Men themselves who did not expect their authority would meet with such a public Contempt, as demonstrated how inadequate they were to the Government & Protection of the People. The Events of Yesterday made it sufficiently apparent that a People encouraged to trample on Magistrates and legal authority, will not be govern'd by any Thing but their own wild and dangerous Passions."—Colden Papers (1877), 424-26.

A committee of the provincial congress submits to that body the draft of a letter to be sent to the New York delegates in the continental congress, regarding the erection of a fortification at "King's Bridge." This is approved. In the committee's opinion, "a post (capable of containing 300 men) erected on the high ground adjoining Mr. Hyat's house . . . will answer the purpose proposed by the continental congress in their requisition [see May 25], so far as the occupying that bridge can contribute to the keeping up a communication between the country and this city . . . this work should be constructed by the troops when embodied, and ready to occupy it . . . it would be the highest simpudice, to erect a fortification before we have the means of defending it; by this mode of proceeding the expense will also be very much reduced." In this session the provincial congress resolveg "that Collo. Philip Schuyler is the most proper person in this Colony to be recommended as a major-general, and Richard Montanomerie, Esqr. as a brigadier-general."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 31-32.

The provincial congress resolves: "That whenever doubts shall arise, with respect to the recommendations or resolutions of the Continental Congress, or of this board, in the minds of private persons, it is the duty of such persons to apply to this board for an explanation thereof. And that any attempts to raise tumults, riots or mobs, either under colour of a dubious interpretation of such recommendations or resolutions, or for any other reasons or purposes, is a high infraction of the general association, and tends directly to the dissolution of this Congress."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 33.

In the afternoon of the same day, the congress took action in the case of Rivington (see May 10), by the following resolution: "Whereas James Rivington of this city, printer, hath signed the general association, and has lately published a handbill, declaring his intention rigidly to adhere to the said association, and also asked the pardon of the public who have been offended by his ill-judged publications:

"Resolved, therefore, That the said James Rivington be permitted to return to his house and family, and that this Congress doth recommend it to the inhabitants of this Colony not to molest him in his person or property."—Ibid., I: 34. See Nov. 23.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "Congress and Committees are now established in this Province and are acting with all the confidence and authority of a legal Government. The Provincial Congress of this Province, now setting, consist of upwards of 100 Members. . . .

"The principal matters said to be under consideration in the Congresses are raising money and an army to oppose the Kings Forces, and erecting such Fortifications as may best keep the command of the Country, and obstruct the March of an army. . . .

"The Places proposed to be immediately fortified . . . are Kingsbridge, upon the little River which separates the Island of New York from the Continent, about 14 miles from the City; and some place on each side of Hudsons River, which may be best situated for maintaining the Command of that River . . . a number of Cannon were removed from the City into the Country [see May 25]. The Continental Congress approved of this measure and recommended that all the Cannon and Ammunition should be remov'd into the Country, except those belonging to the King; which has accordingly been done. I am told they] amount to above 100 Pieces of Ship Cannon belonging to the Merchants, tho' many of them are not fit for use. . . . The Spirit of arming, and military Parade still runs high in the City. Several companies are formed who have appointed their own officers, are well armed and clothed in uniform."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 579-80.

The provincial congress resolves: "Whereas, by an Order of the 15th of May ultimo . . . it appears that the inhabitants of this City are directed not to remove any Military Stores belonging to the Crown: And whereas, this Congress is well informed that some persons have lately seized and removed the Military Stores belonging to the Crown at Turtle-Bay, this Congress doth Resolve, That such a step is a direct breach of the Continental order, and tends to destroy the weight of their and our authority, is inimical to the true interest of the Colonies, and tends to involve this City in the utmost confusion and distress." A committee is appointed "to re-

" The committee of 100 appoints a sub-committee "to inspect and examine into the Cargoes of any vessels which may arrive in this Port, suspected of having goods on board not admissible."—4 Am. Arch., II: 933. See also Jan. 30.

9 The provincial congress provides for a bounty of £5 for every 100 weight of gunpowder manufactured in the colony, and £20 for every 100 good muskets.—4 Am. Arch., II: 1288.

" Colden writes to Maj. Hamilton: "Few Things could add more to the shagreen and Uneasiness I feel from the most unhappy state of the City of N. York than the high Insult and Outrage offered to his Majesty's Troops on their March thro' the City last Tuesday [see June 6]. It Demonstrates what I was very certain of before, that the legal authority of the Laws and Officers of Government, being prostrated and trampled on, no assumed Power of Congresses or Committees will be sufficient to restrain the People. There is a Party in the City, who are determined that this Province shall not fall short of the most violent in their Measures of Opposition to the King & Parliament. I am sorry to find these wicked Men daily get the Better of Magistrates & Congresses & Committees, and do whatever their extravagant Passions lead to."—Colden Papers (1877), 426.

In a letter to Mayor Hicks of the same date, Colden very vividly describes "the high Insult and Outrage" offered the king's soldiers, and then adds: "It is a lamentable Reflection Sir, that neither your Presence with other Magistrates, nor that of those who have so lately given Me a public Assurance that they would strengthen the Hand of the Civil Magistrate, did prevent this violent Outrage on his Majesty's Troops who have behaved in the most peaceable and orderly Manner ever since they came to the City. I will not suffer myself to doubt of your having done what was in your Power; but it is my Duty to endeavour to add any Influence I may possibly have, and to call upon you to persevere in every Method you can devise to recover and restore the arms, &c. which have been so insolently taken from the King's Service. Every Degree of Confidence must be lost, and the Citizens of New York branded with a scandalous Breach of Faith, unless this be immediately done."—Ibid., 427-28. See June 10.

10 The provincial congress informs its delegates at Philadelphia: "A certain Captain Coffin being suspected of taking on board his vessel provisions for the Army and Navy at Boston, though consigned to persons at Rhode-Island, we have thought proper to delay his voyage until we have the sentiments of the General Congress on the subject. Our reason of suspicion is this, that it hath been intimated to us, that Messrs. Lopes and Roam to whom great part of the cargo is assigned, are commissioned to supply those articles to the Army and Navy, which is done, as is alleged, by suffering vessels which contain provisions to lie in the harbour unladen until seized by a ship-of-war, according to agreement for that purpose."—4 Am. Arch., II: 956-57.

" Mayor Hicks delivers to the provincial congress Colden's letter to him of June 9 (q. v.). After taking it into consideration, the congress resolves "that every inhabitant of this Colony who is possessed of any of the said arms or accoutrements, taken from His Majesty's troops, on Tuesday last [June 6], should immediately deliver them to the Mayor of the city of New-York."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 37, 38.

" A correspondent has favoured us with the following etymology of the word Yankee: when the New England colonies were first settled, the inhabitants were obliged to fight their way against many nations of Indians. They found but little difficulty in subduing them all, except one tribe who were known by the name of YANKOOS, which signifies invisible. After the waste of much blood and treasure, the Yankoes were at last subdued by the New Englandmen. The remains of this nation (agreeable to the Indian custom) transferred their name to their conquerors. For a while they were called Yankoes; but, from a corruption common to names in all languages, they got, through time, the name of Yankees; a name which we hope will soon be equal to that of a Roman, or an ancient Englishman."—Virginia Gazette, June 10, 1775.

"The Members of the New-York Military Club, Are earnestly requested to meet next Friday Evening, precisely at 7 o'Clock, at the House of Mr. Abraham Van Dyck, and every Friday Evening following, at such Place as may occasionally be agreed on by the Majority of Members present at the Adjournment."—*N. 13 Congress orders "That Colo. Lispenard and Mr McDougal be a committee to agree with any person in this city for importing without delay any quantity of gunpowder not exceeding thirty tons, allowing such importer one hundred per cent upon the first cost for the quantity to be imported, he being at all Charges and risk, and the powder to be delivered in good and merchantable order."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 41.

"Messrs. Christopher Miller and Patrick Dennis attending at the door, were called in [to the provincial congress], when they informed this Congress that they were requested by a number of the members of the Marine Society of this City, to inform this Congress that they were about to form themselves into an artillery company, and they had nominated Mr. Anthy. Rutgers of this city for their captain, and prayed the approbation of this Congress in the nomination." The nomination is unanimously approved.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 41; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1297.

Angus McDouald, "who it is said has been privately inlisting Men for some Time past to serve under General Gage, against their Country," is taken into custody "by a Party of Colonel Lasher's Company of Grenadiers," and conducted before the provincial congress. After his examination by that body, he is immediately sent off to Gen. Wooster's camp at Greenwich, Conn., being "escorted by most of our independent Companies as far as King's Bridge."—*N. Y. The provincial congress writes to Gen. Wooster: "this congress think it expedient to request you to march to this Colony with the Troops under your command. . . . As we have at present but few tents, we beg you would direct such as you have, to be sent to the place intended for their encampment and make such other disposition for the support of your Troops as in your power."—*4 Am. 16 Cornelius C. Bogardus employs men "to set up a fence for him round a piece of his Land that had laid vacant & common for many Years which fence was fully completed without any Molestation," etc. In the afternoon it was chopped down and burned by order and in the presence of the mayor and aldermen.—From manuscript history of "Domine Hook," in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives, concerning the title to the property originally granted in 1636 "to Anaatic Jansen and Roeloff her husband."

17 The battle of Bunker Hill occurs. About 3,000 British soldiers under Howe assault the American breastworks, and are twice repulsed by about 1,500 provincials commanded by Generals Prescott and Putnam. After sustaining the fire of the regulars for two hours, the Americans are forced to retreat because of lack of ammunition. The killed and wounded on the British side number about 1,050; on the American, about 450.—See bibliographical references to the battle in The Reader's Hand-Book of the Am. Rev., by Justin Winsor (1880), 35-59. The first news of the battle reached New York on June 20 (q. v.). For earliest accounts in New York newspapers, see N. Y. Jour., and Rivington's Gazetteer, June 22, 29; N. Y. Merc., June 26, July 3.

1775 In the N. Y. Mercury of Sept. 25 appeared an advertisement with a head-line reading "Philadelphia, Sept. 14th, 1775," in which subscriptions were solicited for "An exact View of the late Battle at Charlestown [Bunker Hill] (June 17, 1775). In which an advanced party of Seven Hundred Provincials stood an attack made by Eleven Regiments and a Train of Artillery of the Ministerial Forces, and after an Engagement of two Hours, retreated to their main Body at Cambridge, leaving Eleven Hundred of the Regulars killed and wounded on the Field: . . . With a View of Gen. Putnam, a Part of Boston, Charlestown in Flames, Breeds Hill, Provincial Breast-Work, a Broken Officer, and the Somerset Man of War ad a Frigate Firing upon Charlestown.

"It shall be printed on a good Crown Imperial Paper, and to be delivered to the Subscribers in about Ten Days.

"The Price will be Five Shillings, Plain . . . Seven Shillings and Six-Pence, Coloured." Nicholas Brooks, of Philadelphia, was to be the "Printer of said View." In New York, Hugh Gaine and Richard Sause would receive subscriptions.—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 25, 1775. This was the well known but very rare view engraved by Bernard Romans, of which also an English issue is known. Both are fully described in Green's Ten Facsimile Reproductions Relating to Various Subjects (1903), 27 et seq. The view was also engraved by Aitken, at a small scale, and published in the *Penn. 20 Late on this day (Tuesday), the first news reaches New York of the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 17).

"The provincial congress orders, "That Abraham Lott, Esquire, be at liberty to supply Capt. Vandeput and the ship Asia, with such small necessaries as may be wanted from time to time" (see May 27). This is the result of information given by the mayor, that Capt. Vandeput "cannot get any small necessaries for himself or his ship; and . . . requests such aid of this Congress as may give him relief in the premises."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 48; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1307.

21 This morning, the news which came from New England last night is "published in a had bill, and distributed in this city." According to Rivington's report in the Gazetteer (published on Thursday, June 22), this handbill read as follows:

"New-York, 21st June, 1775.

"Last Night, by a Vessel in a short Passage from New-London, we have the following important Intelligence, in a Letter from a Gentleman at Norwich, to his Friend in New York.

"Sir, Norwich, June 19, 1775.

"I Understand by Mr. David Trumbull, that by an Express from Cambridge, his honour our Governor, has advice, that our people attempting to take possession of Bunker's Hill, and Dorchester Point, they were attacked by the Regulars, shipping, &c. Five men of war hauled up at Charlestown, covered the landing of a body of men, who drove our people from Bunker's Hill: That three Colonels in our service were wounded, Col. Gardener, mortally; how many are slain on either side, is uncertain.

"This happened on Saturday [June 17, q.v.] about noon: At Charlestown, when the Post came away, our people kept their ground and made a stand, how they have fared at Dorchester, we do not hear; Gen. Putnam was safe when the Express came off; preparations were making for a general attack. Col. Tyler must be on the march as soon as possible, without confusion; I shall procure teams as fast as I can, and have them to take in his baggage. Col. Jabez Huntington desires I would dispatch an Express immediately, to have the troops forwarded; he sent orders in writing yesterday."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 22; N. Y. Jour., June 22; N. Y. Merc., June 26, 1775. No copy of the original broadside is recorded by Evans. For a second broadside, containing fuller information, see June 24. See, further, June 26, 29.

"A New Yorker writes to a friend in Edinburgh: "A regular Army of seventy thousand men is to be immediately raised. All ranks of people are in arms. Seventeen regular companies are already formed in this City, who have no pay, and provide themselves with uniforms, arms, and ammunition. Should the unhappy contest continue six months longer, it is very probable that we will have near two hundred thousand bold, resolute men, disciplined to as great perfection as any of His Majesty's Troops . . . It is a gross calumny to say that we are aiming at independency, for our political principles are the same that raised the house of Hanover to the throne; and were your Ministers to adopt these principles, we would immediately lay down our arms."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1047-48.

The first issue of continental paper money is provided for when the continental congress resolves: "That a sum not exceeding two millions of Spanish milled dollars be emitted by the Congress in bills of Credit, for the defence of America . . . On June 23, it decided "That the Number and denomination of the bills . . . be as follows, viz:

This night, there arrived an express bringing a more detailed account of the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 17, 20 and 24).

24 A broadside is issued giving the news of the battle of Bunker Hill, which had reached the city by express on the preceding evening (q.v.). According to Gaine's report in the Mercury (published on Monday, June 26), it read as follows:

"Last Friday Night [June 23] arrived an Express from the Provincial Camp near Boston, with the following interesting Account of an Engagement, at Charlestown, between about Three Thousand of the King's Regular Forces, and about Half the Number of Provincials, on Saturday the 17th Instant.

"On Friday night, June 17th [16th], 1500 of the provincials went to Bunker's-Hill, in order to intrench there, and continued intrenching till Saturday ten o'clock, when two thousand regulars marched out of Boston, landed in Charles-Town, and plundering it of all its valuable effects, set fire to it in ten different places at once; then dividing their army, one part of it marked up in the front of the provincial's intrenchment, and began to attack the provincials at long shot; the other part of the army marched round the town of Charlestown, under cover of the smook occasioned by the fire of the towa. The provincial Centries discovered the regulars marching upon their left wing. Upon notice of this, given by the Centry to the Connecticut forces posted on that wing, Capt.

1775 Shewkirk, says that Tryon received little notice—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1891), IV: 236.

26 J. Jones continues: "About 9 o'clock the same evening Governor Tryon came up from Sandy Hook, and landed at the Exchange, where he was met and welcomed once more to his Government, by the members of his Majesty's Council, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General, the Speaker and Members of the General Assembly then in town, the Clergymen of the Church of England, the Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen of the City, the Governors of King's College, of the Hospital, the Members of the Chamber of Commerce, and Marine Society, with a numerous train of his Majesty's loyal and well affected subjects, who conducted him with universal shouts of applause to the house of Hugh Wallace, Esq., a Member of his Majesty's Council, where he took up his residence for the night." Judge Jones adds that the same persons who greeted the "rebel" generals in the morning "now one and all joined in the Governor's train, and with the loudest acclamations, attended him to his lodgings, where, with the utmost seeming sincerity, they shook him by the hand, welcomed him back to the Colony—wished him joy of his safe arrival, . . .

Washington directs Gen. Schuyler to take "command of all the troops destined for the New York department, and see that the orders of the Continental Congress are carried into execution." He requires him to "Keep a watchful eye upon Governor Tryon, and, if you find him attempting, directly or indirectly, any measures inimical to the common cause, use every means in your power to frustrate his designs."Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), II: 495-96.

Paul Revere passes through New York on his way to the continental congress at Philadelphia.—Livington's Gazetteer, June 29, 1775.

26 The provincial congress of New York gives its approval to the following address to Gen. Washington (see June 15): "At a time when the most loyal of his Majesty's subjects, from a regard to the laws and constitution by which he sits on the throne, feel themselves reduced to the unhappy necessity of taking up arms to defend their dearest rights and privileges, while we deplore the calamities of this divided empire, we rejoice in the appointment of a gentleman, from whose abilities and virtue we are taught to expect both security and peace. Confiding in you, sir, and in the worthy generals immediately under your command, we have the most flattering hopes of Success in the glorious struggle for American liberty; and the fullest assurances that whenever this important contest shall be decided, by (that fondest wish of each American soul,) an accommodation with our mother country, you will cheerfully resign the important deposit committed into your hands, and resume the character of our truest citizen."Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 55.

Washington wrote, in reply: "Gentlemen—At the same time that with you I deplore the unhappy necessity of such an appointment as that with which I am now honoured, I cannot but feel sentiments of the highest gratitude for this affecting instance of distinction and regard.

"May your warmest wishes be realized in the success of America at this important and interesting period; and be assured, that every exertion of my worthy colleagues and myself, will be equally extended to the re-establishment of peace and harmony between the mother country and these Colonies, as to the fatal but necessary operations of war.

"When we assumed the soldier, we did not lay aside the citizen, and we shall most sincerely rejoice with you in that happy hour when the establishment of American Liberty on the most firm and solid foundations, shall enable us to return to our private stations in the bosom of a free, peaceful and happy Country."Ibid., I: 56; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1321-22.

"General Washington, with his Suite, attended by the several New-York Military Companies, and likewise by a Troop of Gentlemen from the Philadelphia Light Horse, commanded by Capt. Markoe, and a Number of the Inhabitants of this City, set out for the Provincial Camp at Cambridge, near Boston. The General rested that Night at Kingsbridge, and the next Morning proceeded on his Journey. The Troop returned to this City the next Evening, and departed hence for Philadelphia the Thursday following."N. Y. Merc., July 3, 1775.

Robert R. Livingston informs the provincial congress that his "powder-maker, who has brought with him from Philadelphia one hundred and eighty pounds of saltpetre, will begin to work it up on Thursday. The mill consists of four mortars and twelve pounders, and is well supplied with water."4 Am. Arch., II: 1126.

On this day, the Mercury publishes not only the contents of the handbills of June 21 (q. v.) and 24 (q. v.), relating to the battle of Bunker Hill, but also two briefer accounts of it which reached New York from Watertown on Saturday night, June 24. See, further, June 29.

This issue of the Mercury also contains a proclamation which was published by Gen. Gage in Boston on June 12, in which he makes the following reference to the battle of Lexington:

"The Minds of Men having been thus gradually prepared for the worst Extremities, a Number of armed Persons, to the Amount of many Thousands, assembled on the 19th of April last, and from behind Walls, and lurking Holes, attacked a Detachment of the King's Troops who not expecting so consummate an Act of Phrenzy, unprepared for Vengeance, and willing to decline it, made use of their Arms only in their own Defence. Since that Period the Rebels, deriving Confidence from Impunity, have added Insult to Outrage; have repeatedly fired upon the King's Ships and Subjects, with Cannon and small Arms, have possessed the Roads, and other Communications by which the Town of Boston was supplied with Provisions; and with a preposterous Parade of Military Arrangement, they effect to hold the Army besieged; while part of their Body make daily and indiscriminate Invasions upon private Property, and with a Wantonness of Cruelty ever incident to lawless Tumult, carry Depredation and Distress wherever they turn their Steps. The Actions of the 19th of April are of such Notoriety, as must baffle all Attempts to contradict them, and the Flames of Buildings and other Property from the Islands, and adjacent Country, for some Weeks past, spread a melancholy Confirmation of the subsequent Assertions."

Gage adds that, "to spare the Effusion of Blood," he promises the King's pardon to all "who shall forthwith lay down their Arms, and return to the Duties of peaceable Subjects, excepting only from the Benefit of such Pardon, Samuel Adams and John Hancock, whose Offences are of too flagitious a Nature to admit of any other Consideration than that of condign Punishment." Other terms of the proclamation follow.—N. Y. Merc., June 26, 1775.

Gen. Wooster, with Connecticut troops, arrives in the neighbourhood of New York; "when the whole, consisting of about two thousand men, shall have arrived, they will encamp on ground behind Mr. Haring's house in the Bowery Lane."Livington's Gazetteer, June 29, 1775. See July 3.

The provincial congress appoints a committee "for superintending and employing some person in trying the experiment of casting one brass field piece."Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 56. See Sept. 8.

28 A broadside publishes the "Instructions for the instilling of Men" which were drawn up by the provincial congress on June 27 (q. v.), and also a commission to Samuel Fletcher to raise a company of 72 "able bodied sober Men." This broadside is reproduced as Pl. 43, Vol. IV.

Gov. Tryon having returned (see June 25), the great seal is delivered to him. He asks the advice of the council on the present state of the colony.—Cal. Coun. Min., 505.

"We hear that 3 men of war and 16 sail of transports, with British troops on board, are now lying at Sandy Hook; these are part of the troops [see June 19] which at their embarkation were destined for New-York. Since their arrival here, we are told Gen. Gage has ordered them to Boston—But if so, we know not why their departure is delayed. Some suppose that Gen. Haldimand, who arrived about a week ago, came here to take the command of these troops.—We are told they are unwilling to go to Boston."N. Y. Jour., June 29, 1775. On June 30, the transports sailed for Boston "under convoy of his Majesty's Ship of War the Nautilus."Ibid., July 6, 1775.

- 1775 In a letter to a friend in Edinburgh, a New Yorker writes: "A regular army of 70,000 men is to be immediately raised; all ranks of people are in arms. Seventeen regular companies are already formed in this city who have no pay, and provide themselves with uniforms, arms, and ammunition. Should the unhappy contest continue six months longer, it is very probable that we shall have near 200,000 bold resolute men disciplined to as great perfection as any of his Majesty's troops."—London Chron., Aug. 19-22, 1775.
- " On this day, Rivington's Gazetteer and the N. Y. Jour. publish additional reports regarding the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 21, 24, 26).
- " Congress orders "That every gunsmith in the city of New-York be requested to repair, with all possible despatch, any arms of the troops from the Colony of Connecticut, now here, which may be brought to them by the quarter-master of the said troops, or either of them, for that purpose."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 62.
- " Edmund Fanning is sworn in as surveyor-general of lands.—Cal. Coun. Min., 505.
- July Dartmouth writes to Tryon that "it is His Majestys firm Resolution to exert every power which the constitution has placed in His hands to compel obedience to the Laws and authority of the supreme Legislature." Orders have been given for increasing the army in America. The "Admiral will be directed to send to New York such a Part of his Fleet, as he shall think may be necessary to secure (as far as depends upon Naval Service) the Passes of Hudsons River," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 587-88.
- 3 The Connecticut troops "marched last week to this City and encamped in the suburbs [see June 27]. This we are told," Colden writes to Dartmouth, "is done by the order of the Continental Congress, but for what purpose is kept a secret."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 589. Tryon wrote, on July 4, that these troops "were ordered here by the Continental Congress, as well to endeavor to check the four Regiments which were intend<sup>d</sup> for this Province, as a mark of disgrace and Punishment to New York for the conduct of her General Assembly last Session. The pay of these Troops, . . . is placed to the account of this Province."—Ibid., VIII: 590.
- " The corporation of the city prepares the following address to Gov. Tryon: "We wait on you Sir, to congratulate you on the better establishment of your health and to bid you welcome to a people, who from the rectitude of your administration could not part with you without the deepest regret, and who must therefore receive you again with all that confidence of safety and protection which the experience of your virtues and abilities can inspire.
- "Would to Heaven that an event so honorable to you as this fresh mark of the Kings approbation really is and which is so acceptable to us, had found us in a condition more propitious to your felicity, for even amidst the complicated distresses of this melancholy hour we feel an addition to our Grief from the unfriendly aspect of the times, upon the happiness we sincerely wish you to enjoy.
- "To whatever causes the suspension of the Harmony once subsisting between the parent state, and her colonies, may be imputed be assured, Sir, that we sigh with the utmost ardour for the reestablishment of the common Tranquillity upon that ancient System of Government and intercourse which has been such a fruitful source of general Prosperity and opulence
- "It is with affliction we behold a nation so renowned for wisdom as for valor involved in a civil War, in which disloyalty in His Majesty's American Subjects to their Prince, or want of affection to their mother country constitute no part of the unnatural controversy, and we trust, under a merciful God, in the aid of your intercession with his Mäty, for a speedy termination of those hostile animosities of his contending subjects, which undermine the power and threaten the destruction of the empire." A copy of this is left with the governor, who appoints July 6 for formally receiving it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 593-94; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1534; M. C. C., VIII: 97-98. On July 5 (q.v.), the provincial congress passed a resolution objecting to the address.
- " Col. Lasher's "Battalion of City Militia" is reviewed by Generals Schuyler, Montgomery, and Wooster. They go through "the Exercise and Evolutions with the greatest Order, Alertness and Decorum.—That Country can never be enslaved whose Rights are defended by the Hands of its Citizens."—N. Y. Merc., July 10, 1775.
- " "We are informed, that the Provincial Congress have appointed the following Gentlemen to be Officers in the Battalion to be raised in this City and County:
- "Mr. Alexander M'Dougall, Colonel.
- "Mr. Edward Fleming, Lieut. Colonel.
- "Mr. Rudolphus Ritzema, Major."—N. Y. Merc., July 3, 1775. See July 6.
- "Daniel Teir, Near Mr. Hugget's, in Nassau-Street, at 'his Livery Stables: Informs the Gentlemen and Ladies of this City, That he keeps a very neat Chariot and Stage Waggon, with Chairs, and the best of Horses for Carriages, and will be glad of waiting on any Company, or go on a Journey, or ride Express, on reasonable Terms. Chairs with good Horses will be sent to any House in the City on the shortest Notice, and a Servant sent for the same in the Evening."—N. Y. Merc., July 3, 1775.
- " S. Patrick writes to the provincial congress: "The subscriber having a furnace in New-York Province, now in blast, would engage to make and deliver iron ball, of any given dimensions, any where on the North River where he can with safety land them, at fifteen Pounds per ton; and as the furnace is in blast, he would execute any order he might be favoured with expeditiously."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1538.
- 4 After a conference with Ethan Allen and Seth Warner, the provincial congress orders: "That in consequence of a recommendation from the Continental Congress [see June 24], a body of troops not exceeding five hundred men, officers included, be forthwith raised of those called Green Mountain Boys; that they elect all their own officers, except field officers. . . . That the said troops, when raised, be considered as an independent body. . . . That their corps of officers consist of one lieutenant-colonel, one major, seven captains and fourteen lieutenants."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 65.
- On the afternoon of the same day, the congress directed "That every person who has one or more of the muskets, bayonets and accoutrements, belonging to the corporation of the city of New-York, and lately delivered out of the City-Hall of the said city [see April 19], bring the same to the house of Abraham Vanduyck, in the Broadway, and deliver them to Messrs. Abraham Walton and Isaac Sears, or their order, who are appointed a committee to receive the same, and that each person deliver to those gentlemen, at the same time, an account of the exp<sup>se</sup> they have been at for iron ramrods for the said muskets, that this Congress may make provisions for the payment thereof; and ordered that this order be published in handbills and distributed about this city."—Ibid., I: 66.
- " A New Yorker writes: "The distracted state of this unhappy country is such, that not even business, but every thing that can tend to virtue and civil society, is at an end. The news-paper accounts you may believe as much of as common sense will dictate to you; but be assured, that it is too true that all authority, power, and government (though I cannot say government, as there is none) is in the hands of the lower class of people, who are so warm in a dispute that they do not comprehend, that it would be dangerous for the Congress themselves to act contrary to the spirit of these people. In short, liberty is degenerated into licentiousness; those who would nobly defend their liberties constitutionally, seek for redress of their grievances, and take off a King's head if he deserved it, are now called Tories.
- "Too many of the Merchants who owe their all to the indulgence of the British Merchants, are now not ashamed to publicly declare, on the arrival of every ship by which they receive what they call impertinent dunning letters, their avowed determination not to pay their debts [cf. July 8], and honest men dare not even dispute them.—Figure to yourselves the consequences."—London Chron., Aug. 10-12, 1775.
- 5 The provincial congress having learned that the common council intends to offer the governor an address of welcome (see July 3), the following resolution is passed: "Though this Congress entertains the highest respect for his Excellency, yet it will be altogether improper for the said corporation, or any other body corporate or individuals in this Colony, to address his Excellency at this most critical juncture." A copy of this is ordered to be delivered to Mayor Hicks.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 66; N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 594.
- In consequence of this, the members of the common council, on the following day, told Tryon that they thought "any address from any public body, presented at this critical Juncture would occasion a dissatisfaction, not from a Disregard to His Excellency, but from the present troubles of the times." They therefore begged 1775 that he would excuse "their not waiting on him . . . as was proposed" (see July 3), and that he would "waive such a public Testimony of their Esteem for the reason above mentioned."

July 5 —N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 595. See July 7.

" Gen. Wooster, Gen. Schuyler, and the officers of the Connecticut forces (see June 27) dine "at Mr. Samuel Fraunce's, in the Fields," where an "elegant Entertainment" is provided by the members of the New York Military Club (see June 12). "The Day was spent in the utmost Harmony, every Thing conspiring to please, being all of one Mind, and one Heart."—N. Y. Merc., July 3 and 10, 1775. At this time, Fraunce's tavern (formerly spelled "Francis") was Hamden Hall on the corner of Warren St. and Broadway.

" The New York committee of 100 resolves "That all Masters of Vessels arriving in this Port from Great Britain or Ireland, are hereby requested, as soon as they conveniently can, or within twenty-four hours after their arrival, to make application to the Chairman or Deputy Chairman of this Committee . . . and give proper satisfaction that there are not now, nor have been in his Vessel this present voyage any Goods or Merchandise contrary to the General Association of the Continental Congress. And it is hereby recommended to all owners of Vessels, or those to whom they may be addressed, to inform their Masters of the above Resolve; and that no Master do presume to discharge or suffer any thing to be taken out of his Vessel until such satisfaction has been given, and leave obtained from the Chairman or Deputy Chairman aforesaid."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1574.

" Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress that "a number of men enlisted in this city, as part of the troops to be raised in this Colony, are ready to be encamped, but that tents and other necessaries for the officers, and many articles for the soldiers are yet wanting; that part of the upper barracks are ready for use; and that a muster-master is wanted to muster the men now enlisted." Orders are given for the immediate mustering of the enlisted men; "and that such men as pass muster, and such others as shall be enlisted, be lodged in the barracks in this city, until their tents and other necessaries are ready, or until the further order of this Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 664; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1340.

6 "A Declaration by the Representatives of the United Colonies of North-America, now met in General Congress at Philadelphia setting forth the Causes and Necessity of their taking up Arms" is published as a broadside by John Holt. This states that "government was instituted to promote the welfare of mankind and ought to be administered for the attainment of that end," but that the legislature of Great Britain has "attempted to effect their cruel and impolitic purpose of enslaving these colonies by violence, and . . . thereby rendered it necessary for us to close with their last appeal from Reason to Arms.—Yet, however blinded that assembly may be by their intemperate rage for unlimited domination, so to slight justice and the opinion of mankind, we esteem ourselves bound by obligations of respect to the rest of the world to make known the justice of our cause."

The declaration then reviews the planting of the colonies in America without expense to Great Britain, the wealth accumulated and commerce built up by the industry of the colonists afove, the aid given freely to Great Britain in time of war, and, finally, the many unjust and coercive laws passed by parliament in the last eleven years. It cites the various petitions for redress of grievances, the temperate measures pursued by the first continental congress, and the fruitlessness of all their entreaties. The congress next describes the attack on Lexington, the harsh treatment of the Bostonians, and the many cruelties perpetrated in the colonies by Gen. Gage and his soldiers.

In conclusion, it states: "In brief, a part of these colonies now feels, and all of them are sure of feeling, as far as the vengeance of administration can inflict them, the complicated calamities of fire, sword, and famine.—We are reduced to the alternative of choosing an unconditional submission to the tyranny of irritated ministers, or resistance by force.—The latter is our choice.—We have counted the cost of this contest and find nothing so dreadful as voluntary slavery.—Honor, justice, and humanity forbid us tamely to surrender that freedom which we received from our gallant ancestors, and which our innocent posterity have a right to receive from us . . .

"Our cause is just. Our union is perfect. Our internal resources are great, and if necessary, foreign assistance is undoubtedly attainable . . . With hearts fortified with these animating reflections, we most solemnly, before God and the world declare, July 6 that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers, which our beneficent Creator hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume, we will, in defiance of every hazard, with unabating firmness and perseverance, employ, for the preservation of our liberties, being with one mind resolved, to die Freemen rather than live Slaves.

"Lest this declaration should disquiet the minds of our friends and fellow subjects in any part of the empire, we assure them, that we mean not to dissolve that Union which has so long and so happily subsisted between us, and which we sincerely wish to see restored . . . We have not raised armies with ambitious designs of separating from Great Britain, and establishing independent states.—We fight not for glory, or for conquest . . .

"In our own native land, in defence of the freedom that is our birthright, and which we ever enjoyed till the late violation of it—for the protection of our property, acquired solely by the honest industry of our fore fathers and ourselves, against violence actually offered, we have taken up arms. We shall lay them down when hostilities shall cease on the part of the aggressors and all danger of their being renewed shall be removed, and not before.

"With a humble confidence in the mercies of the supreme and impartial Judge and Ruler of the universe, we most devoutly implore his divine goodness to conduct us happily through this great conflict, to dispose our adversaries to reconciliation on reasonable terms, and thereby to relieve the empire from the calamities of civil war."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library; of Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 128-57. The original draft, in the handwriting of John Dickinson, is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.; the first page of the same, as well as the published broadside in toto, is reproduced as an insert in Avery, Hist. of U. S., V: 284. This was answered by Dr. Samuel Johnson, of the ultratory party in England, in a diatribe entitled Taxation no Tyranny (London, 1775); 55-87.

"The provincial congress appoints a committee "to convene all the Blacksmiths in Town, and inquire whether they can make Gun-barrels, Bayonets, and Iron Ramrods, and what number any of them can make in a given time."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1342.

"On the motion of Col. McDougall, he and three others are appointed a committee "to write [to Great Britain] for four set of good locksmiths, to make gun-locks, and to engage to pay the expense of their passages from Britain to this Colony."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 675; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1342.

"The provincial congress resolves "That Ten Shillings shall be allowed to every Soldier that shall enlist in the Continental Army in this Colony, for the present campaign, who shall furnish himself with a good musket, to be approved of by the Muster-Master and Armourer for each Regiment." It is ordered "That Mr. Gerard Banker, the Barrack-Master [see June 22] deliver to Colonel McDougall all Such Beds, Blankets, and other utensils for Soldiers, now in the custody of the said Barrack-Master, and belonging to this Colony, as Col. McDougall shall call for, for the use of the Troops now raising in this Colony."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1342-43.

"The captains appointed by the provincial congress to enlist men in the New York battalion under the command of Colonels McDougall and Ritzema (see July 3) give notice of their places of rendezvous. Volunteers are to receive 1s. 11d. per day, and, in addition, a dollar a week until they are encamped."—N. Y. Jour., July 6, 1775. The first division of the battalion sailed from New York on Aug. 8 (q. v.).

In spite of the corporation's action (see July 5), Gov. Tryon sends to the members of the common council the answer he has prepared to their address of July 3 (q. v.). After thanking them for their good wishes, he continues: "I confess my disappointment at the change of Circumstances in this Government and feel the weightiest distress at the present unfriendly aspect of the Times. . . . I was induced to embark again for this Government cherishing the pleasing hope of being able to contribute, in some small degree, the hastening the General wish of the Nation for a speedy and happy reconciliation between Great Britain and her Colonies

"If there can be a Time when it would be wisdom and Humanity to listen to the calm and dispassionate voice of reason and moderation it surely must be at present. . . . In the present moment were America to liberate the restraints she has laid on her Commerce & constitutional authority, and through her Provincial Assemblies, grant, suitable to the case of their circumstances, supplies to the mother Country for the protection of the whole

- 1775 British State. I am confident in my own mind the controversy July would fall to the Ground and that many Acts of conciliating Grace 7 would be extended to America by Great Britain, which National hoor cannot suffer to have torn from her by violence . . . the Petition to the King [see March 25] has been presented to his Majesty who was pleased to receive it with the most gracious expressions of Regard . . . and I am authorized to say that nothing can give greater satisfaction to the Royal Brest than to see us again a happy & united People."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 595-96;

- Tryon, fearing capture, and "to avoid the insolence of an inflamed Mob," makes overtures to Dartmouth about returning to England.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 592; 599. This permission was granted by the king on Sept. 6, but Sec. Powall, in writing him this information, persuaded him to remain.—Ibid., VIII: 635.

- 8 A letter from London to Philadelphia contains the following news: "Your salvation depends on your firmness and assiduity.
If you submit, sixty of you are to be hanged in Philadelphia, and the same number in New York; five hundred Pounds is offered for Captain Sears's head in particular—a secret order."—4 Am.

- " A gentleman in New York writes to a merchant in London:
"Since my arrival here, which is about six months, I have met with surprising success, for I have got in most of the money due to me, and for others who empowered me to settle their affairs;
and, I doubt not, but in six months more, every shilling will be paid me. They are stigmatised on your side the water with being a set of crafty, designing, unprincipled people; but I affirm, that I never was among any Gentlemen of stricter honour and veracity than the New York Merchants are."—London Chron., Aug. 17-19, 1775. Cf. July 4.
- 9 A letter from London states: "Our dependence on New-York, and (under God) the preservation of that City and Colony from a very shameful defection, which has been fatal to the cause of freedom, has been greatly owing to the abilities, zeal, and assiduity of the worthy Mr. Holt . . . The business is now to develop the schemes laying to deceive and divide the New-Yorkers, finding mere force like to answer no valuable end. They now talk of blocking up the ports, and thus distressing the trade, to make people quarrel with each other, which quarrels some are employed to foment."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1614.
- 10 A Londoner writes to a friend in New York: "The present Struggle between this Country and North-America, I have heard old People 50 years ago predict . . . I have always been of Opinion, that the Measures pursued here since 1765, were mistaken and unjust; this Country should have been content to take the Wealth of America by Trade, and not by Revenue Acts, imposed on a People unrepresented . . . The greatest Part of the Nation wish well to America, and detest the present Politicks; so that it is a War of Administration only . . . the Ministry I think are sick of the War in America, yet I see not the least Trace of their relaxing, except that I hear of no Preparation to send more Troops; but probably they will cover the Coast with Ships of War, and suffer no Trade, and truly I think that would be a Blessing to America instead of a Curse. The eyes of Government are fixed on the Congress and their Resolutions . . . I think the Rupture will be much greater before the Wound is healed; some more Blood must be drawn, and then they, when cooled, will heat, and perhaps agree for some Time, but whenever settled, I imagine America will carry some Points towards the Establishment of their Liberties."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 11, 1775.
- " More than 150 of the principal inhabitants of the city," sensible of the advantages derived from the trade of the Province of Connecticut, and desirous of giving their Bills of Credit a Currency equal to those of the other neighbouring Colonies," sign an agreement "to receive the same in all Payments whatsoever." On July 11, the city committee passed a resolution urging all of the inhabitants to do likewise.—N. Y. Merc., July 17, 1775.
- " Richard Lightfoot, from Dublin, informs the public that he makes and sells all sorts of pins, needles, wire, etc., "At his Pin Manufactory at the Crown and Cushion, in Water-Street, near the Coffee-House." As he is "the first that ever attempted any of said branches on this continent," he hopes for "the countenance of those who wish to encourage their own manufactures."—N. Y.

- 11 It is reported in London that "The Patty" has arrived at Liverpool from New York, and "has brought back the cargo she took from hence in November last, not being suffered to land it at New-York."—London Chron., July 8-11, 1775.
- Gen. Wooster (see June 27) writes to the committee of safety:
"Peter Herring, the man who last night assisted in conveying on board the Asia man of war one of the prisoners sent here by the Continental Congress, is now under guard at our camp. I would beg the immediate advice of the Committee of Safety concerning what is best to be done with him; his brother is willing and desirous that he should be sent away somewhere, that he may be out of the way of the enraged people; some have proposed that he be sent on board the Asia; others think it best to have him sent to Connecticut with Gov. Skeene who will go off as soon as this matter can be determined. I hope, therefore, to be assisted with your advice as speedily as possible." Immediately on the receipt of this, the committee ordered Herring to be sent under guard to the city hall for examination.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 71. He was found guilty and sentenced to jail in Connecticut.—Ibid., I: 75.
- The committee of safety writes to the New York delegates at the continental congress: "We have formed an arrangement of the three thousand men (exclusive of the Green Mountain Boys) which the Continental Congress have ordered us to raise into four battalions, of seven hundred and fifty men each, including their officers, and would be glad to be informed what their pay is to be
. . . we have reason to believe that the four battalions will be completed soon, but are sorry to inform you that we have no powder for them when raised."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1784. See July 15.
- The committee of safety learns that a mob has burned a boat belonging to the "Asia," and has stolen some private property and military stores. The civil authorities are ordered "to examine strictly into the several matters . . . and to punish all persons who are guilty of perpetrating the same."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 77-78. On July 18, the committee expressed its approval of the mayor's intention to have a boat built to replace the one burned.
—Ibid., I: 81.
- Before the carpenters had quite finished the new barge, "some disorderly persons," one night, sawed it to pieces. Another was immediately ordered built; any who interfered with the work were
"to be considered and treated as enemies to their country."—Ibid., I: 104-5. Gov. Tryon's report of this affair to the Earl of Dartmouth, Aug. 7, was as follows: "On the 15th ultimo a Boat belonging to His Majesty's Ship of War the Asia (the only King's Ship now in this Harbour) under the command of Capt<sup>n</sup> Vandeput was seized and set on Fire by the Mob. The Mayor and Corporation took up the Matter as a high misdemeanor, & attempted a discovery of the perpetrators of an outrage so manifestly contrary to the general sense and inclination of the Citizens. At the same time they engaged to Captain Vandeput an immediate restitution, and in that were supported by both the City Committee & Provincial Congress. The Boat when partly finished has since, in the night been secretly cut in Pieces. An other Boat I am told is to be built, and I hear it is to be secured against any attempts to destroy it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 597.
- A letter from New York reports that "Every person in this province capable of bearing arms are now completely accoutred and in constant exercise, except those whose avocation will not admit of their attendance, and they pay a fine; but they are looked on in a contemptible light; and must be obliged to take arms in case of emergency."—London Chron., Aug. 26-29, 1775.
- Gen. Wooster, in command of the Connecticut forces, asks permission of the New York committee of safety to remove his troops (see June 27) to "a plot of ground belonging to Mr. Sickle, of Hatlem." He wants to do this because the soldiers "from the situation of their encampment, are subjected to many difficulties, which render it next to impossible to maintain that good order and discipline which is entirely necessary in the regulation of an army
. . . it will be much for the benefit of the service to remove the troops to a farther distance from the towne."—Jour. Provin.
Cong., I: 79-80; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1665. The change was made on July 18.—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 21, 1775.
- Another letter in regard to the troops (see July 12) is sent by the committee of safety to the delegates at Philadelphia. This states that the enlisted men "grow uneasy for want of money, which prevents the enlistment of others. We have no arms, we have no powder, we have no blankets. For God's sake send us money, send us arms, send us ammunition."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1788-89.
For the answer from the delegates, see July 18.

- 1775 The committee of safety agrees that "Herman Zedwitz shall be major, and is hereby appointed major of the first regiment of the troops now raising in this Colony."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 80; N. Y. Jour., July 20, 1775. Zedwitz was later detected in traitorous acts (see Aug. 24, 1776). July 31
- 17 The committee of safety issues this letter to the colonels of the New York regiments: "You are requested to prepare and lay before the congress of this Colony at New-York, a state of your regiment, and of the number of men ready and fit for service in each company with all possible despatch. You will also be pleased to inform the Congress when you expect your Regiment will be completed and ready to take the field. We pray you to give all possible despatch in this business; the present circumstances admit of no delay."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 81.
- 18 In a letter to the committee of safety, the New York delegates at the continental congress write: "We are not insensible to the distress to which you must be reduced, for the want of money, arms, and powder [see July 12 and 15]. With the first, you will soon be supplied. The difficulties attending an emission so uncommon, of which the necessary guards against counterfeits is not the least, has rendered its progress very tedious. We can give you no assurances of a supply of arms and ammunition from this quarter. Every scheme which could be devised to procure them from abroad has been pursued, and on their success, and the efforts of the different Colonies, we must depend . . . Some blankets are to be had in this City [Philadelphia], which will be purchased as soon as the money is issued."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1684.
- 20 Ethan Allen, writing to the New York congress from Ticonderoga, says: "When I reflect on the unhappy controversy which hath many years subsisted between the government of New-York and the settlers on the New-Hampshire Grants, and also contemplate on the friendship and union that hath lately taken place between the Government and those its former discontented subjects, in making a united resistance against ministerial vengeance and slavery, I cannot but indulge fond hopes of reconciliation. To promote this salutary end I shall contribute my influence, assuring your Honours, that your respectful treatment, not only to Mr. Warner [lieutenant-colonel of the battalion] and myself, but to the Green Mountain Boys in general, in forming them into a battalion, are by them duly regarded, and I will be responsible that they will retaliate this favour by boldly hazarding their lives, if need be, in the common cause of America."—*4 Am. - 31 A London letter brings news that the ministry has "at present in agitation" the following plan: "With the assistance of Governor Tryon, who is much relied on for the purpose, to get immediate possession of New-York and Albany; to fill both of these Cities with very strong garrisons; to declare all rebels who do not join the King's Forces; to command the Hudson and East Rivers with a number of small men-of-war and cutters, stationed in different parts of it, so as wholly to cut off all communication by water between New-York and the Provinces to the northward of it, and between New-York and Albany, except for the King's service; and to prevent, also, all communication between the City of New-York and the Provinces of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, and those to the southward . . ."—*4 Am. - " In this month, Hugh Gaine printed a poem of 114 lines entitled "Gen. Gage's Soliloquy." This represented Gage in various moods. First, he mourns the destruction he has committed, his loss of friends, and his fight against men of English blood; next, he persuades himself that it is right to attack those who defy the king, and that all such rebels should be severely punished; and finally, he is again overcome with remorse at the remembrance of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and resolves to flee to some land where he is unknown. The poem ends thus:
- "To wars like these I hid a long Good Night Let North and George themselves their battles fight."

 Hook to Long Island (see Aug. 7).—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 10, 1775. He received orders from the provincial congress on Aug. 16 (q.v.).
- 9 The provincial congress resolves "That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony . . . be divided into districts or beats . . . in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able bodied and effective men . . . The battalion commanded by Col. Lasher [see July 3], the companies York . . . excepted."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 104; N. Y. Jour., Aug. 10, 1775.

- 14 A proposal is made "to the Independent companies of Col.
 Lasher's battalion for a certain number of each company to turn out as Minute Men." To "the honour of the whole battalion," they unanimously agree "to act as Minute Men, and to be ready at a moment's warning to defend their much injured Country."
 —Const. Gaz., Aug. 19, 1775.
- 16 The provincial congress orders Wooster to remain on Long Island (see Aug. 8) until further notice, because "it is probable future attempts will be made by order of Gen. Gage to take the live stock from the east end of Long Island and the islands near it."

 general received notice to return to the city.
- " "The Sub-Committee, appointed by the General Committee, to divide the city and county of New York into beats or districts for forming the militia [see Aug. 9] . . . request that the captains of Colonel Lasher's battalion, the independent and associated companies, captains of light horse and hussars, furnish their respective men forthwith with certificates of their being enlisted in their said companies, the better to enable the committee to form the said beats."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 17, 1775; N. Y. Jour., Aug. 19,

- " A letter of this date from New York concludes: "There is very little reason to expect a speedy reconciliation between the Colonies and the Mother Country, as the former do not seem the least inclined to make any concessions on their side but expect a total compliance with all their demands on the part of Great Britain.
 Independence of the Mother Country has been long in agitation, and the throwing the tea into the sea was the manoeuvre deliberately concerted to begin the attempt."—London Chron., Oct. 5-7, of 25 resolutions, which relate to the organization of the militia, the choice of officers, their duties and powers, the equipment of the men, military discipline, the form of oath, the penalties for infringement of rules, and the conduct of the militia in case of in-

- 23 Twenty-one pieces of ordnance ("nine-pounders"), "that were mounted on the Battery under Fort George," are removed by the citizens to the Common.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 631-32; 641-42. The cannon were dragged up Broadway and ranged before the liberty pole.—Const. Gaz., Aug. 26, 1775. The fact that the provincial Congress had "ordered the Cannon on Carriages at the Fortification to be removed" was communicated to "the Asia Man o' War," which thereupon "ordered 2 Barges to lye off the Fortifica<sup>n</sup> near e no' to inspect what was done."
- " On finding, about midnight, "that a Militia Comp<sup>a</sup> was privately under arms & removing the Canon," the barges drew near and fired. The militia then fired on the barges, killing one man and wounding others. "Upon this some Guns were fired from the Man o' War a 74 Gun ship, and at length the discharged a whole Broadside upon the City . . . The Militia proceeded & removed all the Canon as ordered. The City was thrown into the greatest Constern<sup>n</sup> & Distress. And next day Multitudes of Women and Children were removed."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, I: 609.
- " During the firing, "A house next to Roger Morris's and Samuel Francis's at the corner of the exchange, each had an eighteen

 but the principal damage was sustained by some small buildings adjoining the battery."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 31, 1775; 4 Am.

 by Freneau, who mentions the incident in one of his poems:
 "Scarce a broadside was ended 'till another began again—

 At first we suppos'd it was only a sham,
 'Till he drove a round ball thro' the roof of black Sam."

- " Gen. Washington writes to Gen. Wooster: "Yesterday I received advice from Boston that a number of transports have sailed on a second expedition for fresh provisions . . . we think Montauk Point on Long island a very probable place of their landing. I have, therefore, thought it best to give you the earliest intelligence, but I do not mean to confine your attention or vigilance to that place; you will please to extend your views as far as the mischief may be probably extended." In consequence of this, Wooster did not carry out the provincial congress's order of Aug.
 18 (q.v.).—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 125. He and the troops returned

- 24 Capt. Vandeput writes to the city officials: "After the event of last Night [see Aug. 23], I think it necessary to inform you, that having Information that it was intended by some People in New-York to take away the Guns from the Battery, which, as Stores belonging to the King, it was my Duty to protect. I sent a Boat to lie near the Shore, to watch their Motions; soon after twelve they began to move the Guns from the Battery, which being observed by the Officer in the Boat, he left his Station to come on board to inform me thereof, but being perceived from the Shore, he was fired upon by a great many Musketry, by which one of the Men in the Boat was shot dead. My Duty called upon me to repel an Attack of this sort as well as to defend the Guns which occasioned me to fire upon the Battery. I acquaint you with this that the People of the Town may not imagine it is my Intention to do them Hurt, which I wish as much as possible to avoid; but if they will persist in behaving in such a Manner as to make their Safety, and 1775 my Duty incompatible, the mischiefs that may arise must lie at Aug. their Doors, and not mine." In another letter of the same date, 24 Vandeput reviews the actions of the people, and then adds: "this is to require at the Hands of the Magistrates, due Satisfaction for these high Misdemeanors; as I must otherwise look upon these Acts, not as Acts of Rioters, but as done by the whole Community."

On Aug. 25, he wrote again: "I have just now received yours; in return to which I am to acquaint you that the Musket fired from our Boat was fired as a signal towards the Ship, and not at the Battery . . . You say you are at a Loss to account how my Duty could oblige me to fire upon the City, in defence of those Guons, in the Seat of civil Government; and you add, that you can neither account for my Inducement half an Hour after the return of the Boats and the Removal of the Cannon, for firing a Broadside at the City at large. You surely cannot doubt its being my Duty to defend every Part of the King's Stores, wherever they may be: For this Purpose I fired upon the Battery, as the only Means to prevent the Intentions of the People employed in removing the Guons. For a considerable Time I thought they had desisted from their Purpose, till their huzzaing and their firing from the Walls upon the Ship, convinced me to the contrary; this occasioned the Broadside to be fired, not at the City at large, but as the most effectual Method to prevent their persisting in their Pursuit, which it were impossible I could tell they had effected. I have so more to add, but that I shall persist in doing what I know to be my Duty; in the doing which I shall, if possible, avoid doing Hurt to anyone."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 28, 1775.

25 It is resolved by the provincial congress, in session at New York, "That no more cannon or stores be removed from the Battery, until further orders from this Congress. . . . That the guard be strengthened this night by an additional company, in order to prevent any insult being offered to His Excellency the Governor. And . . . That Col. Lasher be desired to strengthen the guard intended for this evening, by adding the Grenadier company to that guard . . . and that upon a message from His Excellency the Governor, they repair to the house and protect him from insult."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 122.

30 Pastor Shewkiirk records in his diary: "Things were the same in the Town as yesterday, & rather worse. A correspondence was carried on between the Capt. of the Asia, & the Mayor of the City [see Aug. 24], & thro' the latter with the Committee or Congress, to adjust matters. Gov. Tryon acted as Mediator."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

26 An item of London news states: "His Majesty has been pleased to promote William Tryon, Esq; Governor of the province of New-York, to be a Major in the first regiment of foot guards, from which appointment it cannot be supposed that gentleman will be honoured with any military command upon the American staff."—Livington's Gazetteer, Nov. 2, 1775.

28 Pastor Shewkiirk records in his diary: "The Moving out of the Town continues, & the City looks in some Streets as if the Plague had been in it, so many Houses being shut up."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

29 A small sloop comes down the North River from "Little Esopus," and anchors beside the "Asia," in order, it is supposed, "to supply that Ship with Necessaries." The sloop was closely watched until Sept. 3, "when she set Sail and stood up the River attended by an armed Sloop and some Boats from the Asia, but she was immediately pursued by a Number of Boats from this City, and soon taken."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775.

30 An extract of a letter from New York to a merchant in London reads: "By the ship which brings you this you will undoubtedly receive the New York Papers containing an account of the conduct of Captain Vandeput of the Asia, in firing on the town to stop the removal of the cannon which were carryng away by order of the Congress [see Aug. 23]. These papers speak very disrespectfully of the Captain's behaviour; but I assure you they have treated him with great injustice, by charging him with cruelty and inhumanity. The case was briefly and truly this: Captain Vandeput being informed that the people were removing his Majesty's cannon, &c. he fired only a few shot into the town by way of intimidation, and to stop their progress notwithstanding which they actually moved off near twenty pieces, and but three of the provincials were slightly wounded; whereas, had [he] been cruel or inhuman, he could soon have destroyed the whole town . . . But the Patriots here constantly misrepresent everything; and our news-papers

30 A boat, in which there are two negroes and two white men, is seen coming from the transport in the North River. When taken before the congress, the negroes said they were freemen, and had been hired to carry two women on board the transport. This they did, and then fetched the men on shore. One white man, "being a suspicious Fellow, and of a refractory Temper," was committed to the care of the guard in the barracks, but the other three were discharged. "The People that were on the Wharf, drew the Boat out of the Water, and carried it to the Commons, where they set it on Fire, and reduced it to Ashes, amidst the Acclamations of Thousands."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775; Livington's Gazetteer, Sept. 7, 1775; N. Y. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775.

"We are informed that the first desertion of the Provincial troops was from the regiments raised by the New Yorkers, and that it was occasioned by one of their sergeants and a few of their rank and filemen being taken into custody for a supposed insult to one of their officers;—the sergeant demanded a Court Martial, which was refused, and he and the private men were punished with a degree of severity before unheard of in that country. This spread such a panic among the rebel troops, as they had no redress from such treatment whenever their commander thought fit to inflict it, that in the course of two days near 300 of them deserted."—London Chron., Aug. 29-31, 1775.

The "sigo of the Blue Bell," a tavern kept by one Linton, is mentioned in an order of the provincial congress.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 129. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

Sept. 1 A sloop with dispatches from Gen. Gage, which has been lying near the man-of-war, sends her boat ashore with four men and one woman, who are immediately taken prisoners and carried to the guard-house. The woman was discharged, but the men were detained for further examination. The boat was "stove to Pieces on the Beach near Greenwich, and then burnt."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775; *N. Y. 2 The provincial congress passes a resolution providing that "the fremen of the city of New-York be, and they are hereby exempted from the military night-watch, and being called upon as minute-men, or of the militia to go out of the said city."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 135; Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 671.

The provincial congress sends the following letter to Augustus van Cortlandt, clerk of the city and county: "The alarming state of public affairs command our attention to the safety of the records under your care, and although we do not at present perceive any immediate danger to this city; yet we are of opinion that matters of such vast importance should not be entrusted to an uncertain contingency. You must be sensible that if, by any mischance, the office should be destroyed, it would unhinge the property of numbers in this Colony, and throw all our legal proceedings into the most fatal confusion.

"We do, therefore, request you to inquire for some place of security to deposit the records under your care, and that you inform the Committee of Safety of such place, that they may give further directions on this subject."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 135. See Sept. 5.

3 An anonymous letter of this date, directed to Maj. Thomas Moecrief at Boston, was found, on Sept. 7 (q. v.), among the papers taken from Capt. Isaac Winn. It read in part:

"Dear Major: I wrote to you a few days ago, by the transport which sailed from hence. I hope you have received it. It is now decreed by Congress criminal to speak, and as it would be equally so to write, not knowing into whose hands this may fall before it reaches you, I am determined not to transgress, as I wish to remain in the Country as long as I can, and not to do any thing that may cause a banishment, or the punishment of being sent to the mines of Simsbury, which are punishments daily inflicted on those poor culprits who are found or even supposed to be inimical. Don't think of returning here while this unhappy contest continues; you will be ferreted and exposed to insults I would wish you to avoid." This letter was judged, "from the handwriting and other circumstances," to have been written by Theophilact Bache, a merchant of the city. Bache was ordered to appear before the committee, but the door-keeper reported that he had gone out of town.—4 Am. Arch., III: 884-85.

"A heavy gale of wind blows down a "new Store House of Mr. Jacob Remsen's at White Hall."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775.

An extract of a letter from London states: "The Preparations

- 1775 making against your poor devoted Country are amazing. They are Sept.
Sept. taking up even East-Indiamen for Transports. Nothing vigorous or 11 4 or decisive will be attempted before the Spring."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 13, 1775.
- 5 Augustus van Cortlandt informs the committee of safety that prior to their request of Sept. 2 (q. v.), he had "caused the publick records to be put into chests, and secured them in a cellar in his garden made for that purpose, of stone and brick, well arched, and exceeding dry. This precaution was taken against accidents happening by fire; but should the City be invaded by an army from Great Britain, or any British troops, he in such case intended to remove them to his brother's, at Yonkers, in the County of Westchester." If the committee shall judge any other place more secure, he says he will be "glad to be informed thereof, that he may communicate the same to the Corporation of this City, for their approbation."—4 Am. Arch., III: 644; Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 609-10. On the receipt of this letter, the committee agreed "That the disposition Mr. Van Cortlandt has made of the records of his office are satisfactory to this Committee for the present; and that he be informed thereof."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 138.
- "At least one third of the citizens have moved with their effects out of Town and many of the Inhabitants will shortly experience the distresses of necessity and want."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 632.
- 7 Isaac Sears reports to the committee of safety that Capt. Isaac L. Winn, "who sailed in a Sloop bound to the eastward, and was suspected of a design of furnishing the Army and Navy with necessaries," was overtaken, by members of the committee, "above Hellgate," and that Scott and Livingston, upon examining the captain, received "such sufficient satisfaction of his friendly disposition to the liberties of America, as induced them to believe the suspicious against him to be entirely groundless." After hearing this report, the committee gave Capt. Winn a certificate attesting to his "friendly sentiments to the liberties of America," and asserting his right to continue his voyage "without any interruption or molestation whatever." A number of letters, "directed to Gentlemen of the Army, and others in Boston," which had been taken from Winn, were then opened. All were found to deal with "private business," except one anonymous communication dated Sept. 3 (q. v.).—4 Am. Arch., III: 883-84 and 884 (footnote).
- "The provincial congress orders "That the people called Quakers, residing in the City and County of New-York, be requested to deliver in to this Committee, without delay, a list of all the males belonging to their society, from the age of sixteen to sixty." A copy of this order is to be served "on one or more of the most respectable of the society."—4 Am. Arch., III: 883. On Sept. 15 "A Letter from the Friends, or people usually called Quakers, was read and filed. They thereby allege that they cannot make a return to this Committee of all their males from sixteen to sixty, consistent with their religious principles."—Ibid., III: 896.
- 8 A letter of the New York firemen to the provincial congress reads: "Gentlemen: We, firemen of the City of New-York, beg leave to lay our state and condition before you; that we cannot serve two masters—to be drawn out in the military service and to lend our fire-engines. We desire the same privilege as is granted to us by the act of the Legislature.
- "We are willing to serve as firemen; and if a general attack should be made upon our City, we are willing and ready to be drawn out with the rest of the citizens; and if that is not agreeable to the honourable Congress, we must lay down firemanship and turn out as soldiers. We, the subscribers, are officers and foremen of the several engines."—4 Am. Arch., III: 669; Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 671.
- "An extract of a letter from New York to London reads: "We have made a beginning of casting of brass cannon in this city [see June 27]. Yesterday a brass six pounder, cast by James Byers, was proved with double proof, and stood it; it is as fine a piece of cannon as ever you saw. This city is formed into four battalions, two of which are formed of independent companies, properly uniformed, and make a fine appearance."—London Chron., Oct. 28-31, 1775; Upcott Coll., in *N. Y. - 9 "The Lady Gage from New York, which is arrived at Falmouth, has brought over several families from New York, who were alarmed with a report, which gains ground very fast, that if matters are not adjusted between the mother country and the colonies before next spring, that the first service the regulars are to go upon, is the destruction of the American cities."—London Chron., Sept. 7-9, 1775.
- An advertisement reads: "Roman's Map of Boston, Is just printed, published, and to be sold by Richard Sause, At his Store near the Fly-Market, Little Dock Street, Where Subscriptions are taken in for any number.
- "This Map of Boston, &c. is one of the most correct that has ever been published. The draught was taken by the most skillful Draughtsman in all America, and who was on the spot at the engagements of Lexington and Bunker's-Hill. Every Well-wisher to this country cannot but delight in seeing a plan of the ground on which our brave American Army conquered the British ministerial forces.
- "Price plain 5s. Coloured 6s. and 6d. Pennsylvania currency."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 11, 1775. This was the first map of the "Seat of Hostilities" engraved in America. The author's collection contains a copy of the first issue as well as a very similar and equally rare London map of the "Seat of War," dated Sept. 2. Beroard Romans was at one time employed by the New York committee of safety. For an account of his life, and a list of his plates, see Stauffer, *Am. - Because a great number of the enlisted men are not armed, and every effort to hire or purchase arms has failed to procure a sufficient number, the committee of safety passes the following resolution: "That all such arms as are fit for the use of the troops raised in this Colony, which shall be found in the hands or custody of any person who has not signed the general association in this Colony, shall be impressed for the use of the said troops." All the muskets so seized are to be appraised and certificates of their value given to their owners who are to be paid by the treasurer of the provincial congress "provided the same be not returned at or before the conclusion of the present unhappy controversy between Great Britain and the united Colonies."—*Jour. - "From all accounts lately received from New York, there are great hopes, that, notwithstanding all the manœuvres of the present ruling party there, in case that place becomes the head quarters of the main body of [British] troops in America, the friends of government will come in, and join them in great numbers."—London Chron., Sept. 14-16, 1775.
- Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "The Town-Soldiers, or the Minute Men made a great Parade to-day; marching with their Baggage & Provision, &c. It was thought they went on an Expedition, but it was only a Trial. They went but 5 miles, & came back in the Ev'ning; they made not only for themselves, but for the greatest Part of the Inhabitants an idle, noisy, & exceedingly ill-spent Day; & they got, most of them, drunk; fought together where they had stopt; & when they came back to Town; so that many are now under the Doctor's & Surgeon's Hands. May the Lord have Mercy on this poor City."—Joanston, The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 104.
- Mayor Hicks, "attending at the door," is called in, and informs the committee of safety that Gov. Tryon sent for him yesterday, and told him "that he received a letter from Lord Dartmouth, informing him that orders had been given to the commanders of His Majesty's ships in America, that in case any more troops should be raised, or any fortifications erected, or any of His Majesty's stores taken, that the commanders of the ships of war should consider such cities or places in a state of rebellion."—*Jour. - "Every thing that is in the utmost confusion at New York; instead of that liberty which was the happy right of the meanest Inhabitant, tyranny is established; no person is suffered to be neuter, and yet none is left to their own free choice which party they will join. The ruling party carries all before them."—London Chron., Sept. 16-19, 1775.

- 1775 An extract of a letter from London reads: "Preparations continue making here to bring the Americans under Ministerial Subjection, but as it will be some Years, if ever, before that can be done by Force of Arms, I imagine the Parliament, which meets soon, will make some Propositions to that injured Country, such as will restore its Trade, which is now lost to England."
- Sept. 20 Another London letter states: "The Ministry are determined to persevere; great Preparations are making to take the Field in the Spring. There will be a considerable Army in America from 30 to 50,000 Men; it is expected some foreign Troops will be taken in pay; am afraid you will have many in New-York, and it is supposed their landing in your Province will be opposed, [which] makes me feel for you, and my other New-York Friends; for I expect your City will be laid in Ashes."—*N. - 22 John Simmons is paid £29:2:6 "for Expences attending the Committee of the Water Works [see Aug. 29, 1774] & other Committees of this Corporation."—M. C. C., VIII: 105. Simmons kept a tavern at the corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see Oct. 8, 1770).
- 23 A broadside warning the inhabitants against electing magistrates who are inimical to the interests of the colonies is issued. It is addressed "To the Freeman and Freeholders of the City and County of New-York," and signed "The Remembrancer." It declares that members of the common council have "countenanced, and even abetted, those who were supplying of General Gage," that they "plotted the ruin" of Isaac Sears and other patriots, that they concealed the embarkation of the 18th regiment as long as possible, and that they toasted Dr. Cooper. The writer admits that these enemies have little influence at present, but he asks: "why should we honour men with our suffrages, who have done us all the injury they could, and, who are under no restraint, but that of fear, from working our ruin."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
- 31 The committee of safety resolves that "any soldier belonging to the Continental army who shall be absent from his corps in this Colony, without a furlough . . . shall be deemed a deserter" and measures taken for his apprehension; and further that "if any person . . . shall knowingly harbour or conceal any soldier belonging to the Continental army without his having a furlough . . . he shall be deemed and treated as an enemy to his country, and be subject to pay all the expences that shall accrue in apprehending and sending such soldier to his corps."—*Jour. - Oct. One of the Rhode Island delegates lays before the continental congress a part of the instructions issued by the assembly of that province. This declares that the assembly "is persuaded, that the building and equipping an American fleet, as soon as possible, would greatly and essentially conduce to the preservation of the lives, liberty and property of the good people of these Colonies and therefore instruct their delegates to use their influence at the ensuing congress for building at the Continental expence a fleet of sufficient force for the protection of these colonies, and for employing them in such manner and places as will most effectually annoy our enemies."—*Jour. - 6 Wm. Smith writes to Gen. Haldimand, commander of the British forces in New York, regarding the "unnatural Controversy, which, if it lasts a few Years, may bring the British Empire to the Brink of Destruction." He says: "This winter will decide the great Question, whether Great Britain and her Colonies, are to be happily reconciled, or to prosecute their Animosities to an eternal Separation! . . . The Americans are voluntary Subjects to Congresses and Armies of their own forming, who are systematically supporting a Principle, which no Man dare any longer to controvert on this Side of the Water.
- "As it never would be expedient for Great Britain to attempt to impose Taxes upon her Colonies, without their Consent, . . . to me it appears to be Madness to plunge into a War, for supporting a Claim of Right to do, what she never means to execute in Fact . . . What hinders then the passing of an Act, which while it avers her Sovereignty in every Thing else, acknowledges that American Aids for the general Defence, shall flow from their own Spontaneity, and the devising of a Plan to open the Stutes of our Generosity, as often as the public Exigencies of the Empire, shall call for our united Assistance?—Believe me, that the Dread of being taxed by the Commons of Great Britain, is the Soul of the League, that bands the Provinces together. . . . I am confident, that if Great Britain will declare her Intention to govern us in Future, in the very Way, which I am perswaded she would have chosen to govern . . . Peace will instantly succeed—Nay but for the Irritation of that unfortunate Excursion to Concord . . . and the subsequent Battle and Conflagration at Charles Town, which Fame says your Advice would have prevented, America would before this Day have liberated her Trade. . . . I say if . . . no Blood had been spilled, . . . we should before now have been employed in Cultivating our antient Affection. Something of this Sort will still succeed, and leave Great Britain all the Sovereignty that she wants for Glory Strength or Opulence & as much as she can ever exercise, over a Country so remote."—From draft of the letter among the unbound *Wm. - 9 Between 30 and 40 loads of the barrack-master's and hospital stores are taken away by the inhabitants. They were restored the next day on the governor's request to the mayor. The city is in "continual agitation and ferment," and this is increased by a resolution of congress to consider the expediency of seizing the crown officers. Tryon makes immediate demands upon Mayor Hicks regarding his personal safety (see Oct. 13).—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 638-4n. Smith says that this removal of the stores was "the Feast of a drunken Guard in the Barracks commanded by Colo Lasher as Capt of the Grenadiers."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

- 1775 As "it is highly necessary for the Sake of Liberty, that the Oct. Duration of the Power of all Persons entrusted with high Authority, 10 should be limited to a short Period," the provincial congress resolves that congress be dissolved on Nov. 14, and a new one elected.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 23, 1775. For the nominations made by the city committee, see Nov. 3.
- 13 Gov. Tryon sends the following letter to Mayor Hicks: "From undoubted authority from the City of Philadelphia the Continental Congress have recommended it to the Provincial Congress to seize or take up the officers of this Government, and particularly myself, by name. I am therefore to desire you will inform the Corporation and citizens of this City, that I place my security here in their protection; that when that confidence is withdrawn, by any seizure of my person, the Commander of His Majesty's ships of war in the harbour will demand that the inhabitants deliver me on board the fleet, and on refusal, enforce the demand with their whole power. Therefore, anxious to prevent, if possible, so great a calamity to this City, as well as inconvenience to myself, I am ready, should the voice of the citizens be unfavourable to my staying among them, immediately to embark on board the Asia requesting that the citizens will defeat every attempt that may be made to hinder my removal, with my domesticks and effects, should that be their wish, since I returned to this Province with every honourable intention to serve them, consistent with my bounden duty to my Sovereign."—Am. Arch., III: 1052; and N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 658 (in which the letter is dated Oct. 10). The date of Oct. 10 appears to be erroneous, as Mayor Hicks' letter in reply, dated Oct. 14, begins: "Instantly upon receipt of your Excellencies Commands signified by your letter of yesterday."
- As a result of the correspondence that followed, the governor expressed himself as not wholly satisfied with the assurances of protection given him, and announced, on Oct. 19, that he had removed to the "Hullias Packet," where he would be "ready to do such business of the Country as the situation of the times will permit."—Am. Arch., III: 1052-54; Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 19 and 26, 1775; N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 659-61. On Oct. 30 (q.v.), he went on board the "Dutchess of Gordon."
- 17 Pres. Hancock writes to the provincial congress of New York that he has been instructed by the continental congress "to desire you will give directions for the immediate removal of all the sulphur now in the city of New York, to a place of greater safety, at a distance from the city, and you will please to inform Congress to what place you have ordered it."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 183; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1302.
- " John Hunter submits to the provincial congress a plan "for establishing a Linen Manufactory." After discussing the need of this, he suggests the following estimate for the work: "£— to be appropriated by the Congress to the purpose of setting up manufactories of linen, woollen, &c., in the Province. This money to be repaid (if repaid at all) by a lottery; let the profits of the manufactories be applied to publick services. It will not do to repay the £— with the money arising from the sale of the goods, because this will very soon put an end to manufacturing."—Am. Arch., III: 1081-82; Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 167. When this is read, the congress decides "That the said petition and plans . . . lay on the table for the perusal of the members."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 178.
- 23 "Notice is hereby given, That a Constitutional Post-Office is established in this City, by the Post-Master-General of all the United Colonies on the Continent of North-America, from whence the following Posts are regularly dispatched:
"To Philadelphia on Monday, Wednesday and Friday,
"To Albany on Thursday.
"To Hartford, in Connecticut, on Thursday;
"And to New-London, Newport, and Providence on Monday. . . . N. B. The Office is kept at Nod and Hazard's near the Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 23, 1775. See June 19.
- 25 The provincial congress appoints a committee "to consider of, and devise ways and means for the safety of the women and children in this city in case of necessity."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 185; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1305.

- 28 Many citizens have become suspicious that the provincial congress has "received intimations"—intimations which it does not divulge—that the city will be made "a garrison town or destroyed." Therefore the congress conceives it to be an "indispensable duty to assure the citizens that they have received no private intelligence of any danger, and that whenever they do they will take the earliest method of informing them of it, that the citizens may provide, in the best manner they can, for the security of their families and effects."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 187; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1308-09.
- Tryon goes on board the ship "Dutchess of Gordon," under the protection of the "Asia" (see Oct. 13), with Atty-Gen. Kempe and Deputy-Paymaster Barrow, and these vessels remain in the harbour. He reported to Dartmouth, on Nov. 11, that "the Friends of Government" came freely to him there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 643.
- The committee of 100 appoints a sub-committee "to take in subscriptions to establish a Manufactory, to employ the Poor of the City and County of New-York."—Am. Arch., III: 1264.
- " The provincial council, on board the "Dutchess of Gordon," takes cognizance of Gov. Tryon's reasons for leaving the city, and of his correspondence with the mayor about it. The minutes of the meeting are sent to the lords of trade.—Cal. Coun. Min., 506.
- The clerk of the common council is directed to "give Notice to such of the Managers of the Bridewell Lottery (see April 25, 1774) that have Debts outstanding on Acc<sup>t</sup> of the said Lottery, that this Corporation being now much in Want of money to carry on the Building of the said Bridewell, are desirous that the said Debts be collected in immediately, and that the said managers prosecute, without delay such Persons as shall neglect to discharge the same."—*M. - 3 The city committee nominates the following 21 persons as delegates to the new provincial congress (see Oct. 10): Peter V. B. Livingston, Isaac Low, Alexander McDougall, Joseph Hallet, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasher, Isaac Roosevelt, James Beckman, Benjamin Kissam, John M. Scott, John van Cortlaedt, Jacobus van Zandt, John Marston, Isaac Sears, John Ray, Theodorius van Wyck, Capt. Anthony Rutgers, John Imlay, Gabriel H. Ludlow, Benjamin Helme, and Comfort Sands. The election is to be held on Nov. 7 (q.v.).—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 6, 1775.
- 4 "The Petition of the Congress of America to the King" is read in the house of commons. There arose a dispute after the reading of the petition as to whether Mr. Penn, governor of Pennsylvania, who had brought the petition from America should be called to authenticate it and give his views on the condition of the colonies. It was finally decided that he should be asked to come before parliament on Nov. 10. He was examined on that day as to the character of the Americans and of congress, the reason for armament, the resources of Pennsylvania, their attitude in regard to taxation, and the powers of congress.
- After Penn's withdrawal, the Duke of Richmond opened the debate. He pointed out the difficulties of carrying on a war against a people who had already shown their skill as fighters in the battle of Lexington, whose love for liberty might not be quenched even by the desolation of their towns, who knew the nature of their country, and who had sufficient internal resources to carry on the war. On the other hand the British would have to raise an army of hirelings, to carry provisions across the ocean, and fight in an unknown land.
- He concluded by moving "That the matter of the said Petition affords Ground of Conciliation of the unhappy Differences subsisting between the Mother Country and the Colonies; and that it is highly necessary that proper steps be immediately taken for attaining so desirable an object."
- The Earl of Dartmouth contended that it was impossible to recognize the petition without at the same time relinquishing the sovereignty of the British Parliament. In reply to Richmond's arguments he pointed out that "in a war with America they would easily exceed in numbers, and that the fact that the Americans had an army so well equipped was a proof of their disloyalty." He further asked: "Did it become the offending party to dictate the terms of peace?"
- The Earl of Shelburne declared "there were only two obstacles which could be urged against the motion. It might be urged in the first place, that to yield to the proposal of the colonists was to give up the point of taxation. In the next place it might be censured, as derogating from the dignity of parliament, to treat with an assembly not legalized as a congress. . . . The point of taxation had repeatedly been given up, even by the ministers themselves. . . . Taking money without the consent of the people, was so 1775 fundamentally wrong, that the more we consider it, the more we become convinced that we have no right to tax America. . . .

 Nov. 4 Should the idea of treating with a Congress obstruct our procedure in pacific measures? There was a time when American Congresses were highly respected by government. . . . What wise men once approved, deserved better treatment than hasty reprobation." He said he could find no unreasonableness or want of respect in the petition. "At home," he continued, "administration had found themselves incapable of raising the number of men required. Recruits had not offered with alacrity; officers had not made voluntary tenders of their services; they in general disrelished the business."

Lord Lyttelton doubted the impartiality of Penn's evidence, and declared himself opposed to "those audacious rebels, who came and endeavoured to impose on his Majesty with insidious, traitorous, false expressions of loyalty to him, and of obedience to the British parliament, while they in the same breath appeal to the people of Great Britain and Ireland, abuse the parliament, deny their power, invite their fellow-subjects to make common cause of it, and thus at once endeavour to involve every part of this great empire in one general scene of rebellion and blood-shed."

The Earl of Sandwich approved of Lyttelton's speech, and added several arguments for the opposition. "America is not entirely prepared," he said, "to resist our power; or if she be, she is still desirous of rendering herself stronger. Suspend your operations, and you furnish her with the very means of rising in her demands, if not of totally disclaiming all dependence on this country." Finally, he cited the ease experienced in recruiting for the navy.

Dartmouth's motion was lost: "For the motion 27; Proxies 6; Against it 60; Proxies 26."—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 895-936.

"The committee of safety receives the following letter (signed "A") from Philadelphia: "I sincerely sympathize with you in your distress, and, from the inhuman proceedings of those tyrants who intend America, I am afraid your valuable Town of New-York is in danger of being burnt. I would therefore recommend to you to prepare fire-vessels, which, properly made use of, will defend you against your infernal enemies, and save your Town."—4 Am. Arch., III: 1351.

7 All of the men nominated by the committee of safety on Nov. 3 (q. v.) as delegates to the congress are elected, with the exceptions of Isaac Low, Abraham Walton, and John Marston. In place of these last, Cornelius Clopper, Thomas Smith, and John Morton are chosen.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 13, 1775.

8 Dartmouth informs the governors in America that they "are at liberty to withdraw themselves from the Colony whenever their personal safety shall make it necessary for them so to do."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 642.

10 "The Sub Committee appointed by the general Committee, to consider of a mode for employing the industrious poor of this City" (see Oct. 31), reports that a number of people have formed themselves into a company "for the promoting American manufactures," and have decided upon the following regulations:

"I. That the Society shall be called, The New-York Society for employing the industrious Poor, and promoting Manufactory.

"II. That the company shall continue for three whole years, commencing on the day of the first general meeting of the subscribers.

"III. That a single share in the company be fixed at Ten Pounds . . . and after payment of their respective subscriptions, every subscriber shall be entitled to a vote in common on all occasions, and also to be elected to any office belonging to the company; and no person shall be entrusted with any office, but a member thereof.

"IV. That we will begin with the manufacturing of Woollens, linen, cotton, and nails, and carry on the same to the greatest extent and advantage . . .

"V. That the General Meeting of the Subscribers, shall be called by written tickets within one week after two hundred Subscriptions are obtained, in order to choose by ballot, for the first year, twelve Managers, a Secretary and Treasurer . . .

"VI. That one third of the Managers and no more, be changed, annually on the day of election, by re-electing eight of the old Managers, and adding four new to their number . . .

"VII. That the Managers carry on the Manufactory agreeable to the rules of the Company, and shall have the whole direction thereof . . .

"VIII. That the Treasurer shall give security for the faithful discharge of his trust; and account for, and deliver up to his successor in said office, all such moneys, books, writings, and effects, as shall then be in his hands . . .

"IX. That a state of the manufactory, and of the companies accounts, shall be fairly made out, at the end of every six months, and kept in the manufactory store, for the inspection of the members. . . ."

The report is thereupon unanimously approved by the general committee, "as proper to be recommended to the consideration of the inhabitants of this City."—N. Y. Jour., Nov. 16, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1424-25.

Jones's who will work for 6/ a day & Live accordingly—All Business stagnated the City half deserted for fear of a Bombardment—a new Congress elected—. . . Yesterday the new Congress was to meet but I believe they did not make a House. . . . Who can prize life without Liberty? It is a Bauble only fit to be thrown away."—N. Y. City during the Am. Revolution (privately printed for the Mercantile Library Ass'n, 1861), 84-85. The letter is from "Greenwich," which is usually considered to have extended only as far north as 21st St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987). As a footnote states that Scott resided "in the seat since known as 'The Hermitage' and 'The Temple of Health,' which remained, until a recent date, in West Forty-third Street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues," and as Pl. 41, Vol. I, indicates that Scott's house really was in that neighbourhood, it is apparent that the name "Greenwich" was sometimes applied to a much larger section than we generally associate with the village. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947, and Pl. 176, Vol. III. Mrs. Lamb is evidently in error in placing Scott's residence at 31rd St., instead of 41rd St.—Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 90 (footnote). See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 212.

Parson Seabury (see Feb. 23), Mayor Underhill of Westchester, and Judge Fowler of Eastchester, are seized by a band of Connecticut raiders led by Capt. Sears. One account of the seizure reads: "On the 20th of this month, sixteen respectable inhabitants of this town, in company with Captain Sears, set out from this place [New Haven], for East and West Chester, in the province of New-York, to disarm the principal Tories there, and secure the persons of Parson Seabury, Judge Fowler, and Lord Underhill.—On their way thither they were joined by the Captains Richards, Seilicke, and Mead with about 80 men.—At Martinec they burnt a small sloop, which was purchased by government, for the purpose of carrying provisions on board the Asia.—At East-Chester they seized Judge Fowler, then repaired to West-Chester and secured Seabury and Underhill. Having possessed themselves of these three captives, they sent them to Connecticut under a strong guard." The main body of the troops pressed on to New York, where they attacked Livingston's printing-office on Nov. 23 (q. v.).—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In a memorial to the general assembly of Connecticut, Dec. 20, Seabury adds further details of the raid, as follows: "Your Memorialist begs leave further to represent, that he hath heard a verbal account that one of his daughters was abused and insulted by some of the people when at his house on the 22d of November. That a bayonet was thrust through her cap, and her cap thereby tore from [her] head. That the handkerchief about her neck was pierced by a bayonet, both before and behind. That a quilt in the frame on which the daughters of your Memorialist were at work was so cut and pierced with bayonets as to be rendered useless. That . . . the people obliged the wife of your Memorialist to open his desk, where they examined his papers," and from which some money was taken. In the same memorial, Seabury thus represents the charges against him:—

"That he . . . had entered into a combination with six or seven others to seize Captain Sears as he was passing through the County of West Chester, and Convey him on board a man-of-war.

"That your Memorialist had signed a Protest . . . against the proceedings of the Continental Congress.

"That your Memorialist had neglected to open his church on the day of the Continental Fast.

"And that he had written pamphlets and newspapers against the liberties of America.

1775 "To the first and last of the charges your Memorialist pleads Nov. not guilty. . . . He considers it a high infringement of the liberty 22 for which the virtuous sons of America are now nobly struggling, to be carried by force out of one colony into another, for the sake either of trial or imprisonment." He also defends himself against the other two charges. Three days after his "spirited memorial" had been written, "the gang who took [him] prisoner thought proper to withdraw their guard and let [him] return to his desolated home," after a captivity of about five weeks.—Dawson's Westchester Co., N. Y. during the Am. Rev., 136-39.

In a letter, of Dec. 12, to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, the provincial congress of New York remonstrated against the raids on Rivington and Seabury. With regard to Parson Seabury, the letter says: "Mr. Seabury, we are informed, is still detained.
If such should be the case, we must entreat your friendly interposition for his immediate discharge; the more especially as, considering his ecclesiastical character, (which, perhaps, is venerated by many friends to liberty,) the severity that has been used towards him may be subject to misconstructions prejudicial to the common cause."—4 Am. Arch., IV: 402.

Fowler and Underhill were released much earlier than Seabury, after having subscribed to depositions in which they apologized for signing a protest against the resolutions of the continental congress.—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775. Dawson, op. cit., 139, footnote, cites bitter political controversies between Isaac Sears and both Seabury and Rivington as the reason for the harsher treatment received by them.

23 The Connecticut "banditti" (see Nov. 22) continue their marauding expedition by an attack on Rivington's printing-office.
A band of about 75 entered New York "at noon-day on horseback, with bayonets fixed, in the greatest regularity went down the main street and drew up in close order before the printing office of the infamous James Rivington.—A small detachment entered it, and [in] about three quarters of an hour, brought off the principal part of his types, for which they offered to give an order on Lord Dun-more. They then faced and wheeled to the left, and marched out of town to the tune of Yankee doodle. The vast concourse of people assembled at the Coffee-House bridge, on their leaving the ground, gave them three very hearty cheers."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775; cf. N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), Dec. 7, 1775. For a fuller compilation of contemporary reports and opinions regarding the event, see Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 813-27.

The incident brings together the general committee for the city and county. They consider the act "a breach of the Association," and a motion is made "that Isaac Sears, Samuel Broome, and John Woodward, be cited to appear before this Board, in answer for their conduct in entering the City this day, with a number of Horse, in a hostile manner."—4 Am. Arch., III: 1626.

Lossing, in his Field Book of the Revolution, and Sparks, in his Life of Gouverneur Morris, describing the affair, say that the types were melted into bullets. Dawson disputes this, declaring that Connecticut printers were too glad to increase their limited supplies of types to convert them into bullets, for which common, cheaper lead was better adapted.—Dawson, op. cit., 132, footnote. The Journal's account says, further, that "Seabury, Fowler, and Underhill were (with the types and arms) safely lodged in New Haven."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In reporting to Dartmouth the raid upon Rivington, Gov.
Tryon wrote: "Isaac Sears is evidently a tool of the Continental Army, publicly declaring he acts regardless of Congresses and Committees; and I am told by good Authority he shewed a letter he received from General Lee, recommending the seizure of my person, and that he should do it at all events, and that the Continental Army would bear him out. . . ."

"The intimation of Isaac Sears' design speedily to revisit this Province with a more numerous body of the Connecticut Rioters, and to take away the Records of the Province induced me to order such publick Records as were most interesting to the Crown to be brought on board to me. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 646.

On Nov. 26, John Jay, a New York delegate to the continental congress, wrote from Philadelphia to the president of the provincial congress in New York: "The New-England exploit is much talked of, and conjectures are numerous as to the part the Convention will take relative to it; some consider it as an ill compliment to the Government of the Province, and prophesy that you have too much christian meekness to take any notice of it. For my own part, I don't approve of the feat, and think it neither argues much wisdom, or much bravery; at any rate if it was to have been done, I wish our own people, and not strangers, had taken the liberty of doing it.

I confess I am not a little jealous of the honour of the Province, and am persuaded that its reputation can not be maintained without some little spirit being mingled with its prudence."—*Jour. Provin.
Cong.*, I: 218. A similar sentiment was expressed by the general committee of the city and county in a petition to the provincial congress on Dec. 5. They believed the repetition of such incursions "will be productive of many great and evil consequences," and expressed the hope that the provincial congress might "devise some expedient, to prevent, for the future, the inhabitants of any of the neighbouring Colonies coming into this, to direct the publick affairs of it or to destroy the property or invade the liberty of its inhabitants."—4 Am. Arch., IV: 185-86. For the action of the provincial congress, see Dec. 12.

Rivington's New-York Gazetteer (see April 22, 1773) suspends publication. This was resumed on Oct. 4, 1777 (q. v.).—See Early N. Y. Newspapers, II: 428; and the "Bibliography of Am. Newspapers," in the Am. Antiquarian Soc. Proceedings, XXVII (N.S.):

The common council authorizes payment of £10 to Stephen Allen for the repair of the "new Road" for one year.—M. C. C., VIII: 117. Apparently, Allen did not get his money at this time, for we find that a bill of his, sworn to before Alderman John Broome on Sept. 10, 1784, and paid at that time by warrant No. 152 (M. C. C., 1784-1831, I: 75), was for "keeping the road in repair from G<sup>o</sup> George Street to saad hill road in y<sup>e</sup> year 1775—from Jan<sup>y</sup> 1st to Decem<sup>r</sup> 31st."—From the original, preserved in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. Great George Street was the name given to the extension of Broadway from about Ann St. to the present Astor Pl. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995, title "Broadway"). It is first shown (without name) on Pl. 50, Vol. I.

It may have been as early as this time that the arch stone bridge at the present Canal St., on Broadway, was erected, for discussion of which see Pl. 83-h, Vol. III; and April 16, 1772.

A social club which had assembled Saturday evenings, in the winter at Francis' Tavern, corner Broad and Dock Sts., and in summer at Kip's Bay, dispersed this month. A list of its members was found among the effects of one of them, John Moore, and presented by his son, Thomas W. C. Moore, to the N. Y. Hist. Soc.
Among these are some of the best known men of their time, including John Jay, Gouverneur Morris, and Robert R. Livingston.
They appear as either "disaffected" or "loyal," and other comments about each of them have been added. The list was printed in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 548-49.

Gov. Tryon obtains permission to return to England (see July 7); he writes to Samuel Bayard, deputy-secretary, concerning the safety of the records.—Cal. Coun. Min., 506.

A provincial council meeting is held on board the ship "Dutchess of Gordon," in New York harbour, the following members being present: Gov. Tryon, and Messrs. De Lancey, Aphorh, Smith, Wallace, Cruger, and Jauncey. Upon an "Intimation that Captain Sears had formed a Design of carrying them into New England as a Pledge for or to compel the Fidelity of this Province to the great Association," Tryon directed the deputy secretary
"to remove for the present, on board the ship Dutchess of Gordon, such records as immediately concern the interest of the crown."
The council approves this order, but when the governor suggests the removal also of the records which relate to private property, Smith contents that "if any man was hurt by the Loss of the Records the Authors of the Removal would be answerable in Damages ad might be advised." The other members agree with Smith, and therefore advise that Tryon leave these latter "in their present situation in the secretary's office."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V; Report of the Sec. of State, relative to the Records, &c. in his office (No. 2. In Senate, Jan. 5, 1820).

Gov. Tryon, still on board the "Dutchess of Gordon" in the harbour, sends to Mayor Hicks a letter addressed "To the Inhabitants of the Colony." He says that he has "royal permission to withdraw" (see Dec. 1)—and declares his readiness to perform every service in his power "to promote the common Felicity." He adds: "It has given me great Pain to view the Colony committed to my Care in such a turbulent State as not to have afforded me since my arrival any Prospect of being able to take the dispasionate and deliberate sense of its Inhabitants in a constitutional manner upon the Resolution of Parliament for composing the 1775 present Turmoils in the Provinces:—a Resolution that was intended Dec. for the Basis of an Accommodation and . . . for the purpose of 4 restoring the general Tranquillity & Security of the Empire.

"I owe it to my affection for this Colony to declare my Wish that some Measure may be speedily adopted for this Purpose as I feel an extreme Anxiety in being Witness to the growing Calamities of this Country without the Power to alleviate them.—Calamities that must increase while so many of the Inhabitants withhold their allegiance from their Sovereign and their obedience to the parent Country by whose Power and Patronage they have hitherto been sustained & protected."

When the address was read in the governor's council, "De Lancey said it would neither serve King nor Country. Cruger wondered any good could be expected from it. . . . I promised nothing certainly from it." In spite of these objections, the letter was printed and sent to the mayor.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V, in N. Y. Pub. Library; N. Y. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775. For the action of the provincial congress upon it, see Dec. 14.

An advertisement reads: "Samuel Loudon Begs leave to inform the Public, that on Thursday the fifth day of January next, he will publish No. 1, of a News-paper (to be continued weekly) entitled The New-York Packet; or the North-American General Advertiser . . ."

"He has already possessed himself of a neat and sizeable set of Types for the above-mentioned purpose; together with every other necessary for carrying on a splendid News Paper; and the best of hands shall be procured to perform the manual art. . . . Subscriptions, &c. are thankfully received by Samuel Loudon, at his house in Dock-street, near the coffee-house, New-York."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 4, 1775.

William Smith, in his diary, says: "I visited the Mayor and there found Aldermen Mathews Brewerton Waddell & Lefferts & persuaded to the Propriety of calling an Assembly for petitioning Parliament again."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.). See Dec. 7.

In a report to Dartmouth, Tryon states that, as Sears has threatened to return with troops and take away the public records of the province, he has ordered (Dec. 1) that the records be put on board the "Dutchess of Gordon."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 646, 667. On Dec. 4 (q. v.), the council had approved of the order. These records "consisted of eighteen books in folio, of records of charters and grants of land, under the great seal of this province; two books in folio, of records of grants of land to reduced officers and soldiers . . . ; three books in folio, of records of charters and commissions under his Royal Highness James Duke of York, the great seal of Great Britain, the great seal of England, and the seal of the admiralty of England; one book of records, of Indian cessions of land to the crown, and two books of minutes, of council in the state department." These books were in two strong chests, under the seals of both Tryon and Samuel Bayard, Jr., the deputy-secretary, the keys to the locks being retained in Bayard's possession.—Rep. of Sec. of State, relative to the Records, &c. in his office (in senate, Jan. 5, 1820), 36-37. See also Rep. on Am. MSS. in the Royal Inst. of Gr. Brit., I: 25. These records were brought to Tryon on the "Dutchess of Gordon" by Bayard.—Ibid. On Dec. 9 (q. v.), Gov. Tryon made a certificate that he had received on board the ship "two Boxes containing Records of Patents, Records of Commissions etc and Minutes of Council . . . the said two Boxes being locked with a Padlock, and under my seal at Arms, and the seal of the said Deputy Secretary." Writing to Lord Germain in 1779, Tryon stated that, shortly after this, for greater security, these records "were put on Board the Asia under the care of Capt<sup>d</sup> Vandeput. The Asia being ordered home, soon after the taking of New York and the first great conflagration of that City, Capt<sup>d</sup> Vandeput desired me to inform him what he should do with the two Boxes of Public Records; I acquainted him, as the Enemy boasted they would burn up the remainder of New York that Winter, the Records would not be safe on shore, and accordingly recommended him to put them on Board the Eagle Man of War. Capt<sup>d</sup> Vandeput sailed a few days after, since which I have never heard, what he actually did with those Records. I presume he either put them on Board the Eagle or if he carried them home, that he has lodged them in the Plantation Office."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 760-61. Lord Germain informed Tryon that they were put on board the "Eagle."—Ibid., VIII: 765. For the wanderings of these records on the high seas, see Sept. 29, 1781. The book of Indian cessions alone was lost (see Nov. 1, 1781).

A broadside, printed at New York, presents "The Answer of the Congress to the King's Proclamation" of Aug. 23, which cast aspersions upon the American cause. This denies that the colonies have forgotten the allegiance they owe "to the power which has protected and sustained" them, and refutes the allegation that they have proceeded "to an open and avowed rebellion." The delegates of the congress then add: "We, therefore, in the name of the people of these United Colonies, and by authority, according to the purest maxims of representation derived from them, declare, that whatever punishment shall be inflicted upon any persons in the power of our enemies, for favouring, aiding or abetting the cause of American liberty shall be retaliated in the same kind and the same degree upon those, in our power, who have favoured, aided or abetted, or shall favour, aid or abet the system of ministerial oppression. The essential difference between our cause and that of our enemies might justify a severer punishment. The law of retaliation will unquestionably warrant one equally severe."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Smith, in his diary, says that he "met some of the Congress at Simmons's." It was the general opinion that an assembly should be convened "to make conciliatory Propositions." However, the support of Mr. Scott (see Dec. 8) "had not been secured unfortunately."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

To the provincial congress, Mr. Scott (see Dec. 7) presents several resolutions, which declare in substance: 1. that the Lexington skirmish had inflamed the colonies; 2. that "It was inexpedient to ask the Governor to convene the old Assembly to give an answer to the Febr'y Resolve of Parliament;" 3. that the governor should be protected on shore. "The Congress was thus thrown into great heats." Scott "lamponed the Gov<sup>rs</sup> address [see Dec. 4] with great acrimony and was joined by Hobart & McDougal who with Scott were intent upon a new Election of Assemblies." That night, the "Answer of the great Congress of 6 Instant to the King's Aug<sup>t</sup> Proclamation arrived and the House grew more disinclined to Peace afterwards on the news of the seizing of Stores in Canada & other Successes in that Quarter."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

Gov. Tryon acknowledges the receipt of the provincial records (see Dec. 6) thus: "I do hereby certify that in Pursuance of my Directions and the Advice of his Majesty's Council for this Province I have received from Sam<sup>l</sup> Bayard Jun<sup>r</sup> Deputy Secretary of this Province on board the ship Dutchess of Gordon two Boxes containing Records of Patents, Records of Commissions etc and Minutes of Council—Given under my Hand on Board the ship Dutchess of Gordon in the Harbour of New York this 9th Day of Dec<sup>r</sup> 1775 having signed a Duplicate of this Certificate. The said two Boxes being locked with a Padlock and under my Seal at Arms and the Seal of the said Deputy Secretary.

"Wm Tryon."

The books given up to Tryon, says Smith, were:

- 17 Vol Fol of Records of Patents
- 2 D<sup>o</sup> Grants of Lands to reduced Officers & Soldiers pursuant to the Royal Proclamation of 7 Oct<sup>r</sup> 1763.
- 1 D<sup>o</sup> Indian Cessions to the Crown.
- 3 D<sup>o</sup> Records of Commissions Patents & Charters under the great Seal of Great Britain.
- 2 D<sup>o</sup> Minutes of Council in the State Department.

25 Vol: in Folio.

"These Books are of infinite Consequences to the Colony & the Seizure a Mortgage upon the People for their Return to their antient union with Great Britain.

"Mr. Bayard tells me no Questions were put to him on Scott's taking the Custody of the Papers of the Secretary's Office. Had the Secret of M<sup>r</sup> Tryon's withdrawing so Many of the Books been discovered I think Bayard would scarce have escaped with his Life & I as one of the Council should have certainly felt the popular Rage—Yet I believe there is a mistake in certifying that M<sup>r</sup> Tryon took them by the Advice of Council—See My Minute of the Day conceived in the Hands of Jacob Blaas the Neighbour to Col<sup>o</sup> P R Livingston at the Manor—I forget the Date of the Day we were consulted but well remember that M<sup>r</sup> Tryon had some Records on Board, that we consented to his keeping what he had & leaving him to himself as to the Propriety of removing any more—I mentioned this last<sup>o</sup> to Bayard, who admits that there were Papers in the Dutchess of Gordon when we were consulted but adds that he thinks they were those mentioned in the Certificate—See the 1775 Minutes of Council & my Notes & compare Dates with that of Dec. the Certificate.

9 "I am not a little anxious for the Safety of the Records—Mr Tryon is not distinct in his Account of what he did with them—Whether he ordered Vandepout to carry them home or to deliver them to Lord North—He only believes they are in the Plantation Office."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under date of Feb. 9, 1779.

Smith adds in his diary, on the following day, that he showed to Tryon Bayard's copy of his (Tryon's) receipt for the records, and begged the governor "to write to Ld Geo: Germaine for their Preservation but he scarce attended to me and rarely does as I wish to any Civil Concerns."—Ibid., Feb. 10, 1779.

11 "As the continental Congress has ordered that a detailed account of the "Hostilities committed by the Ministerial Troop and Navy in America, since March last," be drawn up, together with a report of the buildings destroyed, vessels seized, and stock taken, the general committee of the city requests that "All Persons in this City and County who have sustained any Loss or Damage by the Ministerial Army or Navy in America, since March last . . . prepare and deliver to them an accurate Estimate of the same, with the Examinations of Witnesses, and other Papers and Documents officially authenticated."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775.

"Hugh Gaine advertises for sale his "Universal Register, or American and British Kalendar, For the Year 1776," which, he says, is illustrated "with a beautiful and accurate Copper Plate Plan of the City of New-York."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775. There is a copy of this book in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

12 "The provincial congress of New York formulates a letter to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, to the following effect: "We are informed by a petition from the General Committee (see Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 210, for petition) that a body of troops from your Colony, lately made a publick entry into this city at noon-day, and seized and carried off the types belonging to one of the publick printers [see Nov. 23], without any authority from the Continental or this Congress, or their Committee. While we consider this conduct as an insult offered to this Colony, we are disposed to attribute it to an imprudent, though well intended, zeal for the publick cause, and cannot entertain the most distant thought that your Colony will approve of the measure. It is unnecessary to use arguments to show the impropriety of a proceeding that has a manifest tendency to interrupt that harmony and union which at present happily subsists throughout, and is so essential to the interest of the whole Continent. It is our earnest desire, that you would take the most effectual steps to prevent any of the people of your Colony from entering into this for the like purposes, unless invited by our Provincial Congress, a Committee of Safety, or the General Committee of one of our Counties, as we cannot but consider such intrusions as an invasion of our essential rights as a distinct Colony; and common justice obliges us to request that you would give orders that all the types be returned to the Chairman of the General Committee of the City and County of New-York. We believe you will not consider this requisition as an attempt to justify the man from whom the types were taken. We are fully sensible of his demerits; but we earnestly wish that the glory of the present contest for liberty may not be sullied by an attempt to restrain the freedom of the Press . . .

"And the more effectually to restrain such incursions, . . . we propose to apply to the Continental Congress, not by way of complaint, but for such a general regulation on this subject as may as well prevent such jealousies as any future incursions by the inhabitants of either Colony into the other for the apprehending or punishing any enemy or supposed enemy to the cause of liberty."—4 Am. Arch., IV: 402; Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 213-14.

The threatened application to the continental congress mentioned in the letter to Gov. Trumbull was evidently put into effect, for, on Jan. 5, 1776, the New York delegates to the congress at Philadelphia wrote to the committee of safety: "We highly applaud the spirit, and at the same time, respectful manner in which you have supported the dignity and independence of our Colony, and demanded reparation on the subject of the Connecticut inroad. . . .

The government of Connecticut we are persuaded will not only do you the justice which you have required, but adopt effectual means to restrain their inhabitants from similar attempts in future. In this expectation we shall take the liberty to defer the application to Congress which you direct, until we are favoured with a copy of Gov. Trumbull's answer to your letter."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 243. See March 8, 1776.

After taking into consideration Gov. Tryon's address of Dec. 4 (p. 9.), the provincial congress, sitting in New York City, resolves: "That it is the opinion of this Congress, that none of the good people of this Colony, have withdrawn their allegiance from His Majesty. . . . That the supposed present turbulent state of this Colony, arises not from the want of a proper attachment to our Prince, and the establishment in the illustrious house of Hanover, nor from a desire to become independent of the British Crown, or 'a spirit of opposition' to that just and equal rule to which by the British Constitution, and our ancient and established form of Government we are subject; but solely from the inroads made on [us] both by oppressive acts of the British Parliament, devised for enslaving His Majesty's liege subjects in the American Colonies, and the hostile attempts of the ministry to carry those acts into execution."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 217-18; N. Y. Merc., Dec. 18, 1775.

The committee of 100 adopts the following regulations for the night watch: 1. That at least one company mount guard "at the Barracks on the Battery" from six o'clock in the evening until daylight.

2. That the adjutant of each battalion "whose tour of duty it is" be notified at least 24 hours before he mounts guard, and that he make a report of the "occurrences of the night," the men on duty, and the defaulters.

3. That, immediately after roll-call, sentinels be set at all appointed places.

4. That detachments of the guard patrol the streets every two hours, beginning at ten o'clock, to protect persons and property, to arrest offenders or suspects, and to prevent the landing of goods contrary to the association.

5. That no "wanton alarm" be given to the inhabitants by firing guns or beating drums.

6. That, if any alarm be given in the night, the officer send a sufficient detachment of the guard to inquire into the reason.

7. That every officer carry out the rules of the provincial congress in regard to fining and punishing delinquents.—4 Am. Arch., IV: 281-82. The sub-committee, which reported these regulations, stated that "the military night watch, which has been kept for several months past [see May 18], has been found of great utility towards preserving peace and good order in this city, and protecting the persons and property of its inhabitants; and . . . is becoming more necessary than ever, from the unsettled state of public affairs, and the recent instances of insults offered to the rights and persons of said inhabitants."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 21, 1775.

In the course of the debate in the house of commons on the bill to prohibit all trade with the rebellious American colonies (American Prohibitory Bill), Mr. Hartley says: "By this fatal Bill of separation you now declare the Americans to be enemies in form, therefore it is yourselves that force upon them the rights of enemies. You must now be responsible to your country for the events of your own war, to which they have been so reluctant and you so precipitate. When this country shall come to open its eyes, to see and to feel the consequences, they will know of whom to require an account. . . . The fate of America is cast. You may bruise its heel, but you cannot crush its head. It will revive again. The new world is before them. Liberty is theirs. They have possession of a free government, their birthright and inheritance, derived to them from their parent state, which the hand of violence cannot wrest from them. If you will cast them off, my last wish is to them; May they go and prosper! When the final period of this once happy country shall overtake ourselves, either through tumult or tyranny, may another Phoenix rise out of our ashes!"—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 1104-5.

Because "discontents have arisen in the minds of many of the citizens of New-York, by a practice of some of the inhabitants to visit the King's ships of war," the provincial congress resolves: "That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this colony, to refrain from going on board of any of the King's ships or vessels of war, without leave of the Committee of a county in this colony, or the Committee of Safety."

The congress also passes a resolution "That every person, not an inhabitant, entering into this colony, shall be furnished with a certificate from the Committee of the jurisdiction wherein he last resided, that he is friendly to the Liberties of America, or be subject to be dealt with as a person inimical thereto." This latter order is considered necessary because "sundry persons whose conduct in the neighbouring colonies of which they were respectively

1775 inhabitants, has been unfriendly to liberty, and occasioned their removal into this colony; and should such removals continue, the number of disaffected persons in this colony will be increased, and the same be indisputably considered as an asylum for enemies to the liberties of America.—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775.

25 " Because the king's mails have been "taken and obstructed" at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other places, the deputy post-master-general informs the public that he is obliged "to stop all the posts." Hereafter, letters which arrive on the packets will be kept on board, and the names of those to whom they are addressed will be advertised, in order that the people may apply in person or by friends for their mail.—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., IV: 453.

" "His Majesty's Ships the Phoenix and Asia now lie in the East River; the latter opposite Murray's Wharf; and the former near Burling's Slip."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775. See Jan. 29, 1776.

29 " An address "To the Freeholders and Freemen of New-York," signed "A Citizen," is published as a broadside. It reads: "I have good reason to assure you that there is a scheme in agitation to surprise and confound you in a matter of the last importance—the election of members for a new assembly. I therefore conjure you, as you value your rights as citizens, and the safety and happiness of the colony, to be upon your guard. A pit is digging, a net is spreading for you; be careful, be vigilant—suffer not yourselves to be deceived by the contrivances and intrigues of wicked men, who will court your favour to destroy you, and will cajole you to betray you. You have had abundant experience of the danger of an injudicious choice . . . It is your duty and interest, as far as lies in your power, to fill every department with men, whose known character and situation give you full reason to expect they will be intirely devoted to your service. But it concerns your lives and properties, in an especial manner, to choose proper men to represent you in the legislature of your country. It is essential to your happiness as citizens—It is essential to your existence as freemen . . .

"You have had a fair opportunity of seeing men in their true characters, you know who are your friends, and who your enemies, who will stand by and protect you in time of danger, and who will desert and betray you . . . Remember you are to choose men to be the guardians of your rights for seven years. To do you justice for so long a time, you will require men of uncommon virtue, and of a truly independent spirit, else you will have no security against their being corrupted. They should be men of abilities also, well acquainted with the constitution, and with the circumstances of the province.

"When you are called upon, come forth with that independent unbiassed spirit, which becomes free citizens. Despire all the views of party. They are beneath you. They ought never to be considered when the interests of your country are concerned. All you ought to regard, is, the intrinsic worth of the candidate who solicits your favour and election."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Another broadside of similar purport, signed "A Poor Man," appeared the following day. See an original in N. Y. Pub. Library.

31 " Gen. Montgomery (of New York) is killed before Quebec, and the attack fails.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 165, 216. See also An Oration [by Rev. William Smith, D.D., provost of the College of Philadelphia] in Memory of General Montgomery, and the Officers, and Soldiers, who Fell with him, December 31, 1775, before Quebec; Drawn Up (and Delivered February 19th, 1776). At the Desire of the Honorable Continental Congress (printed by John Dunlap, Phila., 1776). This oration was reprinted in New York, Newport, and Norwich, and twice in England, that same year.

— Just prior to the Revolution, a little Catholic congregation worshipped in the house of a devout German, in Wall St. The Jesuit Father, Ferdinand Steinmeyer, ministered to them on his trips from Maryland. To avoid arrest, he assumed the name of Farmer and entered the city in disguise. The house was burned in the fire of 1776, and the congregation was broken up.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1450. St. Peter's Church, built in 1785-6, was the first Roman Catholic church erected in New York, although Catholic services were held in Fort James under Gov. Dongan as early as 1687.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936.

— Prior to this year, the house of Walter Rutherford was erected at the north-west corner of Broadway and Vesey St.—Duer, Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker, 38-39. It was demolished to make room for the Astor House, which for so many years occupied the block from Vesey to Barclay St., on Broadway. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952, 976; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

The following account of New York, written by William Dunlap, and published in 1833, describes some of the prominent features of the city at this period: "The new road, now Broadway, stopped at the gardens which surrounded what has since been called the Sailor's Snug Harbour [Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947], then the country-seat of Andrew Elliot, Esq. At another spot, now the corner of Leonard Street and Broadway, stood a house and gardens, the rural retreat of our citizens, called, from a retreat of the kind near London, the white Conduit House [ibid., III: 981]; it has been since called Mount Vernon Gardens [ibid., III: 980], and had, as will be seen, a theatre attached to it, the remains of which were visible within seventeen years. Nearly opposite, on the other side of the new road, were the remains of aqueducts and reservoirs being some time before 1775 [see April 22, 1774], for the purpose of raising water from the Collect, the pond below, and to the east, before-mentioned, to supply the city with wholesome water from the stagnant receptacle of filth which slaughter-houses and other nuisances poured into it.

"On the eastern side, the city terminated, as has been said, by the ship-yards on the line of the water, and at a small distance from the shore by a steep bank, on which was walled in a cemetery called the Jew's burying-ground. Near this bank stood a house, now a tavern, and called from its central situation Centre House. Beyond the cemetery were orchards, gardens, and meadows, suffering decay from the effects of war.

"To return to the extreme or south point of the island and town. Below the towering hill on which Fort George bristled with cannon, lay the battery, a fortification covering a portion of that health-giving space still bearing the name. Part of the ramparts advanced to the water's edge, and on the north, between them and Broadway, the rocky foundation protruded, until the earth of the hill on which the towering fort stood was brought down, since the war of independence, to cover them."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1833), I: 84-85.

St. Jean de Crèvecoeur (naturalized as Hector St. John), describing New York as it was between 1770 and 1781, called it "beautiful although irregular." He said the inhabitants were skilled in the construction of wharves, which were sometimes built in 40 feet of water. "Beaver stock, today so far from the seashore was so called because formerly it was a little bay, where these animals made a dike. I have talked with old inhabitants, who have seen the tide rise to the neighborhood of the City Hall [Wall St.]. You know that is more than four hundred fathoms from the sea."

According to this writer, at that time several of the streets had side walks on both sides, paved with flat stones and adorned with plane trees. The architecture of the city combined Dutch neatness with English taste. The houses, most of which were of brick, were finished and painted with great care.

Crèvecoeur declared that the merchants were "intelligent, able, and rich, and the artisans very skillful, especially the carpenters, the cabinet makers and the joiners." The New Yorkers, he said, were very hospitable, and the reception they accorded strangers was "enough to give them a high idea of American generosity, as well as of the simple and cordial friendliness which they are to expect in the other cities of this continent." Food was so cheap and abundant that every one lived in comfort, "the poorest not even excepted." There were 3,400 houses, 28,000 inhabitants (cf. 1771, and 1775), and 20 churches (cf. 1767 and 1770) belonging to different sects. These figures, as well as the following references to the college, hospital, water-works, etc., make it evident that the conditions he describes were such as existed early in 1776.

The Frenchman praised the college, with its library and great number of valuable mathematical instruments, but he regretted that it was not built "in some rural retreat," far away from "the turmoil of trade, and the dissipation and pleasures always numerous in large cities." He mentioned also the presence of a hospital for sailors, "built at a convenient distance from New York on an eminence out far from the Hudson River;" the Chamber of Commerce (see Feb. 28, 1770); the Marine Society (see April 12, 1770), which, he remarked, had a fund of $30,000, and gave annual pensions 1776 and other assistance "to the widows and children of Ship Masters and other Seamen, who for a certain number of years have contributed to the funds of the Society a portion of their yearly pay;" and an insurance company, "well managed and very rich." He hoped that New York would soon be abundantly supplied with a quantity of water sufficient for the use of houses and the watering of streets.

Of fire prevention (cf. March, 11, 1776) he said: "A fire pump is now being erected, the piston of which is eleven inches in diameter, which is to give twelve strokes a minute, and supply fifty-eight pails of water at each movement of the balance wheel. All the inhabitants of the City are divided into companies, the members of which are obliged to keep suspended in the hall of their houses a certain number of leathern buckets, and a certain number of bags. They are obliged to carry these to fires with the greatest speed, to help the Firemen to preserve order, to carry water and to save the effects of the victims."

In speaking of the topography of New York, he explained that the city could be reached only by water, "except at Kings-bridge [vide contra Jan. 2, 1759] where a narrow bridge connects the island of Manhattan with the continent." Commerce with the neighbouring colonies and with Europe was very extensive. Nothing, in his opinion, could give the "contemplative spectator" a clearer idea of the wealth and free trade here, than the multitude of ships of all sizes in the bay, continually going to and from the city; "this is the reason why so much business is done here without noise and without carts." After speaking of the trade, Crèvecoeur went on to say: "Never was there an island more sterile than that of Manhattan, on the point of which New York is built [vide contra, Van der Donck's description—see Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 294]. The wealth and industry of the inhabitants have everywhere overcome nature, and everywhere vanquished the obstacles she had set. The eye of a European is agreeably surprised to see the interior of this desert cultivated and filled with farms, these rocky shores plained down, turned into delightful gardens, ornamented with elegant houses, pretty retreats, planted with fruit trees, and become meadows and cultivated fields."—Crèvecoeur, Lettres d'un Cultivateur Américain (1784), II: 75-82; Crèvecoeur, Letters from an American Farmer (1904), 349-51; Mag. Am. Hist., II: 748-51.

A view drawn in pen and ink of the east shore of Manhattan Island in the neighbourhood of the Rutgers house, probably by Montresor, about 1776, is reproduced in Vol. III, A, Pl. 6-a.

A view of the "Careening Place, New York, above Col. Rutgers's, East River," also probably drawn in this year, is reproduced in Vol. III, A, Pl. 7-a.

A view of Hell Gate, made at about the same time as the above views, is reproduced in Vol. III, A, Pl. 7-a.

In this year, the Americans erected a small outwork on Cock Hill, or Cox's hill, known as the "Cock-hill Fort;" it lay on the summit of Inwood Hill, south of Spuyten Duyvil. The fort was taken by British troops in the action of November 16, 1776.—See 20th Ann. Rep., Am. Sen. and Hist. Pres. Soc., 443.

The custom-house is shown on Holland's map, of this date as being on the Beaver Path, or the lower end of Broadway, facing the fort.—See reproduction in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), opp. p. 532; but see description of Pl. 44, 1: 348.

The Gen. Samuel Smith Papers (M.S.), preserved in Columbia Univ. Library, include an "Auto-biography of General Samuel Smith." He was a captain in Washington's army in the New York campaign, and describes the battle of Long Island and subsequent movements, including the retreat across New Jersey.

In this year, the six students of the class of '76 in Kings College received their degrees, but, as the "Matricula" states, there was no public commencement, and there were no new admissions.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 50. See April 6. For mention of some of the distinguished graduates of Kings College during its brief career of twenty-two years (1754-1776), including Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, Robert R. Livingston, Robert Troup, Henry Rutgers, Philip Pell, John Dougherty, Stephen Lush, Edward Dunscomb, Gulian Verplanck, Leonard Lispenard, and others, see ibid., 52-58.

During the Revolution, a tavern known as the "Cross Keys" stood on the old Kingsbridge Road, at about 166th St. According to tradition, this inn was one of Washington's stopping-places. Its landlord was David Wares (or Wear).—Mag. Am. Hist. (1881), VII: 300; John Austin Stevens, in N. Y. Eve. Post, Nov. 3, 1883.

David Grim, in his reminiscence note, says that, in this year, a

Mr. White, a loyalist, was hanged on a tavern sign-post at the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt Sts.—See Grim's Notes (M.S.) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Grim was himself a tavern-keeper, his house being known as the Hessian Coffee House.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

"By the winter of 1775-1776, after the non-importation had been effective for about a year, the upward trend of prices indicated the approaching depletion of mercantile stocks; but the radicals in general still preferred to believe that private avarice was the sole animating cause. The chief centers of trouble were the ports of Philadelphia and New York and the markets tributary to them. The dearth and high prices of West India commodities created great uneasiness because of their former cheapness and wide household use."—Schlesinger, The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution (Columbia Univ. Studies, 1918), 586, and authorities there cited.

The sheriff gives public notice, as directed by "his Majesty's Jao. Writ," to "the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New York," to assemble on Feb. 1, "on the Green near the Work-House," to choose, "by a Plurality of Voices," four freeholders to be "Representatives" of this city and county, "to assist the Captain General, or Commander in Chief of the Province of New-York, in a General Assembly."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 8, 1776. See Feb. 1.

Samuel Loudon begins to publish The New York Packet, and the American Advertiser, his imprint being "Printed by Samuel Loudon, in Water-Street, between the Coffee-House and the Old Slip." It was the last paper established in New York before the Declaration of Independence.—"The Hist. of Printing in Am." by Thomas, in Am. Antiq. Soc. Transactions (1874), VI: 124; Early Newspapers, II: 426; Brigham, Am. Antiq. Soc. Proc. (1917), 474. Loudon advertised the publication of this paper in Gaine's newspaper, with a statement about its good qualities, the ways of distributing it by post-riders, etc.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. See Aug. 29.

Christopher Colles is granted £10, "which this Board agreed to allow him towards his Support for the last month." At the same meeting, the common council orders that "a Number of printed Notes [see Aug. 2, 1775] for carrying on the water works to the Value of £2000 be immediately struck."—M. C. C., VIII: 120, 121. Colles received £10 more on Jan. 19 (ibid., VIII: 124), and other payments later (ibid., VIII: 133, 139). See, further, March 4.

Having learned of the fitting out of a British fleet at Boston and the embarkation of troops for a southern expedition, and believing that "it is a matter of the utmost importance to prevent the enemy from taking possession of the city of New York and the North River, as they will thereby command the country, and the communication with Canada," Washington sends the following orders from his headquarters at Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Charles Lee: "You will, therefore, with such volunteers as are willing to join you, and can be expeditiously raised, repair to the city of New York; and calling upon the commanding officer of the forces of New Jersey for such assistance as he can afford, and you shall require, you are to put that city into the best posture of defence, which the season and circumstances will admit, disarming all such persons upon Long Island and elsewhere, (and if necessary otherwise securing them,) whose conduct and declarations have rendered them justly suspected of designs unfriendly to the views of the Congress.

"You are, also, to inquire into the state and condition of the fortifications up the North River, and as far as shall be consistent with the orders of Congress, or not repugnant to them, to have the works guarded against surprises from a body of men, which might be transported by water near the place, and then marched in upon the back of them.

"You will also endeavour to have the medicines, shirts, and blankets, now at New York, belonging to the ministerial troops, secured, and forwarded to this army. Captain Sears can give you particular information concerning them."—Lee Papers, I: 426-37, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871), 12, 13.

William Bayard offers to lease his house and grounds at Greenwich.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 8, 1776. This inclination on the part of 1776 some of the citizens to rent or sell their country-places, is one of the significant outcomes of the war. For later examples, see Feb. 20, Jan. 8 March 4 and 11, 1782.

9 Thomas Paine publishes anonymously, in Philadelphia (see Penn. Eve. Post, Jan. 9, 1776), a political or propagandist tract having in the first edition the following long title: Common Sense; addressed to the inhabitants of America, on the following interesting subjects. I. Of the Origin and Design of Government in general, with concise Remarks on the English Constitution. II. Of Monarchy and Hereditary Succession. III. Thoughts on the present State of American Affairs. IV. Of the present Ability of America, with some miscellaneous Reflections.

*Man knows no Master save creating Heaven,
Of those whom choice and common good ordain.*

Thomson.

This was soon followed (on Feb. 17) by another tract, and the two together constitute the ordinary editions of this work (see Sabia, XIV: 124-25). The first edition of this second tract bears the following long title: Large Additions to Common Sense; Addressed to the inhabitants of America, On the following interesting subjects. I. The American Patriot's Prayer. II. American Independency defined, by Candidus. III. The Propriety of Independency, by Demophilus.

*The dread of Tyrants, and the sole resource
Of those that under grim Oppression groan.*

Thomson.

IV. A Review of the American Contest, with some strictures on the King's Speech. Addressed to all Parents in the Thirteen United Colonies, by a Friend to Posterity and Mankind. V. Letter to Lord Dartmouth, by an English American. VI. Observations on Lord North's Conciliatory Plan, by Sincerus. To which is added and given An Appendix to Common Sense; Together with an Address to the people called Quakers, on their Testimony concerning Kings and Government, and the present Commotions in America. Philadelphia: Printed, and sold, by R. Bell, in Third-Street. MDCCLXXVI.

The first part of this famous work went through at least twelve editions and reprints in different cities and towns of America and Great Britain in 1776, one of these being a reprint by John Anderson in New York (Sabia, xiv: 125). Evans gives the following bibliographical note: "The first edition of Common Sense was published in Philadelphia in January, 1776, and the sales soon reached one hundred thousand copies. The Legislature of Pennsylvania voted the Author five hundred pounds in appreciation of its value to the cause of American liberty. The 'Large additions' were collected by the publisher, and are not the work of Paine except in small part."—Am. Bibliog., V: 265. See also Frothingham's Rise of the Republic (1872), 476 (footnote). Paine argues for the total separation of the colonies from Great Britain, and undertakes to prove the necessity, the advantages, and the practicability of independence.—Church Catalogue, No. 1135; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 252, 269; Van Tyne, The Am. Revolution, in the American Nation series, IX: 61-65; Schlesinger, The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution (Columbia Univ. Studies, 1918), 593. During this year, Paine began his American Crisis.—Ibid., VIII: 498.

The king's speech from the throne (Oct. 26, 1775), declaring that the war, on the part of the colonies, is "manifestly carried on for the establishment of an American empire," makes its appearance in an American newspaper. He states that, to put an end to the disorders in the colonies, he has increased both the naval and land forces. He recommends the appointment of commissioners with large powers for the purpose of granting pardons to such of "the unhappy and deluded multitude" as may be convinced of their error by the display of arms.—Penn. Eve. Post, Jan. 9, 1776; Frothingham, Rise of the Republic of the U. S. (1872), 456.

The continental congress passes a resolution "That it be recommended to the committee of safety of the province of New York, to appoint proper persons to inquire into the propriety and practicability of obstructing or lessening the depth of water in the narrows, or in any other place at the entrance of New York, or of any way of fortifying that pass, so as to prevent the entrance of the enemy; and also to enquire whether the depth of water in Hudson's river, below the battery, may not easily be lessened, so as to prevent large ships passing up, and to make an estimate of the expence, and report their proceedings in the premises immediately to Congress."—Jour. of the Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed., 1906), IV: 44-45.

James Rivington (see May 10 and Nov. 23, 1775) sails from New York for England.—Moore, Diary of the Am. Rev., citing N. Y. Packet, Jan. 11, 1776. In satire, the Const. Gaz. of May 4, 1776, remarked:

"J—s R—n—n, of New York is appointed Cob-Web Sweeper of his Majesty's Library.

"There are many other posts and rewards given to persons who have fled from the colonies, equal to the above mentioned." For Rivington's return to New York, see Sept. 25, 1777.

Among the names printed in the Middlesex Journal (London) as "American informers" who have deceived Lord North are "William Smith, an attorney at New York, and a counsellor; James Delancey, a captain in the army; . . . Auchmuty, a priest."—Moore, Diary of the Revolution, I: 192-93.

Twenty-one prisoners, including Edward Bardin, confined for debt in the "New-Gaol," give public notice of their intention to petition the "House of General-Assembly" for "An Act for the relief of insolvent debtors within this colony, with respect to the imprisonment of their persons."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776.

There is offered for lease "All the lands to the south of the road leading from the commons to Hopper's land, being part of the farm known by the name of the Hermitage, with part of the barn, stables, and other outhouses: There is on it a good bearing orchard and garden, with the best of fruit, such as early pears, English cherries, pearmain, &c. It is in good stone fence, near the road, and but three and an half miles from New-York. Enquire of John Leake."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. The Hermitage farm is shown on Pl. 176, Vol. III, lying west of Broadway between (approximately) 40th and 45th Sts. For view of the residence called the "Hermitage," which was on this farm, on 43d St. between 8th and 9th Aves., see Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 212.

Hugh Gainc publishes the following advertisement: "Just Published, and to be Sold at his Book-Store and Printing-Office, in Hanover-Square, [Illustrated with a beautiful and accurate Copper Plate Plan of the City of New-York.] Gainc's Universal Register, or American and British Calendar, For the Year 1776."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. There is a copy of this Kalendar in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is a small handbook (16mo), containing a great deal of miscellaneous information regarding the history, government, etc., of the various American colonies or provinces, as well as of foreign countries. The first issue appeared in 1775 (q.v.).

William Leary, the town major, reports to the committee of safety that the nightly guard neglects its duty, complaining that its "good Nature is imposed upon; that the more they do, the more seems to be required at their Hands," and that they will be compelled "to desist, unless their Fellow Citizens will step forth and aid them in the common cause." He also mentions "the danger to which this City is nightly exposed, not only from the attacks of External and internal Enemies, but from the Malice and intemperance of any Individual who mounts Guard;" and he lays before the committee "particular threats which he has heard from some individuals of those unruly Guards . . . such as firing upon his Majesty's ships now in the Harbour," an act that must unavoidably bring unspeakable Distress upon the Inhabitants of this City."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 214. Leary's pay was discontinued on April 10.—Ibid., I: 280-81.

The New York committee of safety publishes a series of essays in a pamphlet on the manufacture of salt-petre and gunpowder, with an introduction bearing this date. It is entitled Essays upon the Making of Salt-Petre and Gun-Powder. Published by Order of the Committee of Safety of the Colony of New-York (1776). See April 17.

The committee of safety at New York orders that Peter van Brugh Livingston, treasurer of the provincial congress, advancing to John Berrien, as commissary of the commissioners for erecting fortifications at the "High Lands," the sum of £1,250 for the expenses for that object.—From the original order and receipt, in the Emmet Collection, item 10798, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

The keeper of Farmer's Tavern in the Bowery, a man named Fowler, is arrested and confined in the guard-house, on suspicion of being concerned "in spiking up the cannon at Kingsbridge." It is said "he had bought up a number of rat tail files for that purpose."—Const. Gaz., Jan. 24, 1776. On examination "before the committee," he was acquitted.—Ibid., Jan. 31. See also Jan. 29.

1776 The committee of safety orders that £1,000 be paid, out of the Jan. treasury of the provincial congress, to John Ramsey and Isaac 24 Stourtenburgh, who are willing "to be managers of employing the industrious poor in this city in spinning and making manufactures."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I, 264, See Feb. 1.

26 A letter from Gen. Lee, dated Jan. 22, enclosing a letter from the committee of safety of New York, is received by the continental congress at Philadelphia. On reading this, it is resolved "That a committee of three be appointed to repair to New-York, to consult and advise with the Council of safety of that colony, and with general Lee, respecting the immediate defence of the city of New-York; and that general Lee be directed to follow the determination of the said committee thereupon:

"That it be an instruction to the said committee, in case the city cannot be defended, that they earnestly recommend it to the inhabitants to remove their most valuable effects to a place of safety:

"That the said committee be farther instructed to consult with general Lee and the Committee of safety of New-York, about the fortifications on Hudson's river, and about fortifying the pass at Hellgate."—Jour. Cons. Cong. (Phila., 1777), II, 39.

29 John Holt writes to Samuel Adams: "Having lately to be in Company of a Worker in Metals and speaking of the Cannon lately spiked up at King's Bridge; I asked him if he knew how to fire the Cannon that Carleton had endeavoured to render useless by ramming them with Balls, at Montreal. He supposed that I had been applied to, to procure a Person who would undertake the Job, and last Night came to tell me he knew one who understood the Business & would do it on reasonable Terms; also that he understood repairing and putting old or damaged Muskets in Order, and would either buy them or make them fit for Service.
 . . . The same Man also informed me of a Matter I had before heard of, and communicated to a Member of our Provincial Congress, viz. That the Emissaries of the British Ministry, particularly Governor Tryon, have for many Months past, been doing their utmost to engage all the Gunsmiths in America, in every Branch of the Business, to go for England, where they are promised high Wages and constant Employment for life. That many of these in this Town, have actually enter'd into pay, & while they stay here are paid high Wages for not Working, nor instructing any Person in the Business; that a Number of these Workmen & many from this City, were sent home in the last packet, and every one who has any Skill in the Business here, has been tampered with—That even Convicts have been promised Pardons, 50 Guineas given for the Freedom of one in Maryland, & his Expenses paid by Tryon to this City, from whence he was sent home . . .

"We still continue to be insulted by the two Ships of War close to our Docks, who not only seize all our Vessels that they can lay Hands on, and have put a stop to all our Navigation down the Sound between this & Hellgate, which is the nearest place to this City, that they now dare venture to, but on every Occasion Menace the Town with a Canonade. And if we do not improve the Time before the Spring, or the arrival of Troops and Ships of War from England, I have not the least doubt but they will take possession of the Shores below and adjacent to Hell Gate, fill the Sound with their Small Ships of War & of Course stop all our Navigation in it, keep possession of long Island & make Excursions at pleasure upon the Mainland in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut & Rhode Island. [See Dec. 25, 1775.]

"All this might be effectually prevented by our immediately erecting one or more strong Forts at & near Hell Gate and others on each Side below at the Narrows, with some Floats near them to obstruct the quick passing of Ships. Some Floating Batteries would also be of the utmost importance. These Matters are absolutely necessary, & no Time ought to be lost . . . The Treasures of the Continent are in your Hands, all its Force under your Direction. If these Forts were only begun, with Vigour, in our Probability the men of War would immediately decamp . . . One Thing more I would mention.

"The Post Office. Under the British Administration, the Primary End of it was, the augmentation of the Revenue, the public Convenience, was but a secondary Consideration. With us, at present, and I hope it will always be so, the Case is reversed;
 the public Convenience, is the first Object. In comparison of this, the Revenue it produces, is hardly worth the least Notice, and in Order to give it all the Usefulness that might reasonably be expected from it, the Post Masters, from the highest to the Lowest should be indispensably enjoined to oblige all the Riders to carry and deliver at the proper places on their Respective Roads, all the News papers that should be brought to the post Offices for that purpose. In what I shall say upon this Subject, I am not in the least influenced by my own private Interest as the Printer of a News paper, but solely by a Regard to the publick good. I propose in a few Weeks, perhaps in one Week more, to discontinue the printing of a Newspaper, one great Reason of which Intention is, that I cannot get my Papers carried with any Regularity by the Posts . . . As a mere Convenience, the Carriage of News papers is of Importance to more than twenty Times as Many Persons as the Carriage of Letters is, . . . But the great Use of News papers is that they form the best opportunities of Intelligence, that could be devised, of every publick Matter that concerns us, besides communicating many Useful Discoveries in Arts and Manufactories & many moral & religious Truths &c. It was by the means of News papers, that we receiv'd & spread the Notice of the tyrannical Designs formed against America, and kindled a Spirit that has been sufficient to repel them . . . The Experience I have had, both as a Printer of a News Paper, and as a Post Master, which I was for many Years, convinces me that what I have now mentioned to you concerning News Papers, is just, and a Matter of very great Importance, . . . It is the Continental Congress alone who can put this matter upon a proper Footing. . . .—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, and printed in John Holt—Printer and Postmaster, by V. H. Paltsits (1920), 10-15.

An equally divided vote, for and against, is taken by the officers of Col. Lasher's "first Battalion of the New York Independents" on the question whether they are willing that the battalion shall engage, as a battalion, "in the Cause of this Country on the Terms and Conditions offered by the Committee of Safety." A list is made, however, of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and some of the privates (showing their names, offices, and independent companies), who "are willing to Enter in the service of their Country." These include Col. John Lasher, and Maj. Sebastian Bauman.

The next day, certain "non-commissioned officers of the first Battalion of Minute-men of the City of New York" petitioned the provincial congress, in behalf of themselves and the privates of this battalion, expressing their willingness to remain in the service, but asking for back pay, and that their duties might be confined to this city only, where their friends and relatives are.

In this petition, the original organization of this battalion was thus described: "That the Memorialists for the defence of their invaluable Rights and Privileges, formed themselves into different Companies under different officers . . .

"That sometime after . . . the Companies to which they severally belonged were formed into one Battalion by the style & Title of the first Battalion of the Independent Companies.

"That after they had so formed themselves into a Battalion, Field officers were appointed. That after the appointment . . .
 pursuant to an order or Recommendation of the Honourable the Continental Congress and of the Honourable the Provincial Convention for this Colony, they jointly and severally became Minute Men.

"That agreeable to their orders as Minute Men, they have at all times been ready, and have actually turned out to do their duty as such both by day and night when so required to do by this Honourable Body."—N. Y. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I, 224-26.

. . . arrived Cornel Water Berry white [with] about 1000 men.—From letter of Garish Hasin in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 85. This was a regiment of Connecticut men, commanded by Col. Waterbury.—Ibid., 85, foot-note. In this regiment had enlisted Capt. Hugh Leslie and Attorney-Gen. Seymour of Connecticut, who reported that a rumour had prevailed in that province that a conspiracy was forming in New York, to which 1776 "the Principal People in and out of Congress were privy," wearing Feb. only "a mask of union with the other colonies till Troops should arrive in the Spring." Gen. Lee, when he came from Cambridge to Hartford, "published a Call upon the People of that neighbourhood to join his Colours for a month to suppress a dangerous conspiracy." Waterbury's men believed their mission was to "burn New York and thus cut off communication between the traitors and the army at Boston." Lee had "halted at Stamford ill of the Gout," but their regiment of light horse had proceeded to Kingsbridge, only to find a dispatch from Gen. Lee to the effect that "the Congress approved the Sentiments of the New York Committee," and so the light horse were dismissed. Seymour imputed the scandal "to Capt. Sears, Samuel Broome and one Woodward, New Yorkers who had removed their effects to New England and were of that Party who some time since came down on Horse back and carried off Rivington's Types manu forti at noon day" (see Nov. 23, 1775). When the firing of New York was being planned at Stamford, Sears had expressed himself as eager for it despite the inevitable loss of a house he claimed to own there worth several thousand dollars. Therefore, when Seymour learned that Sears did not own a house or "an ounce of moveable property" in the city, he went back home "highly enraged at the Cheat which had put their Colony to a vast Expence & with a resolution to prevent Sears from having the Command of a Frigate building for the Continental service."—William Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 2 and 3, 1776, preserved in N. Y. Pub. Library. See also June 8, 1757.

"The committee of safety, meeting in the "Committee Chamber," are of opinion that "lessening the number and quorum of the Committee will tend to the dispatch of business." They "request the Freeman and Freeholders of this city and county to meet on Thursday 8th inst at the City Hall to nominate and elect fifty persons, whereof 21 to make a quorum to serve them as a Committee for 6 months, to meet the same evening at the exchange Room."—*Const. "This afternoon Mr. Lee, a General of the New English [New England] troops came to town; . . . The men of war here took a merchant ship coming in, &c; all which made many commotions in the town."—Shewkirk's Diary, in Johanson's Campaign of 1776, part 2, 105.

Gen. Charles Lee, who came to town from Boston, was escorted by a company of riflemen, a body-guard, and a regiment of Connecticut men.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 667; Penn. Ev. Post, Feb. 8, 1776. A letter from New York states that Gen. Lee "was escorted into town by Capt. Leary's troop of light horse, and a great number of our principal inhabitants."—Penn. Ev. Post, Feb. 6, 1776. He lodged at Mrs. De La Montaigne's, who kept a public house on the Common. While he had command in New York, about 200 pieces of heavy cannon, which were mounted in Fort George and on the Battery, were placed on the Common in front of his quarters; but lest, upon the arrival of the British army, they should be retaken, he later ordered them carried to Kingsbridge.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Revolution, I: 82. In connection with Jones's work, see Johnston, Observations on Judge Jones' Loyalist Hist. of the Am. Revolution; How Far is it an Authority? (1880).

5 Andrew Allen, delegate to the continental congress from Pennsylvania, who is in New York as one of a committee of congress sent to advise with the New York council of safety and with Gen. Lee respecting the defence of the city, writing to "My dear Sally," presumably his wife, says: "This Town has been in the greatest Confusion and Distress ever since we arrived; the People had taken it into their Heads that we had come with positive Orders from the Congress to Genl Lee to attack the Men of War lying here, which would have introduced the Destruction of the Town. In Consequence of this they were all in Motioe moving out their Household Goods & Families. With Difficulty we quieted their apprehensions by Assurances that the Purport of our Journey was directly the Reverse. No sooner was this Matter accomplished than their Fears were revived, and with greater Probability of Reason, by the Arrival of Genl Clinton [see Feb. 4], who we had Intelligence, sailed from Boston with some Men of War & 600 Soldiers destined as was supposed for this Town. The Troops which accompanied him are not yet arrived but are supposed to be left behind at Sandy Hook, & we have every Reason to conclude are intended to make an Attack on one of [the southern colonies], most probably Virginia . . . I assure you that when Mr Clinton arrived I fully expected that Hostilities would immediately have commenced & the Scene which would then have ensued was sufficient even in Idea to shock my Humanity . . . However thank God the Storm has at present blown over & the Town begins to recover its Calmness."—MS. letter preserved in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On the same day, Pastor Shewkirk, of the Moravian congregation, wrote: "Soldiers came to town both from Connecticut and the Jerseys, and the whole aspect of things grew frightful, and increased so from day to day. The inhabitants began now to move away in a surprising manner. The weather was very cold, and the rivers full of ice, which proved a great obstruction to the People's moving . . ."—Pastor Shewkirk's diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 105.

"The committee of safety made no attempt "to ease the Inhabitants chusing to urge their Flight that the empty Houses might be used as Barracles for the Soldiers they had sent for."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 5, 1776.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to Washington: "We are to erect enclosed batteries, on both sides of the water, near Hellgate, which will answer the double purpose of securing the town against piracies through the Sound, and secure our communication with Long Island."—Lee Papers, IV: 272, in N. 6 At a conference held at Major-Gen. Lee's headquarters in New York, the committee of safety decides upon making "a secure fortified lodgment for the troops" in New York, wherever Gen. Lee or other commander shall think best, "for preventing the ministerial troops from taking possession of this city." They also decide that such an entrenched encampment and other works should be made on Nassau Island, wherever Gen. Lee or other commander shall think best; also that such works should be erected at Hell Gate.—Jour. of the Com. of Safety, I: 284.

7 "Lord Sterling arrived whit 1000 men from the jerseys."—From letter of Garish Harsin, op. cit., 86-87. This was William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, who was born in the city of New York in 1726, and succeeded his father as surveyor-general of New Jersey. He was appointed a brigadier-general in the continental army on March 1, 1776.—Ibid., 86, foot-note. Another authority gives Feb. 6 as the date of his arrival.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 667. See also reference to him in N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776; and "Life of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling," in N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections (1847), Vol. II.

Gen. Lee writes to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut: "It is determined to take strong possession of the city, as well as of its most important environs. In short to put the Province in such a situation as to render any attempt of the enemy to establish themselves in it ineffectual. For this purpose some additional Battalions are ordered to be levied in this Province. But from the great scarcity of men & greater of arms, I apprehend it will be a considerable time before they can be completed & equipped in such a manner as to form a corps in whom any great reliance can be placed. The enemy may perhaps very soon appear and we ought immediately to be ready to receive them. I could, therefore, Sir, wish that if Col. Ward's reg<sup>t</sup> is not already disbanded and your Colony can spare them, that they be immediately detached for this place. But if it is disbanded that you would if possible send to this place a number of volunteers, equal in number to that Reg<sup>t</sup> completely armed and accoutred." He adds in a postscript: "Genl Clinton arrived almost in the same instant with myself: he has brought no men with him, at least that we can discover & has given his word of honor none are coming. Says it is only a friendly visit to Mr Tryon, but the fact is, I suppose he came only

- "The Governor sent for the Mayor, and desired him to assure the public, that General Clinton was only come to pay him a visit on his way, and that the troops should not land here; nevertheless it was thought necessary to keep a strict look out, for fear they should land by surprise, in consequence of which half of our battalion kept guard all night, the other half the next, the second battalion doing the same. Nothing hostile has yet commenced, but God knows how soon it may. The ice obliges the ships to warp close to the wharf. This day the ice in large cakes was chock from side to side, and many people upon it."—Penn. Eve. Post, Feb. 10, 1776.
- 8 The committee of safety issues a statement, signed by Henry Remsen, chairman, and addressed to the inhabitants of the neighbouring counties and colonies, that "this city is now become a scene of confusion and distress, occasioned by an apprehension, that unmerited hostilities will shortly be commenced by the ships of war lying in this harbour; under the influence of this belief many of our poor are abandoning their habitations, and flying for protection into the arms of their brethren in the neighbouring counties and provinces. This Committee therefore earnestly intreat all those among whom such poor may come, to exercise great kindness and lenity towards them, by furnishing them with habitations and other necessities of life, for their present subsistence, on the easiest terms, and accommodating them in any other way, which their duty to the poor, as Christians, may direct."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.
- "This day the Freeman and Freeholders are to meet at the City-Hall, at noon, to nominate and elect fifty persons, whereof twenty-one to make a quorum, to serve as a Committee for six months."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 8, 1776.
- "The 8 Instant added New Life to the moving for about 3 o'clock arrived a ship Whit 200 Soulders from Boston it is impossible to Describe the Consternation the Weoman Where in as a Report prevail that 19 ship there Below however there was no moor."—From letter of Garish Harsin, in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 87. Tryon wrote to Dartmouth from the "Dutchess of Gordon:" "This City is in Terror and confusion: One half of its inhabitants have withdrawn with their effects, hundreds without the means to support their families."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 667.
- 9 Gen. Charles Lee writes to the president of congress: "A transport is this instant arrived in this harbour with troops, although it is said that General Clinton gave his honour that not a soldier was destined for this place. As we have, sir, a great deal to do, many works to throw up, Long Island to secure, and a considerable deal of duty necessary for the safety of the city, . . . it is requisite to provide ourselves with an adequate force immediately. It is true, the Committee of Safety (whose zeal and alacrity seem most fervent) have ordered three regiments of Minute-Men into the city; but I apprehend even this addition will not enable us to accomplish the measures resolved upon. . . . The Congress would do well, to establish an Hospital in this Colony."—Lee Papers, IV: 279-80, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871). See also Addenda.
- "After noting the arrival of the British transport "Ketty" with 200 soldiers, a news report states: "In Consequence of the above Manoevre, his Excellency the Earl of Stirling, arrived here from New-Jersey, with about 1000 Men; 2000 are daily expected from Pennsylvania; 1000 from Dutchess-County in this Province, and 2000 from Connecticut; so that we may this Week have an Army here of near 8000 effective Men."—*N. - 11 A British man-of-war, transports, and tender, go from New York Harbour on this day to the "Watering-place" (near the present Quarantine), with 200 marines on board. It is reported that they intend to commit depredations on Staten Island, and supply themselves with live stock. "Gen. Livingston ordered 300 militia to march forth to prevent this, but learning that the fleet had left the Hook the day before, the troops were ordered back, leaving a detachment to guard the coast."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y. Packet, Feb. 22; Penn. Eve. Post (Phila.), Feb. 22, 1776.
- "The American troops seize the king's artillery and military stores in Fort George and on the lower battery, and carry them off without opposition," (the same day that General Clinton sailed out of this Fort [Fort]), . . . Cap<sup>t</sup> Parker [of the "Phoenix"] finding it impossible to interrupt this outrage otherwise than by firing on the City. The ice keeping the Ships of war so near within shore that he was of opinion he could not bring the Ships under his Command to lay off the Fort and Battery, where the Artillery and Chief Part of the stores were deposited without great risk to the King's Ships from the Ice at that severe season. The destruction therefore of the City where there were so many friends to Government, with the loss of all their property, & the consideration of preserving the town for the King's army was thought to be too great sacrifices to make for only retarding the removal of the Artillery and Stores, which even after such sacrifices could have been carried off by the Jersey and the Connecticut Troops; who came into town with full expectations, and the declarative purpose of sharing in the plunder of the effects of the Inhabitants as soon as the King's Ships should fire on the City."—From Tryon's letter of April 6 to Lord Germain, N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 674. See also Garish Harsin's letter in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 87. Smith says:
- "The whole Town was alarmed with the Removal of all the Cannon from the Fort and Battery to the Fields—Carts now employed for the Stores & ammunition & the Cañon drawn by Hands with an astonishing uproar & shouting & the work continued all Day long with an almost intire neglect of all public worship. The multitude expected every Moment a Firing from the Ships. . . . About midday Lord Stirling stopped into my House & boasted of his having the Conduct of this Business & applauded himself for transacting it in open Day as less alarming to the Inhabitants but I withheld my Confidence . . . & let off no Reproaches by distressing the Town at such an intemperate Season because I found the Attempt to persuade People to continue at Home was ill taken by the Committee."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 11, 1776.
- "Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to the president of congress: "As the North-River is now entirely clear of ice, I thought it imprudent to suffer the cannon and other stores to remain any longer upon the Battery, and in yards at the very water-edge, from whence the ships of war might have conveyed them at their pleasure. . . . I ordered the whole to be removed to the ground before the Upper Barracks; it was effected without the least opposition, or show of opposition from the ships; indeed, I even consider their menaces to fire upon the town as idle gasconades."—Lee Papers, I: 283.
- "Last Lord's day [Feb. 11] we were in much confusion; people in almost every street were loading carts with their goods. Our churches were nearly empty, and those who went could scarcely bear the Preacher's voice. In short, all was trepidation and confusion. The greatest part of the inhabitants, with their moveables, have taken refuge in the country, particularly the women and children. What aggravated the distressing scene was, the poor were flying with their children and little all, to the country, many of whom could scarcely pay their ferriage, and did not know where to get shelter. It is worthy of observation, that though many were taking advantage of the distresses of their brethren, by chargiog exorbitant prices for cartage, freight, etc. there were some who acted a worthy part, and came from a considerable distance in the country, to carry the goods of poor people, gratis—An example worthy of imitation."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.
- "Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: ". . . The carts went all the day with the goods of the people that are moving; moreover, in the forenoon the Soldiers began to take away all the guns from the Battery and the Fort, and continued till late. This caused an hourly expectation, especially in the afternoon, that the men of war would fire. . . ."—The Campaign of 1776, Part II, p. 106.
- "The committee of safety, "observing that the cannon and military stores, on and near the battery, are now under removal to other parts of the city; and knowing that this transaction, both in its design and execution, is without the consent of this committee, . . . ; and as perhaps such removal may bring on a firing upon the city, from the ships of war in this port, which may greatly endanger the public records of this colony" (see Dec. 4, 1775), this committee orders: "That the said public records of this colony, together with Samuel Bayard, Jun. Esq. the deputy secretary of this colony, be forthwith conveyed, under a proper guard of the militia of the city of New York, to the dwelling-house of Nicholas Bayard, Esq. alderman of the out ward of the said city, and be 1776 there securely kept, under such guard, until the further order of the provincial congress of this colony, or of this committee of safety; and the said guard is hereby expressly required to permit the said Samuel Bayard, Esq. to have continual access to, and the direction of the said records, except that he and every other person be prevented from removing them, or any of them, from the place where they are hereby ordered to be deposited, . . ." On the same day the records were taken by a military force to the house of Nicholas Bayard. The deputy secretary was taken with them, as directed in the order of the committee of safety; but, upon giving his "parol of honor," he was permitted on Feb. 14 to attend a council meeting on board the "Dutchess of Gordon," as deputy clerk of that board, and delivered to the governor a copy of the resolution of the committee.—Report of the Sec. of State, relative to the Records, &c. in his office (in senate, Jan. 5, 1820). Cf. Cal. Coun. Min., 507, which gives Feb. 14 as the date of the removal of the records.

"With the capture of New York City by the British these records started on a peripatetic career. Whenever the capital of the state was moved the records were moved. Whenever was heard the cry 'the enemy are coming' the sacred documents were the first articles to be seized and hastily conveyed to a place of safety. Upon the approach of the enemy to Kingston, the archives of the state were carried off to Rochester, a small town in Ulster county. After Burgoyne's defeat, the archives were returned to Kingston, where they were guarded by a special detail of 200 men."

13 Mayor Whitehead Hicks tells the provincial congress that Gov. Tryon's ship "is impeded by sentinels," and "that His Majesty's Council, and some of the magistrates of this city, may have occasion to wait on His Excellency." It is therefore ordered "That the Honble. Cadwallader Colden, Lieut.-Govr. and the Honble. Daal. Horsmanden, Oliver De Lancy, Chas. Ward Apthorpe, William Smith, Hugh Wallace, William Astell and John Harris Cruger, Esqrs. of His Majesty's Council for this Colony, the Worshipful Whitehead Hicks, Esqr. Mayor of the city of New-York, and Saml. Bayard, Junr. Esqr. Deputy Secretary, and Deputy Clerk . . . be permitted to go on board of His Excellency's ship, until the further order or direction of this Congress or the Committee of Safety . . ."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 296. Smith, in his diary, recites his difficulty in passing the sentinels thus: "We proceeded to the Dock [to embark for the council meeting on the Dutchess of Gordon] apprehending no Difficulties from the Guards—A centinel forbid the Clerk of the Council to set his Foot in the Boat upon which we retired and I went home—The Congress took the Alarm apprehending that if we did not meet the Governor there would be no Prorogation & a Dissolution would follow—within Half an Hour their Clerks sought for the dispersed members & assured us there would be no further Obstruction & impertuned us to repair again to our Boat."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 14, 1776.

14 "Application beieg made by some of the master carpenters employed in building the continental frigates, to some members of this house, informing, that about fifty of their journeymen and apprentices had engaged as volunteers to march with the battalion of associators for New York, and that their zeal for the public service is such, that they cannot be persuaded to desist by any arguments or influence of said builders," it is resolved "That the spirit and zeal of the said journeymen and apprentices is highly approved of by Congress; but, nevertheless, it is the opinion of this Congress, that the public will be more essentially served by the said associators continuing at their work on the said continental frigates; and that, therefore, all the carpenters, journeymen, and apprentices, employed as aforesaid, be requested to remain in that service, as there is no doubt but other associators will complete the number wanted."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 147-48.

"The provincial congress orders that John van Cortlandt, Mr. Roosevelt, and Capt. Rutgers act as a committee "to examine the lists of empty houses in this city, made by sundry citizens at the request of the Committee of Safety, . . . and to ascertain such as they may think most proper for the use of the troops."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 299. See, further, Feb. 15.

1776. Smith, in his diary, quotes Gov. Tryon as saying to the council that Hicks was "tired of the mayoralty & desirous to retire from the 'Town.'" He further says: "I never knew Mr Tryon so indolent to the Board as at this meeting. He thought as he had no Instructions he could constitute Judges without us but he chose nevertheless to consult us, and then he nominated Mr Hicks for a Judge—This occasioned the Silence of the Rest of the Board on these appointments, and they shewed a proper Resentment in giving no opinion, especially as there was indeed no Objection to be made since the principal Characters of the Country were in open Opposition to Gov't."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 14, 1776.

See A. " Royal artillery and ordnance are removed from the fort and lower battery.—Cal. Coun. Min., 507.

" Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to Washington: "My intention is to pull down that part of the fort on the town side to prevent its being converted into a citadell for the enemy, and to erect a battery on a traverse in the street, to prevent their making a lodgment in it."—Lee Papers, I: 266. See Feb. 23, 29, March 14.

15 "The alarm and confusion in this city, for some days past, was truly distressing, occasioned chiefly by the unexpected arrival of Gen. Clinton in the Mercury frigate (on Feb. 4); and two other vessels, a ship with troops, and a brig, from Boston. They sailed from hence three days ago, it is said, for North-Carolina, since which we have enjoyed some small degree of quiet; but how it will continue, is hard to tell."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.

"The provincial congress passes the following resolution: "Whereas a large body of troops are daily expected from the neighbouring counties and Colonies, for the defence of this city against the ministerial army and navy, in which case it will be necessary (as the barracks are already filled with those already arrived), to provide proper houses for their reception: It is therefore

"Resolved and Ordered, That the general committee of the city and county of New-York, be requested forthwith to cause a return to be made to them of all the empty houses in this city, and that they, or a sub-committee of their body, select a sufficient number of said houses for the accommodation of the troops that shall, from time to time arrive. That in the choice of the said houses such be taken as are least liable to be injured by the troops. That the said committee, or their sub-committee, be careful to take a survey of the condition of the said houses, at the time they shall be taken possession of, and at the time such houses shall be left by the said troops, to the end that proper satisfaction may be made to the proprietors for any injury the said houses may receive by reason of quartering troops therein."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 301.

16 "Col. McDougall informed the Congress that he understood that the floors were laid in the hospital lately erected in this city." Congress orders "That Col. Swartwout be authorized to demand the keys of the hospital lately erected in this city and open the same—that he examine the rooms and apartments, and if he thinks them proper for quartering troops in, that he be authorized to make use of the same for his regiment of minute men."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 303.

17 Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to the president of congress: "I think it my duty to inform you, that the Phenix and Governour Tryon's ship are already out of the harbour, and that the Asia is under sail. They, most probably, have had intelligence of the danger which threatens their comrade, the Mercury, and General Clinton, from your fleet, and are sailed with an intention of attacking it . . . The Asia ran aground opposite the Exchange; as the tides are low, we were in hopes she would not have been able to have got off this flood. In these hopes we were preparing cartridges for some pieces of cannon, (which is not here from want of method, a very short operation,) and flattered ourselves that we should have been able to have destroyed or much damaged her, but she is now, unfortunately, afloat."—4 Am. Archives, IV: 1179-80. Under the same date, Smith recorded: "The Phenix fell down this morning to the Narrows & the Asia ran aground opposite to Whitehall in the afternoon in retiring with the Dutchess of Gordon below the Town. She got off before the Preparations for attacking her were completed, for Lee and Stirling had so resolved & many of the Citizens were hastened in their Flight to the Country."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 17, 1776. "Capt. Vaadeput of the 'Asia' is stationed in North River, and takes the 'Dutchess of Gordon' under his protection with Governor Tryon on board."—*N. Y. Col. 1776 Feb.

A debate is held in the house of commons on a motion for an enquiry into the causes of the ill success of the British arms in America. Mr. Fox declares "that our ministers wanted both wisdom and integrity, our parliaments public spirit and discernment; and that our Commanders by sea and land, were either deficient in abilities, or, which was the more probable, had acted under orders that prevented them from executing the great objects of their command." He moves "That it be referred to a Committee, to enquire into the Causes of the ill Success of his Majesty's Arms in North America, as also into the Causes of the Defection of the people of the province of Quebec."

All the speakers except the solicitor-general, who "insisted that the war was just and expedient, that the ministers abounded in wisdom, and the army and navy in military prowess," agreed that the war had been poorly managed and executed. Some, however, objected to the motion as premature, and impracticable, because witnesses and principals were on the other side of the ocean, or because an enquiry "would produce a fatal procrastination." Lord Mulgrave defended the naval operations; Gen. Burgoyne those of the army; Mr. Hey, chief-justice of Quebec, the Quebec Bill; and Lord North the ministry.

"Mr. Burke shewed from the records of parliament and from history, that nothing was more frequent than enquiries of the kind now proposed; and observed that, at no time within the course of his reading, did he ever recollect a period at which such a proceeding was more absolutely necessary than the present."

Though Fox had opened his speech by setting aside all old quarrels as irrelevant, Mr. Cruger replied: "I cannot forbear saying, the friends of peace and good order in the province of New-York, did not deserve to be reproached with a shameful neutrality . . . In a dutiful manner they submitted their grievances to the clemency of this House . . . I shall not dwell on the Contempt with which their zealous advances to a reconciliation were rejected." The "administration . . . neglected to aid them with a force sufficient to maintain their opposition against the zealots in their own province." The motion was lost, 249 to 104.—Parl. Hist. of Eng. (813), XVIII: 1143-56.

"The common council authorizes the payment of £13:17:6 to Isaac Mead, "for the Doors of the hall Where the Arms Was taking out Sundry Articles for the New goal & Repairing the Sentry Boxes."—Original voucher in comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 127.

"Alexander Moncrieff is paid £50:6:9, "in full of his Acc<sup>t</sup> for sundry Expences attending the Bridewell including a Quarters Salary."—M. C. C., VIII: 129. Moncrieff's account includes 2,133 days' subsistence for vagrants, at 5 shillings per day.—Original voucher in comptroller's office.

"David Mathews produces in the common council the resignation of Mayor Hicks, dated Feb. 14 (q. v.), which shows that it is entered in "Lib: N<sup>o</sup> D of Commissions page 184," in the secretary of state's office; and he informs the board that Gov. Tryon has appointed him to the offices of mayor, water-bailiff, and clerk of the markets. His commission is published, and he is "conducted to the Common Council Chamber, and placed in the Chair."—M. C. C., VIII: 127. Regarding the subsequent career of Mayor Mathews, see ibid., VIII: 127-40; and June 21.

22 Samuel Landon announces that his circulating library now amounts to over 2,000 volumes, and that a supplementary catalogue is about to be issued to subscribers.—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 22, 1776.

23 Frederick Rhinelandt writes from New York to Peter van Schaack: "General Lee is taking every necessary step to fortify and defend this city. The men-of-war are gone out of our harbor; the Phoenix is at the Hook; the Asia lays near Bedlow's Island; so that we are now in a state of perfect peace and security, was it not for our apprehensions of future danger. To see the vast number of houses shut up, one would think the city almost evacuated. Women and children are scarcely to be seen in the streets. Troops are daily coming in; they break open and quarter themselves in any houses they find shut up . . . We are going to raise a new battalion; Colonels Lasher and Gouverneur Morris are candidates for the command."—Life of Peter Van Schaack, 53.

24 Col. Ward's regiment arrives in New York from Connecticut and passes over to Nassau Island.—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 29, 1776.

26 It is reported at a meeting of congress that Dr. Treat has taken every measure to find out some proper place for a hospital, the only two obtained being Mr. De Lancy's house in the Out Ward, and three houses in and near Maiden Lane, near Walton's brewery. Congress is of opinion that the place in Maiden Lane will not answer the purpose, and that Mr. De Lancy's house in the Bowery is the most proper. A committee is appointed to apply to John de Lancy for the use of his house.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 323.

The committee reported in March, however, that they "had viewed the house on Freshwater Hill, where John Fowler lately dwelt, with two barns adjoining. That Dr. Treat highly approved of said house and barns for a hospital; that they had contracted for the said house and barns, &c. for the rent of £70 from the 1st day of May next." This action congress ratified.—Ibid., I: 336. See also April 6.

Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress "that some works will be necessary to be erected on some ground on the bank southwest of Trinity church; that three small houses there (one of them tenanted) will necessarily be taken down." Mr. Roosevelt, Capt. Rutgers, and Mr. Beekman, "who are judges of buildings," are appointed a committee to examine and determine the value of the three buildings.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 323.

Two brass field-pieces, cast in New York, are brought into Philadelphia.—Conn. Gaz. (New London), March 15, 1776. See Mar. 12.

Gen. Charles Lee writes: "I have pulled down the interior part of the Fort, lest it should be converted into a Citadel by Mr Tryon and his Myrmidons."—Lee Papers, I: 334.

"John Murray, in the 57th Regiment from Edinburgh, engraves all manner of silver-plate, seals, coats of arms," etc., From an advertisement in Rivington's Royal Gaz., Feb. 28, 1776; Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 187.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to Gen. Washington from New York: "Waterbury's and Sterling's Regiments are quartered in the City; the former in the Upper barracks, the latter in the Lower. Two hundred minute men are likewise lodged in the town. Drake's regiment of minute men, and one company more (in all about two hundred) are stationed at Horn's Hook which commands the pass at Hell Gate. They are employed in throwing up a redoubt, to contain three hundred men. As to the town, having few hands, and the necessary duty being hard, I have been able to effect little. I have indeed throwa down the side of the fort next the town, to prevent its being covered [converted] into a citadel for the use of the enemy. It was absolutely impossible to be moulded into anything which could annoy their ships. I have likewise thrown a traverse or barrier, across the Broadway two hundred yards in the rear of the fort, with four pieces of cannon to prevent the enemy lodging themselves in the remains of the fort and repairing it. It is likewise my intention to barricade all the streets leading into the Broadway both on the right and left, to secure us against being taken in reverse. Batteries are to be erected on the eminence behind Trinity Church, to keep their ships at so great a distance as not to injure the town. As we are surrounded by navigable waters I consider enclosed works as rather dangerous; it was therefore my intention to throw up a great number of large fêches or redans, at certain distances, one behind another, so as to render it a disputable field of battle against any force. King's Bridge being a most important pass (without the command of which we could have no communication with Connecticut) I had resolved to make as strong as possible. Such were my schemes; but as the Congress have not furnished the force which I was taught to expect from Philadelphia, we have not had it in our power to effect more than I have related. Governor Tryon and the Asia still continue betwixt Nutton's and Bedloe's Islands."—From Lee Papers, I: 337-38.

In the course of a debate in the house of commons on American measures, Mr. Hartley says: "I frequently hear the terms of rebellion and rebels made use of, which I shall never adopt: not only because I would avoid every term of acrimony which might increase the ill-blood between us and our fellow subjects, in America, but likewise, thinking as I do, that the ministry of this country have been in every stage the aggressors; I never will, as a Whig of Revolution principles, confound terms so fundamentally the reverse to each other, as defensive resistance in the support of constitutional rights, with unprovoked and active treason. The colonies have been condemned unheard. If you would have condescended to have heard their petition, you would have found that all they requested has been to be restored to the happy state of harmony, and constitutional dependence existing in 1763."

1776 Those ministers who have so madly driven them on to unavoidable
 Feb. resistance, must be answerable to their country for all future consequences. I wish to enter my protest once for all, that I shall always think that our American fellow-subjects have been driven to resistance in their own defence, and in support of those very claims [for] which we ourselves have successfully taken up arms in former times, to rescue us from the violence and tyrannical pretensions of the House of Stuart."—Parl. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1170-71.

Mar. It is reported in New London "that about One Hundred and Ninety Cannon, of various Sizes, have been taken from Fort George in New-York, and that Part of the Fort next to the City is demolished.

"Numbers of Cannon are mounted on different Wharves in that City.

"We learn that all the Cannon near Kingsbridge, which had been spiked, are now cleared, and fit for Use."—Conn. Gaz., (New London), March 1, 1776.

"A correspondent in London writes: "Lord Howe is to go [as] first commissioner, in the new, idle, ridiculous commission that is to be made out, to treat with America. His Lordship is not to be, nor to act as commander of any force, but in a civil capacity only.

"Discerning men already say this commission scheme will not succeed. America will not treat with those men, nor with any persons (however otherwise respectable) sent by those who advised the late barbarous bloody measures against her.

"First remove Lord Mansfield, and the tools of Lord Bute, and then, and not till then, America and England will believe the court are truly desirous of peace."—Moore, Diary of Am. Rev., I: 211, citing Conn. Gaz., March 2 and 6, 1776.

2 Information is given to the provincial congress that sentries near the wharves frequently fire at boats and sloops containing the inhabitants of this and the neighbouring colonies as they enter or leave the docks and slips, "whereby the persons on board are in danger of losing their lives." Information is also given to this congress "that all communication with, and the supplies of necessary provisions to the ships of war, and Govr. Tryon's ship, in the harbour or in the bays near this City, is interdicted; and Mr. Roosevelt informed the Congress that Col. Waterbury has lately declared that the other United Colonies ought to crush this Colony of New-York; and that Mr. Isaac Sears had spoken of this Congress, and the general communication of the city of New York, in the most harsh, disrespectful and abusive terms. . . . A committee is appointed "to wait on Major-Gen. Lee without delay, and request of him the reason of his interdicting the communication between this city and the ships of war and Govr. Tryon's ship, in or near the harbour of this city, contrary to the resolves of this Congress; and also, to request the occasion of the firing by the soldiery of this city on the inhabitants. . . ."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 333.

4 The following notice is published: "The Fire Engine of the Water Works being now completely finished, Mr. Colles proposes to keep it going for several Days successively, to give every Gentleman an Opportunity of seeing it; and in order that they may more easily know when it is a working, a Flag will be display'd in the Middle of the Road, which may be seen from any Part of the Broadway."—N. Y. Merc., Mar. 4, 1776. There is an illustration of this engine in Wilson's Mem. Hist. City of N. Y., II: 478. For a description of the works, see March 11 and April 17.

5 Capt. Archibald Robertson, an engineer in the 47th Regiment of foot and an officer on Howe's staff at Boston, writes in his Journal: "It is now Eight o'Clock in the Evening. Went to Head Q<sup>rs</sup> at 7—after waiting some time Cap<sup>tn</sup> Montresor came down from the Genl told me He had been in Council & had advised the going off altogether—that L<sup>td</sup> Percy & some others seconded him & that the Genl said it was his own Sentiments from the first, but he thought the honour of the Troops Concerned—so it is agreed immediately to Embark every thing."—Robertson's Private Jour. 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. Five MS. journals kept by Capt. Robertson, and a series of 54 American views made by him (see July 12), have recently been purchased by the N. Y. Pub. Library from three of his descendants. The journals are legibly written in small note-books. The first deals solely with the expedition to Martinique in 1762; the others are valuable as contemporary records of Revolutionary War happenings. They extend from July 17, 1775, to the end of 1780 (during most of which time Robertson was in America).

Howe announced to his officers on the next day (q.v.) his Mar. decision to evacuate.

The common council orders the further issue of notes to the value of £2,000 "for carrying on the Water Works" (see Jan. 5).—M. C. C., VIII: 131. On March 18, it granted to Christopher Colles the sum of £20 "for the Expences of supporting himself & Family for two months past."—Ibid., VIII: 133. See April 19.

"A middle size gun," taken from the guard house on this day, is described as "3 foot 7 inches barrel, brass mounted with a brass rib over the barrel from the breach to the light, and one on each side about 18 inches long, the plate of the lock brass, fixed for a bayonet."—Conn. Gaz., March 27, 1776.

6 The following letter, signed by Pierre van Cortlandt and others, is written to Major Malcolm: "The Provincial Congress of this Colony having appointed us a committee to concert measures for carrying into execution their resolve of the 5th inst. for the dismantling the light-house at Sandy-Hook, we. . . have made choice of you for the execution of that important enterprise. . . . Upon your arrival at Sandy-Hook you will endeavour to take the glass out of the lantern, and save it if possible; but if you find this impracticable you will break all the glass. You will also endeavour to pump the oil out of the cisterns into casks and bring it off; but if you should be obstructed by the enemy, or not be able to procure casks, you will pump it out into the ground. In short you will use your best discretion to render the light-house entirely useless."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 342.

8 Gen. Howe informs his officers that he intends to evacuate Boston and to go to Halifax. Robertson says: "The Great motive for our leaving the Town is want of provisions not having a month's in store wth what the Navy can assist us in."—Robertson's Private Jour., 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. The final evacuation took place on Mar. 17 (q.v.).

The news reaches New York that a number of troops are evacuating Boston, and embarking on transports; "it is thought they intend visiting N. York very shortly."—Penn. Eve. Post, March 9, 1776.

8 The "Selectmen" of Boston send a petition to Gen. Washington "acquainting him that Genl Howe was to leave the Town [see Mar. 6] that they had ask'd the Genl if He intended to burn the Town. w<sup>ch</sup> He told them He did not unless the Rebels fired upon him & annoy'd his Retreat in that Case He did not know what He might do." They ask Washington not to allow "The Rabbet to come into town, but only the People to take possession of their own houses &c<sup>a</sup>."—Robertson's Private Jour. 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Mar. 18.

The provincial congress orders "That a letter be wrote to the Delegates of this Colony, informing them the Governor and Representatives of the Colony of Connecticut have not as yet given any answer to the letter from this Provincial Congress [see Dec. 12, 1775] on that subject [the inroads from Connecticut] nor returned nor made any restitution for the types or property taken away from James Rivington."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 346. See June 10.

10 Agreeable to a "resolve" of the continental congress, of this date, an appraisal is taken of the arms, etc., taken from the "disaffected persons" in New York City. The list of these is printed in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 259.

11 William Temple, of Boston, brother of John Temple, lieutenant-governor of New Hampshire, arrived in New York yesterday [10th], and went on to Philadelphia where he conferred with the members of the provincial congress, asserting that he had messages to the continental congress from the Marquis of Rockingham and the Duke of Grafton, to the effect that if the colonies could "keep their ground the ensuing Summer" the administration would be overturned and ruined.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

9 James de Lancey, who had fled to England via Quebec after the Lexington skirmish, and there joined the Whig opposition to the Tory administration, writes to his friends in New York urging the adoption by the continental congress of Burke's "Bill for a Reconciliation," in order to overthrow the Lord North government. "This confirms me," says Smith, "in my opinion that the Government frowns upon the Fugitives from America and that the Opposition aim at render<sup>g</sup> the great controversy useful to themselves."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

Gov. Tryon informs the council that he has received three letters from the new secretary of state, Lord George Germaine, 1776 "announcing his [Germaine's] Appointment, asserting the Determination to insist on the Dependence of the Colonies, informing Mar. 11 that Commissioners were speedily to come out to grant Pardons and confer with the Colonies for restoring Peace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

"We can with Pleasure assure the Public, that the Fire Engine of the Water Works [see March 4] was work'd many Days last Week, greatly to the Satisfaction of vast Numbers of People who went to see it. This Engine carries a Pump of 11 Inches diameter, and 6 Feet Stroke, which contains 29 Galls. Makes 10 Strokes in a Minute 290
In one Hour, 174 Hogsheads 17400
In 12 Hours, 2088 ditto, 208800
In 24 Hours, 4176 ditto, 417600

"The Well is 30 Feet diameter, and 30 deep, contains 8 Feet depth of water.

"The Water is inexhaustable, for the Pump, tho' continually work'd, cannot lower the Water more than two Feet.

"A Cord and  $\frac{1}{2}$  of Wood will work the Engine for 24 Hours.

"It is proposed to work the Engine for some Days longer, for the further Inspection of the Public, of which Notice will be given by hoisting a Flag."—N. Y. Merc., March 11, 1776. For another description of the works, see April 17.

12 "At New York we have a founder who has already cast 14 or 15 excellent brass field-pieces" (see Feb. 27).—The Remembrancer (London, 1776), Part III, 31. See Apr. 12.

13 Washington, writing from Cambridge to the president of congress, during the evacuation of Boston, says that he considers it "of the last importance in the present contest that we should secure New York, and prevent the enemy from possessing it." He conjectures that the British have embarked for the purpose of attacking it. In accordance with a consultation of general officers, he states, "I shall detach the rifle regiment to-morrow, under the command of Brigadier-General Sullivan, with orders to repair to New York with all possible expedition." Others are to follow. Then he intends to send forward Major-Gen. Putnam, and to follow himself with the remainder of the army.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 468-69.

"Six regiments of the American army, viz. Groaton's, Stark's, Patterson's, Bond's, Webb's, and the rifle regiment, were put under orders to march for New York [from Boston]; . . . A detachment of artillery was also ordered to march with this brigade."—Memoirs of Maj-Gen. Heath, 42.

"A 'Return' or account is made of the number of troops at New York, under the command of Brig-Gen. The Earl of Stirling, showing where the regiments are from, where they are stationed, and the number of officers and privates on this day. It enumerates 181 sergeants, 158 corporals, 89 drums and fife, and 2,173 privates.—From the original MS. with the Stirling Papers (Vol. IV), at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"Regulations are agreed to for the defence of New York, between Lord Stirling, general of the continental troops, and a committee of the provincial congress of the colony of New York.—From a contemporaneous manuscript copy of the agreement, in the Stirling Papers (Vol. IV).

14 The Duke of Grafton, in the house of lords, moves that the king be authorized and requested by parliament to issue a proclamation "declaring, that in case the colonies, within a reasonable time before or after the arrival of the troops destined for America, shall present a petition . . . setting forth . . . what they consider to be their just rights and real grievances, that in such case his Majesty will consent to a suspension of arms; and that his Majesty has authority from his parliament to assure them, that such their petition shall be received, considered, and answered."

"The Earl of Dartmouth speaks against the motion. 'I never was,' said he, 'and ever shall be of opinion, that this country cannot, with propriety, concede, nor can we, consistent with the essential interests of this country, consent to lay down our arms, till the colonies own our legislative sovereignty. . . . I was anxious to treat them with tenderness, and even to give way to their prejudices, so far as it could be done with safety. What has been the consequence? They have treated those marks of favour as so many indications of national imbecility; they have abused this lenity in proportion as it has been liberally and affectionately exercised. I am of opinion, that the only sure and solid way of averting the evils of civil war, will be to send such a force as will awe the Colonies into submission."

The Duke of Manchester states that "The very great expense with which the present measures must necessarily be attended; the uncertainty of the real disposition of foreign powers; and the present state of the navy . . . all united, give just cause for considering the present question, and adverting to the dangerous consequences which may follow, in case your lordships should be inclined to give it a negative."

The Earl of Sandwich, head of the naval department, denies the weakness of the navy, mentioned by Manchester, and adds: "the present measures, if steadily pursued, will, to every substantial purpose, answer the ends of humanity, and be the most effectual means of preventing the effusion of human blood."

The Earl of Hillsborough expresses himself as "perfectly convinced, that if the right of taxation be surrendered, every other beneficial right of sovereignty will soon follow, and America in the end be totally separated from this country."

The Earl of Shelburne can see but one objection to the motion, that "it would operate as an encouragement to America to rise higher in her demands. . . . Granting every thing which may be built on this argument to have great weight, I would only oppose to it this one consideration. . . . that should this turn out to be true, it would give the friends of government such a superiority, such a concurrence of hearts and hands, as would be more than a sufficient counterbalance for any inconvenience which might arise from the suspension of arms proposed by the present motion."

Lord Lyttelton asks the house to "Consider . . . what a figure you would cut in the eyes of all Europe, in those of your own subjects, in the opinion even of the very people for whose sake the benefit is intended. Would they not all unite in pronouncing it the summit of folly, of cowardice, and national weakness. . . . It will only be," he adds, "to give the colonies time to prepare for more vigorous resistance."

The Bishop of Peterborough ventures to speak in the interest of humanity. He does not believe that the Americans want independence and would not listen to conciliation. "Should it, however, appear that nothing short of independence will satisfy America . . . it will let us all into the real ground of the quarrel, concerning which we so widely differ at present."

Lord Abingdon declares that "the present war to compel her [America] to an unconditional submission, is a war of conquest, and, if successful, must terminate in the absolute slavery of the vanquished."

Lord Camden is "desirous the present motion should succeed," and is curious to learn "the real intentions of administration, to know whether they mean at all to recede from their full demands, or whether they intend to risk every thing to pursue war for the purpose of a complete conquest in one event, or unconditional submission in the other."

Lord Mansfield opposes the motion, as "negatory, ill-timed, and ineffectual," and the Duke of Grafton closes the debate by urging the members "to reflect, that the honour of parliament, the prosperity and dearest interest of both countries, the lives of thousands of British subjects are at stake, that at the present is probably the only moment you will ever have to snatch them from the ruin which will otherwise inevitably await them, and that the consequences of neglecting this opportunity, will be the source of endless mourning and lamentation to ages yet unborn."

"The motion is lost by a vote of 91 to 31.—Parl. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1247-86.

"The continental congress recommends that "all persons . . . who are notoriously disaffected to the cause of America" be disarmed.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 205. This resolution was complied with in New York City.—Cal. N. Y. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 259.

"The committee of the continental congress appointed on March 11 "to confer with Gen. Charles Lee, and devise the best ways and means for the defence of New York," makes its report. Gen. Lee states, among other things: ". . . As the City of New York is almost environ'd by navigable waters it is undoubtedly very difficult to fortify it against a powerful sea armament; but still I am of opinion that although Troops cannot easily be prevented landing under the Guns of their shipping, they may be prevented lodging themselves in it, or converting it into a great place of arms as they have done Boston. The East River, I am almost persuaded, 1776 may be secur'd in such a manner that their Ships will scarcely venture into it, or at least they cannot keep their stations when in a Battery for this purpose is plac'd and in some forwardness at the foot of the Jews burying ground [on the present New Bowery—cf. Dec. 17, 1729], to protect this Battery from the near approach of Ships . . .

14 "The Fort cannot . . . be defended, but as it is not possible in our hands to render it a fortification of offence against the Enemy, it might in their possession be converted into a Citadel to keep the Town in subjection. . . . These considerations have induc'd me to throw down the North East and North West Bastions, with the communicating Curtain, so that being entirely open behind, and a commanding Traverse thrown across the Broad Way with three Guns mounted, it is impossible for the Enemy to lodge themselves in and repair the Fort . . . New York from its circumstances can with difficulty be made a regular tenable fortification, but it may be made a most advantageous field of Battle, so advantageous . . . it must cost the Enemy many thousands of men . . . The Streets must be traversed and barricaded, so as to prevent their coming on our Flanks, three Redoubts thrown up on the three eminences Judge Jones, Bayards Hill, and either Lispenards or Haldemans house on Hudsons River, but these measures are not to be confin'd to the Town, the whole Island is to be redoubted in certain regular steps . . . quite to Kings Bridge, these redoubts redans or Fliches are easily thrown up and are an expence, the leading roads from Hudsons River whence the Enemy can alone approach must be obstructed to artillery. Kings Bridge must be strongly fortified to preserve the communication free and open with Connecticut, on which Province you can alone depend for succours of men, for the Breadth and depth of the North River renders the Communication with Jersey too precarious. The possession and security of Long Island is certainly of still greater importance than New York. . . ."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 196, 201-4.

Washington replied on March 14, writing from headquarters in Cambridge, and expressed satisfaction with Lee's plans for the defence of New York. As Lee had been sent south, Washington informed him he would order the commanding officer at New York to complete the preparations for defence.—Ibid., IV: 358. See also the Lee Papers, I: 354-59; and, for fuller description of the fortifications on Manhattan Island at this time, see Johnston's Campaign of 1776, 263-65, and the Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.

"Horatio Gates, the adjutant-general of the patriot forces, publishes notice from headquarters in New York that, as the "Asia" has "quitted her station and left the harbour, the navigation between this city and New Jersey, by the Kills, is become quite safe."—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776.

"The committee of the continental congress appointed to confer with Gen. Lee regarding the defence of New York reports, and congress resolves that 8,000 men be ordered for the defence of this colony; and that certain specified troops of Pennsylvania and New Jersey be ordered to march immediately to New York, and put themselves under the direction of the commanding officer there. On March 15, congress ordered that the militia of Connecticut, New York and New Jersey be held in readiness for the same purpose.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (1777), II: 91-92.

"Washington writes from Cambridge to the commanding officer at New York that, while it is given out by the British that Howe's army is bound for Halifax, he suspects their destination is New York. "It is the object worthy of their attention, and it is the place that we must use every endeavor to keep from them. For should they get that town, and the command of the North River, they can stop the intercourse between the northern and southern colonies, upon which depends the safety of America." Washington sends regiments to New York from the camp at Cambridge, and advises that troops be called to New York from New Jersey and "the militia of the country called in."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 473. See Mar. 21 15 "The rifle regiment commences its march to New York with Boston.—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 43.

"Several cannon are sent across the river to the fortifications at Brooklyn ferry. One third of the citizens are ordered out to erect new works; they begin a fort on Mr. Bayard's mount near the Bowery, and another all around the hospital. On March 16, another third go out. Every street in the city is to be barricaded.—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), March 20, 1776.

Gov. Tryon sends to Mayor Mathews for publication, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the Colony of New-York," a letter of appeal, in which he states "that a Door is still open to such honest, but deluded People, as shall avail themselves of the Justice and Benevolence which the supreme Legislature has held out to them of being restored to the King's Grace and Peace, and that proper Steps have been taken for passing a Commission for that Purpose, under the Great Seal of Great-Britain, in Conformity to a Provision in a late Act of Parliament, the Commissioners thereby to be appointed, having also Power to enquire into the State and Condition of the Colonies for effecting a restoration of public Tranquility." This address Tryon requests the mayor to present to the "gentlemen of the Corporation," and to publish. It appeared in the N. Y. Packet, March 21, and N. Y. Merc., March 25, 1776. On the 21st, William Smith recorded in his diary: "Notwithstanding our Disussions at the last Council Mr Tryon put a Paper into the Hands of the Mayor last Tuesday which I saw at Gaine's for the Press, informing that Commissioners were coming over & incouraging the Friends of Government to expect speedly Relief from Oppression. It shocked me and threw the Tories into Consternation as it held them up to the wrath of the Populace who now carried about his Effigy with the Paper at Noon Day followed by several Hundred of the lower Class execrating the Government."—William Smith's Diary (MS.), March 21, 1776. The effigy was labelled: "William Tryon, late Governor of this province, but now a professed Rebel and Traitor to its dearest rights and privileges."—Conn. Gen. (New London), Mar. 29, 1776. This act of the governor was the more unfortunate because he had recently been subject to a charge brought before the provincial congress of "purchasing a boat to cruise in our Rivers and seize Provisions to be sent to Boston." The committee of congress appointed to investigate reported "a full conviction that the Charge was groundless." Smith goes on to say: "And yet such was the Malignity of the Times that the Scandal was propagated. No measures were taken to make the Governor's Innocence known to the Town."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Mar. 21, 1776.

Frederick Juy writes to his brother, John Jay: ". . ." "This Day all our militia turned out with great spirit. They are throwing up entrenchments at the Hospital, Bayard's Mount, at the Furnace, Peck's slip, Beekman's slip, Ten Eyck's wharf, Back of the Governor's House, & several other places. Never did People in the world act with more Spirit & Resolution than the New Yorkers do at this present time."—Corresp. and Public Papers of John Jay, I: 47.

Gen. Howe evacuates Boston, with a force of about 11,000 men and about 1,000 refugees.—Robertson's Private Jour., 1775 (MS.); Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 158.

18 An account, amounting to £12:3:6, of John Simmons, the tavern-keeper, for liquors supplied to the common council between Sept. 16, 1774, and Feb. 27, 1776, is ordered paid.—Original voucher in comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 132.

20 A sub-committee appointed by the general committee for the city and county of New York, by direction of the committee of safety of the province of New York, makes report of its inspection, and presents an account of the quantity of provisions and bar-baron in this city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., (Rev. Papers), I: 270.

21 "General Washington has detached six regiments [see Mar. 14] for this place [New York] who are already advanced 100 miles towards it; 2000 men from Connecticut are coming; thirteen other regiments will soon be here, so that we shall in a few days have an array of at least 20,000 men to oppose our enemies, and we shall have a train of 200 pieces of cannon ready to salute them."—N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), March 28, 1776. See Mar. 23.

23 "General Washington by a Letter of the 19th advises General Lee of Mr Howe's abandoning Boston on Sunday 17 Ins<sup>o</sup> [9. v.] & then laying in King Road & Nantasket." This information caused fresh alarm, and "the Inhabitants flew out of Town with the utmost Precipitation," because they believed Howe would come to New York, a belief that was strengthened the next day by intelligence "from the East End of Long Island that 20 Vessels were seen the 22d between Block Island & Montauk Point the Eastern Extremity of Long Island."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 23, 1776.

1776 and number of Men requisite to man them, as made to General Mar. Thompson." The names and locations of the batteries are as follows:

- "Grenadier's Battery, . . . Near the Air-Furnace, on the bank of the North-River"
- "Jersey's Battery, . . . A little to the northward of the first"
- "Mc Dougall's Battery, . . . To the westward of Trinity Church, and very near it"
- "Broadway Barrier, . . . Very near the Bowling-Green, or the King's Statue"
- "Coenties's Battery, . . . On Ten Eyck's Wharf"
- "Stirling's Battery, . . . On Long-Island, and nearly opposite the Fly-Market (In the rear of this there is to be a citadel, which will take up about five acres, and called The Congress)"
- "Waterbury's Battery, . . . At the Ship-Yards"
- "Badlam's Battery, . . . On Rutgers first Hill, just above the last mentioned"
- "Thompson's Battery, . . . At Horne's Hook"
- "Independent Battery, . . . On Bayard's Mount."

"Besides the foregoing, there is a breastwork or barrier at Peck's, Beekman's, Burling's, and Fly slips, as also at the Coffee-House, Old Slip, Coenties Market, and the Exchange, and one about midway of Broad Street of this Construction, =====; and the same was made in several of the streets leading from the North-River to the Broadway. There is also a line of circumvallation to be drawn from river to river, taking in the Independent Battery, on Bayard's Hill, or Jones's where there is also a fortification to be erected, called Washington, to which may be added a redoubt round the Hospital; as also a work to be erected on the Common, near the Liberty Pole."—Am. Archites, 4th series, V: 480. A description of these batteries, with an indication of their location on the plan of the modern city, and the extent of their armament, was published by Mr. Henry P. Johnston, in The Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn (1878), 84-90. In this connection he prints the following note of explanation:

"In locating the works in New York City, the writer follows the list of batteries reported March 24th, 1776 (Force, 4th Series, vol. V, p. 480); Putnam's order of May 22 [q. v.], naming the several works; Knox's artillery returns of June 10th, giving the number of guns in each; and Hills' map of the fortifications, drawn at the close of the war. The first list shows the works as they stood at about the time the Boston troops came down, and which Lee had planned. There are alterations and additions in Putnam's and Knox's lists, which are to be followed where they differ from the list of March 24th. Although many other works were erected, no names appear to have been attached to them, those only being designated which occupied the most important points and were provided with guns and garrisons.

"The Hills map is indispensable in this connection. John Hills, formerly a British engineer, surveyed the city and island . . . as far as Thirty-fourth Street in 1782; and in 1785 made a careful map of the same, which John Lozier, Esq. presented to the Common Council in 1847 [now in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), frontis.]. . . In addition to giving all the streets, blocks, docks, and squares, Hills added all the works thrown up in an around the city during the Revolution, giving their exact location and shape. Part of the lines have a confused appearance, but they become clear on referring to the following memorandum on the map: 'All the works colored yellow were erected by the Forces of the United States in 1776. Those works colored Orange were erected by D<sup>o</sup> and repaired by the British Forces. Those works colored Green were erected by the British Forces during the War.'" (See also British Headquarters MS. Map, Pl. 50). A map of New York accompanies Mr. Johnston's work, in which Hills' "yellow" line has been followed, showing all the American forts. He explains that "by projecting the present streets over Hills' plan, it is possible to ascertain where they stood in the plan of our modern city."—Ibid., 84-85, foot-note.

Johnston also notes that Lossing gives a full list of the Revolutionary works in and around New York, differing in several particulars from Johnston's own list, which is based on Hills' map.—Ibid., 89, foot-note, citing Field Book of the Rev., II: 593. For other lists, see April 9 and May 2.

Regarding Thompson's Battery at Horne's Hook, erected by Colonel Drake's Westchester minute-men soon after Lee's arrival, Johnston makes the following note: "This work stood at the foot of East Eighty-eighth Street. . . . Some ten years after the war, Archibald Gracie occupied this site, and it became known as Gracie's Point. The writer of a city guide-book in 1807 [Dr. Samuel Mitchell], referring to Mr. Gracie, says: 'His superb house and gardens stand upon the very spot called Hornehook, upon which a fort erected by the Americans in 1776 stood till about the year 1794, when the present proprietor caused the remains of the military works to be levelled at great expense, and erected on their rocky base his present elegant mansion and appurtenances.'"—Ibid., 89, citing The Picture of New York. This fort is shown in one of the series of 54 fine drawings made by Archibald Robertson now owned by the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection. For location of fortifications built in the lower part of the island at this time, see also the Ratzen Map with MS. additions by Montresor, described on Pl. 42, Vol. I, and now in the Map Room of the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Congress orders that proper mechanics be employed to take the leads out of the windows of the city wall and the exchange; also, that an account to be kept of the weight of lead taken out of each building separately.—Jour. of the Com. of Safety, I: 384.

"Brigadier-General Baron De Woelcke, the Hon. Benjamin Fraolkin, and several other gentlemen" arrive in New York from Philadelphia.—N. Y. Merc., April 1, 1776. They left on April 3 for Albany on their way to Canada.—Ibid., April 8, 1776.

About 1,000 riflemen arrive from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 1, 1776.

Washington writes from his headquarters in Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Putnam that he has "detached Brigadier-General Heath with the whole body of riflemen and five battalions of the Continental army, by the way of Norwich in Connecticut, to New York." These, he believes, have arrived in New York. Six more battalions, under Gen. Sullivan, start this morning by the same route. The rest of the army will immediately follow in divisions. He directs Putnam to go to New York at once, and assume the command, "and immediately proceed in continuing to execute the plan proposed by Major-General Lee, for fortifying that city and securing the passes of the East and North Rivers."—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 500-1. See March 30.

On this day, Brig.-Gen. Heath, with Stark's, Webb's, Bond's, Patterson's, and Greton's regiments, numbering in all about 3,000 men, arrive at Turtle Bay. Here the troops disembarked, and marched into the city at noon. "The transports fell down to the city wharves, and landed the baggage, etc. Gen. Thompson and Lord Sterling, with some New York and New-Jersey troops, were in the city; and works were constructing, in and around the city on Long Island, and at Horne's Hook . . . The Asia, British man-of-war, then lay off in the harbour, with the Lady Gage, of 20 guns; but, on the arrival of the brigade, the Asia moved further down, just out of shot. Our General put a stop to the intercourse between the inhabitants and the ships, which had, until then, been kept up" (see April 8)—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 44; N. Y. Merc., April 1; Penn. Eve. Post, April 2, 1776; N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

On this, the day of Heath's arrival, William Thompson writes to the committee of safety: "A number of troops are arrived, and more are hourly expected, who must be quartered in the City; and as I understand that many of the inhabitants who have quitted the town have left part of their furniture in their houses, I must request that you will give such directions as you may judge best for securing the property of those people, whose houses are, or shall be, occupied as barracks for the troops."—4 Am. Arch., V: 1418.

During this week, part of Col. Drayton's battalion from Elizabeth Town and several companies from Connecticut also came to New York so that by April 1 there were about 8,000 men in the city under arms.—Penn. Jour., April 3, 1776. See April —. Gen. Sullivan arrived on April 10 (q. v.).

The New York committee of safety issues a notice, stating that "The Provincial Congress of this colony having empowered this Committee to contract for a number of Muskets (to be manufactured in this colony)," they are ready to receive proposals from any persons for making "good muskets, or the locks, barrels, or any other parts thereof," and request such persons "to be speedy in their proposals."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

"As the Ministerial Troops have evacuated Boston, taken 31

1776 shipping, & the place of their destination uncertain—And inas-Mar. much as there is some probability that New York may be their 31 object." Gen. Heath, from his headquarters at New York, "strongly recommends to the Officers of all ranks to exert themselves in preparing for the most vigorous defence, should the Enemy attempt a landing in this place."—Gen. John Glover Correspondence (MS.), in Columbia Univ. Library, p. 99. See April 16.

Apr. The "beautiful high ground which surrounded Col. Rutgers's seat near Corlaer's Hook" is used for the encampment of a brigade of patriots.—Autobiography, by John Trumbull (1841), 25. See PL. 62, Vol. I.

The following orders are issued from the "New York Head Quarters": "As the buildings in which the troops are barracked are very good, particular care must be taken to prevent their being damaged; and where there is furniture, it must be carefully preserved—Each Regiment in the City will, at retreat beating, mount piquet guards, consisting of a Captain, 2 Subalterns, 2 Sergeants, 2 Drums & Fifes & 50 Rank & File . . . ."

"The Regiments lately arrived in the City, from the Eastward, will do duty after this day, both on guard & fatigue

"His Excellency General Washington having some time since,
 . . . directed that the Field Officers wear in their hats red cockades, Captains yellow, & Subalterns green—The Officers will conform to this order, & all others are forbid wearing any of those colours."—Glover Corp. (MS.), 100.

Jun. Varick, Jr. writes to Capt. Richard Varick that the First Battalion "have founded a Breast Work round the Hospital & almost completed it—composed solely of Sod & Dirt—The Thickness of it about 10 Feet, & about 7 Feet high, with a Ditch of 12 Feet wide, & 7 deep, surrounding the whole.—This will afford a safe Retreat, from the Fire of small Arms.—I have had the Honor of writing at it 3 or 4 Days, since I enter'd the Fissiler CompY under the Command of Cap<sup>t</sup> Livingston.—The Fortification originates its Name from the Founders of it, to wit, the 1st Bat<sup>tn</sup>.
 —There is another Structure erected on what formerly was called Byard's Mount, but now is mostly term'd Bunkers Hill [near the present corner of Broadway and Grand St.] & which when finished will be a most complete Fort, and will command the whole City.—I fine [find], every Slip is, & every Avenue leading from the Water will be strongly fortified, to prevent our worst of enemies from landing; & possessing themselves of the City, if they should ever attempt it.—But the Number of Continental Troops that are to be station'd here, will I hope prove sufficient to deter them from such an Attempt. There are great Numbers daily arriving here, from all Quarters; and it is universally thought, we will in a short Space of Time, have an Army of 15,000 Men collected here for the Preservation of this City.—The People here do not seem now so apprehensive of the Soldiers landing, since the Account of the happy Fate of our Enemies evacuating the City Boston, . . .
 The News of this happy Event seem'd to inspire the Breasts of every Friend to America with new Hopes of Conquests & with greater Ardor to rescue this once flourishing Country from the Shackles & Oppressions of a British Parliament.—The Slips of War are the only Tools we now apprehend any great Danger from, since it is out of our Power to cope with those thundering Hell Hounds.
 There is some private Report that the ministerial Mercenaries are now fortifying Bedlow's Island, assisted by many Countrymen.— if this can be relied on I doubt but we will have a small Schirmish there soon."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 89-91.

There are about 8,000 men in New York under arms.—Penn.
Jour., April 3, 1776.

"Tuesday evening last [April 2] a number of our troops went and set fire to all the buildings on Bedlow's Island, where the men of war were entrenching and fortifying it for an asylum for the Tory Refugees, burnt and brought off all their entrenching tools, with a large number of white shirts and great coats, &c. likewise an abundance of poultry of all sorts; the Asia fired on our people, but not one man either killed or wounded.

"Same evening, a barge, full of men, supposed to be from the men of war, landed and endeavoured to set fire to the Air furnace, but they were timely discovered before much damage was done."—N. Y. Jour., April 4, 1776, citing the Const. Gaz.; N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Gov. Tryon was an eye witness, from his position on the board the "Dutchess of Gordon," which lay in North River, of "the burning of the hospital on Bedlow's Island by four hundred Rebels in Seven Pitagaus" (perigaus). He wrote an account of it to Lord Germain on April 6.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 675.

The provincial congress passes this resolution: "Whereas barracks are necessary for the troops now arrived and daily arriving in this city, and cannot be obtained without placing them in houses much to the injury of the inhabitants remaining in the city, as well as with great detriment to the service: And whereas it appears to the Committee of Safety that the hospital in this city is a proper situation for troops, and that a number of troops must necessarily be posted there for the defence of the works there and of the city in general. Therefore,

"Ordered, That the governors of the hospital be requested to give directions to have the hospital put in a proper state for the reception of troops."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 396. See also April 3. Later, "the house was occupied by British and Hessian soldiers, as barracks and occasionally as an Hospital."—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1820), 4. When the war was over, and affairs had begun to be a little settled, the New York legislature, as before (see March 24, 1772), appropriated money for the support of the hospital (see March 1, 1788).

Five battalions of the continental troops are reviewed by Gen.
 Heath on the Green near the "Liberty Pole."—Const. Gaz., April 3; N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Col. Miffilin, quartermaster-general of the American army, arrives from Cambridge.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.
 As it is thought imprudent to keep all the powder in any one place in the city, the provincial congress acts upon a suggestion which has been made to the committee of safety, that a second repository be prepared, and "that the upper part of Mr. Henry Cruger's sugar house will be a proper place for that purpose." It is ordered "That whoever has the present care and direction of the said sugar house be directed to place the utensils and materials therein in such proper or convenient places in the said sugar house as may allow the upper part thereof to be used as a magazine." Col. McDougall is authorized to execute the order. The building shall then "be used as a magazine, for such purposes as the commander-in-chief of the continental troops . . . shall at any time direct."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 396.

In order to prevent "the breaking out of fire in the city," it is ordered that "the chimneys must be kept clean. Particular care must be taken that the sweepers are not obstructed in a sweeping; and when the chimneys of any barrack are swept, the Officers in such barracks will give the sweeper a certificate of his having performed that service."—Glover Corp. (MS.), 100. This order was repeatedly renewed with emphasis after the British occupied the city.—See Feb. 24, 1777.

Wm. Leary, the town major, issues the following order: "As the army is considerably reinforced, by the troops lately arrived, the General returns his most sincere thanks to the officers and soldiers, of the city militia, of Colonels Remsen, Jay, and Lott's regiments, for their assiduity and vigilance in assisting in the fortifying the city."—N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

Maj.-Gen. Israel Putnam, who is on his way from Cambridge to New York with his brigade, lodges for the night at Kingsbridge.
 —N. Y. Packet, April 4; N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

About this time a vessel arrived from France with a large quantity of gun-powder.—Memoirs of Maj. Gen. Heath (1798), 44-45.

All those who "effected burning the buildings, defacing the works, & bringing off the entrenching tools, last night, on the Island, under the guns of the Asia Man of War" are formerly thanked by the general in command at New York.—Glover Corp.
 (MS.), 101.

Erasmus Williams has fitted up his house and garden, on the North River bank near Deane's distillery, "for the elegant accommodation of Gentlemen, and Ladies of reputation, and character
 . . . His advertisement states that, "as this town is now become the abiding-place of and through which many gentlemen pass, who do most undoubtedly meet with very great inconvenience in procuring suitable lodgings for themselves, on account of the great concourse of people now stationed in this city," and as his lodgings are "very spacious, and in a most healthy situation," he "hopes for future good encouragement."—Const. Gaz., May 22, 1776.

The committee of safety is informed by Col. Miffilin, the quartermaster-general, that "in the course of 8 or 10 days, at farthest, troops will arrive in this city, which, with those already here, will amount to 12,000 men." He requests "that proper houses may be immediately provided for the reception of those troops;" also "that houses in an airy part of the city may be immediately prepared for a general hospital, capable of containing 800 sick, and within a mile of the city, and houses in a proper situation, and about the same distance, to contain 400 convalescents; that a suitable house or houses, in the city, will be necessary for General Washington; that proper stables will be speedily wanted for one hundred horses, and sheds or proper places wherein to put wagons; that it will be necessary to fix on a house fit for a guard house, for a provost guard, and four other separate houses for main guards; that to prevent icebriety and neglect of duty among the soldiery it will be absolutely necessary to limit the number of innkeepers, dramshops and retailers of strong liquors in this city and its environs, and that the names of the persons licensed to retail, and a description of their respective places of residence in the city be delivered to him, to the end that none others, except one sutler to each regiment may be permitted."

Col. Millin mentions, further, that he has found in other places that "forestalling and engrossing" (of provisions, etc.) has been "very detrimental to the Continental troops," and sometimes "necessary to prevent the same by military force," and he requests the committee's advice as to what is proper to do.

The committee of safety orders "That the general committee of the city of New-York be requested to convene, without delay, and by an appointment of sub-committees for the purpose, or by such other methods as they shall think proper, to fix on so many houses for barracks for the reception of troops, as will contain (together with those now in the city) 12,000 men. That the said general committee be informed that the Provincial Congress, in the time of their last session have procured the dwelling-house, barn and stable where John Fowler did lately dwell, on the hill beyond Fresh Water, for hospitals, and that the said general committee be requested to fix on other proper houses for hospitals, so that the whole may be capable of containing 800 men; and also proper houses for 400 convalescents. That they be also requested to fix on stables to contain 100 horses belonging to the army."

It is also ordered that the general committee be requested to appoint sub-committees "to take the names of all innkeepers, and retailers of strong liquors in the city and its environs, with the description of the streets or places of their abode, distinguishing those who are licensed from those who are not, and to send such list of innkeepers and retailers of strong liquors to this Committee with all convenient speed."

The committee of safety is informed "that it is scarcely possible to provide empty houses, or barracks, for the reception of the troops already arrived in this city; that many of them are now so crowded in small rooms that it is not only inconvenient but dangerous to the health of the troops; that there is no probability of procuring barracks, or empty houses, for the troops speedily expected."

The committee is further informed "that there are at present very few, if any, students in the college in this city; that it is a strong edifice and finished in such a manner as to be very little injured by the reception of troops;" therefore, it is ordered "That the governors of the college in this city be requested to remove the college library, and every other matter in that building which might receive injury, and secure the same in such manner as they may think proper, and to have the edifice left only in a proper state for the reception of troops, within six days from this day, or as much sooner as will be convenient for the governors of the said college."—Jour. of the Com. of Safety; in Jour. of the Provin. Cong., I: 399-400.

A list was prepared, dated April 22, giving the names and addresses of persons who had "paid Duty of the Excise for 1776 to Evert Bancker." Accompanying this in the printed Calendar is a "List of Liquor Sellers in New York City." The originals of these documents are filed, with "Reports of the Military Committee" (XXV: 606 and 598, respectively), in the sec. of state's office, Albany; and have been printed in full in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 287-92; and Man. Com. Con. (1838), 556-64.

According to the second of these lists, there were 268 who retailed liquor in this year. Many were unlicensed. The following were "Opposite the green near the Bridewell": Mary Montagne, John Taylor, John Brandon, James Lenght, Jr., Edward Welsh, John Planton, and Patrick McQue.—Ibid., I: 288-89. Mary Montagne (or Montagne) was at the present Nos. 253-254 Broadway. See April 20, 1769. John Taylor was proprietor of the Glass House at "Newfoundland" in 1768 (May 9, q. v.), but had evidently removed, before 1776, to a site near the present City Hall Park. John C. Brannon was, in 1778, at the upper end of Chapel St., opposite the new "Brick Meeting." We have no other record of James Lenght, Jr. "Mr. Welsh," in 1769, was near Whitehall. John Planton is unknown, although his tavern stood, according to another list of tax-payers in this year, "near Liberty Pole." Patrick McQue (probably McHugh) is unknown. If Hamden Hall still existed as a tavern, and dispensed liquors, one of the above mentioned dealers was probably its proprietor.

The dealers at the "Head of the Broadway" were William Williams, Ereety Lafoy, Agnes Vanderhoper, Andrew Hopper, and William Lintworth. Of these, Andrew Hopper only was a licensed liquor-seller, and his name is the only one familiar to us. In 1772, Hopper had a smith's shop on the corner of Ann St. and Broadway, where the American Museum afterwards stood. Apparently he combined this business with that of a "vintner." In later years he was listed in the directories as a dry-goods merchant. Duer, in his reminiscences of the city in 1783, speaks of the little shop of Andrew Hopper.—Recollections of an Old New Yorker.

Washington writes from Cambridge to Richard Henry Lee: ". . . I am upon the point of setting out for New York, (by the way of Providence and Norwich). . . at present also, our troops are at different stages, on their march from hence to New York; nor is it possible for me, till I get there, as the Congress have annexed conditions to my sending the four battalions to Canada, to tell whether they can be spared or not, as I am unacquainted with the number of men, or strength of the works at that place. No time shall be lost in forwarding three battalions if there is a possibility of doing it with safety; as no person can be more sensible of the importance of securing Canada than I am. . . ."Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 13-14. Regarding his journey to New York, where he arrived on April 13 (q. v.), see ibid., IV: 17-19.

The following general orders are issued from head-quarters at New-York: "The Soldiers are strictly enjoined to retire to their Barracks and Quarters at Tattoo beating, and remain there until the Reveille is beat."

"Necessity obliges the General to desire the Inhabitants of the City to observe the same Rule, as no Person will be permitted to pass any Centry, after this Night, without the Countersign."

"The Inhabitants, where Business requires it, may know the Countersign, by applying to any of the Brigade Majors."—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Gen. Putnam, in New York, writes to the committee of safety that, while the continental congress imagines the new levies in this province "to be in great forwardness," he finds "that none of the four regiments to be raised in it are properly regimented and completed." He requests the committee to exert itself "to the utmost to accomplish this necessary service, and that the troops already raised be ordered to the city without delay."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 401.

Tryon writes to Lord George Germain: "The whole North Front of Fort George is dismantled and Merlons erected on the Faces of the Fort that look to the North and East Rivers. Also Merlons are constructed on the lower battery. I am told they [the rebels] purpose to intrench and fortify upon the Banks of the Narrows, that is on Staten and Loop Island, and every where else that they think they can obstruct the approach of the King's Fleets and Armies."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 673.

In another letter to Germain written on the same day, he sends "Gazettes and other Papers" which, he states, give "much information of the unabated vigor and desperate excesses with which the efforts of the enemy are carried on in Opposition to His Majesty's Government in most Parts of the Continent." He adds:

"The Streets in the City of New York are barricaded with Breast Works, and every head land and commanding Spot of ground in its Environs, are fortified, or to be fortified, with In-trenchments, Redoubts, and Batteries.

"General Putnam commands in New York about seven thousand men, and it is said will soon be joined by General Washington and five brigades."—Ibid., VIII: 674-75.

1776 "A Captain's Company from General Heath's Brigade, properly officered," is ordered to march "to Horn's Hook to relieve the two Regiments of Minute Men now at that station." Capt. Badlam is required "to examine the Fort at Horn's Hook, and make a return of what Artillery & ammunition is wanting for that fortress, & to order the two field pieces one there, into the City."—Glover Correspondence (MS.), 102.

"The treasurer of King's College receives a message from the committee of safety asking the governors of the college to prepare the building for the reception of troops. The students were accordingly scattered, the books, apparatus, etc. deposited in the city hall, and the college building converted into a military hospital. Many books, and almost all the apparatus, were thus lost; six or seven hundred volumes were recovered thirty years afterward, having been deposited in a room in St. Paul's chapel, where they had remained unknown to anyone except the sexton of the church. This action against the college was regarded as a blow at the crown, the college being considered as a "hotbed of Toryism."—Moore, Hist. Sketch of Col. College, 61-63. Until May 15, 1784, the college was closed to students.—Pine, King's College, 16.

7 Gen. Sullivan's brigade arrives from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

"A boat from the "Viper" goes ashore on Staten Island to get water. A party of riflemen attack her and take all hands prisoners. The riflemen return the fire from the man-of-war.—Penn. Eve. Post, April 9, 1776. Another account of this event explains that the king's ship "Savage" and the pilot-boat "James," on this Sunday morning, came in a thick fog to take in water at the watering-place on Staten Island. They each sent a boat on shore. Capt. Stevenson, hearing of this, prepared to attack them. The ship, being informed of the approach of the patriots, fired a signal gun for the boats to retreat, and this they attempted to do, "under a brisk and constant fire from the Savage, but being fired on by our men, and closely pursued, they left one of their cutters behind with thirteen men."—Ibid., April 13, 1776. Still another account of the skirmish is found in the N. Y. Packet, April 11. See also Major Fish's letter of April 9, in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., V, 202.

"The "Dutchess of Gordon" conveys Gov. Tryon down the River to the "Phoenix," which lies below the Narrows. On the way, he sees, "by the help of a Spy glass,—the enemy firing upon the Seamen that were landed for water at the watering place under cover of the Savage Sloop of War." Tryon gave an account of this in his letter to Germain on April 15. "All Communication between the Ships and the Shore," he states, "is now cut off. Even the Element of Water is denied us, which cannot probably henceforth be procured but under the fire of his Majesty's Ships."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 675-76, 677.

8 Major-Gen. Israel Putnam, commander-in-chief of the forces at New York, notifies the inhabitants "that it is become absolutely necessary, that all communication between the Ministerial fleet and shore, should be immediately stopped." He has given orders that "the ships should no longer be furnished with provisions." Persons who go on board after this date, or are found near any of the ships, "will be considered as enemies, and treated accordingly." The order announces that "All boats are to sail from Beckman's Slip; Capt. James Alner is appointed Inspector, and will give permits for oystermen: It is expected and ordered, that none attempt going without a pass."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776. The notice is published as a broadside proclamation.—See one of these in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Cf. Smith's diary under this date, where the statement is made that Putnam's order made impossible a meeting of the governor's council that had been called for the 11th. "The Ships quitted the Harbour," he adds, "& fell down below the Narrows" (see June 6).—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V, See March 29.

"Monday night [April 8] 1000 of the Continental troops stationed here, went over and took possession of the Governor's Island, and began to fortify it; the same night a regiment went over to Red Hook, and fortified that place likewise."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776; Penn. Eve. Post (Phila.), Apr. 13, 1776.

9 On or about this day (see April 17), the following secret intelligence was sent from New York, presumably to the British War Office, describing the defences erected by the American patriots in and around the city. The document is without date, and bears the endorsement, "State of the Fortifications at New York &c<sup>d</sup> No 11."

"The above where the Letter E stands are Batteries with Guns mounted as stands in the Columns. The Letter S is Breast Works for small Arms only. That Breast work on the Hill by the Jews Burying Ground will contain near 400 Men, it is made in an Angular form, with a large Trench all round; The Entrance into it on the back part facing Mr John's House on the Hill going to Corleys Hook. The Breast work around the New Hospital is in Squares with a Trench all round, 10 feet wide at the Top, and at Bottom one foot and half, this Breast Work will contain about 300 Men, and as they intend to line the Hospital with Men to fit over the Breast Works I know not how many Men it will contain.

"There is one thing I shall remark that their Embrazures are so narrow and confined, that should any ship pass, there is no one Gun can bear more than once to do any Damage to any Ship. That Battery on Long Island is so narrow and confined that it will not contain above 300 Men.

"I need not give the Names of the Streets in the Town that is Blockaded, as every Street facing both North and East Rivers has wooden Trunks made across 10 feet thick filled with Earth, in Order to intercept any Troops that may attempt landing. I cannot see any Cover for the Rear, only Mr Byrads Hill, it will contain near 300 Men, One Gun points across to Greenwich and one over Mr Delancy's House, Two directly up the Road to Kings Bridge, and four Guns over the Town, but I never saw any Works worse plac'd on such a Spot of Advantageous Ground. The Numbers placed in the Total Column has not yet their Guns placed, but are to mount the Number as above Marked. In the Total Column, the half moon Battery on Black Sams Hill will contain about 400 Men; This Battery is Open on the Side next to the New Hospital as the Hospital Covers it.

"The Cock Pitt Battery behind Mr Harris's Brew House will contain about 250 Men. The Battery behind the Governors House, it may contain about 200 Men or more. The Battery at the Ship Yards may contain 500 Men; they have began a Redout about a quarter of a Mile behind the Battery on Long Island, which appears to be pretty large, but as they have not done any work at it for this two Days, I imagine they are going to alter the Plan of it. As to Fort George, they have pulled down all the Square, fronting Broadway and the Embrazures on the Ramparts not finished I shall leave that 'til another opportunity."—From transcript, in Library of Congress (box 43, pp. 339-40), from Public Record

9 Gen. Putnam issues an order from head-quarters, stating that, "As the city records are of the greatest consequence, and it being necessary that particular attention should be paid for their preservation, the General desires the first city battalion of Independents, commanded by Colo. Lasher, will undertake this guard."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 402. Another order of the same date reads: "The party this day sent on Governor's Island must send for provisions &c, as they will not be relieved till tomorrow morning. The Ferry Boats plying between New York, Powles' Hook & Long Island, are to pass unmolested from their usual places."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 103.

A printed handbill, signed by Joseph Winter, secretary of the general committee, is distributed from the committee chamber; it contains a transcript from its minutes citing the order of "the late Provincial Congress of the colony of New-York," on March 12, for a new election of deputies to represent the province in the provincial congress, and appointing April 16 for the voters to meet at the city hall, to elect by ballot 21 such deputies to serve 12 months from the second Tuesday in May.—From original handbill, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

11 Maj. Nicholas Fish writes to Richard Varick: ". . . picture to yourself the once flourishing City evacuated by most of its Members, (especially the fair). Business of every kind stagnated—all its Streets that lead from the North & East Rivers blockaded, and nothing but military operations our Current Employment." The rebuild around the hospital, which was completed on April 2, is considered "the best work of the kind in the City." The hospital "is made an Arsenal for Provisions." On "Bayard's Mount, now called Montgomerie Mount, as a Monument to that great Heroe, . . . there will be a Fortification superior in Strength to any my Imagination could ever have conceived. Several hundred Men have been daily employed there for upwards of four Weeks. The Parapet of the old Battery is raised to a proper Height, with a sufficient number of Ambersures—as also the Parapet on the Fort Wall. There are two fortifications on Long Island opposite this City to command the Shipping, one on Gow's Island, one at red Hook, and the City itself and Suburbs filled with them. . . . We have Gen's Putnam, Sullivan, Heath, Thompson, & L<sup>d</sup> Sterling among us, with I believe about 14 Thousand Troops; fresh arrivals from Cambridge Daily. And Washington hourly expected with many more. . . . Our Com<sup>y</sup> now Guards the Records of the Province which are removed to Mr N. Bayards Farm."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., V: 203.

10 Twenty-three transports arrive "from the Eastward" having on board the brigade commanded by Gen. Sullivan (see Mar. 29).—Penn. Eve. Post, April 11, 1776. Gen. Sullivan's command numbers six regiments.—Ibid., April 13, 1776.

Peter Elting writes to Capt. Richard Varick: "This day came to town five or six Battalions of Cont troops from Boston, I Recon the Army in & about the town must now Consist of near twelve thousand men, they are fortifying on every side, night before last they begun at Noten [Governors] Island, I hear they are Busy at Staten Island, & the Asia is moved down as low as Robens Reef, the menwarr have allowed No Boats to pass of late, tho I think they Dont feel Quite so bold as heretofore, and would be glad of moving out of the way of our two & thirty pounders. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X, part 2, 110, citing Tomlinson MSS., Mercantile Lib.

11 Alexander Scammell writes to his brother, Dr. Scammell: "After a very fatiguing and merry march, we arrived at New York, the tenth of April. A very elegant City. But deserted by the Tories. . . . Our men are billeted in very elegant Houses. . . . I expect to set out for Canada, with Gen. Sullivan and six Regts. under his Command. . . . we have got our works in great Forwardness here and a fine train of Artillery. New York will soon be rendered almost impregnable."—From autograph letter, sold in the Jolliffe sale (Part V) at the Anderson Galleries, New York, April 23 and 29, 1915.

Col. Rudolph Ritzema writes to Capt. Richard Varick: ". . . General Washington is expected here to Morrow, . . . The Fortifications are nearly completed & I doubt not the Enemy if they intend coming here will meet with a warm Reception."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X, part 2, 111.

"The famous or rather infamous Joshua Barns, from Philipsburgh in West-Chester county, has lately been very busy in instituting men for Gov. Tryon's service, who were to be called the Governor's Life Guards."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

"After this day Head Quarters will be opened at Colo<sup>d</sup> Morris' House, near Fort George, till the arrival of General Washington."—Glover's Corresp. (MS.), 105.

A case of small-pox having broken out, the committee of safety suggests that "the island with the buildings thereon, commonly called Little Barn island, belongig to Mr. Montresor," be used for the isolation of such cases. It orders "That Doctor Malachi Treat, and such other person or persons as he shall employ . . . to attend the sick sent to the said island, be hereby authorized and empowered to set apart and make use of such parts of the house and other buildings on the said island, as he or they shall think most proper and best calculated for the reception of all such persons as now are or shall be seized with the small pox."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 401.

12 ". . . New York is deserted by its old inhabitants, and filled with soldiers from New-England, Philadelphia, and Jersey. . . . They have been employed in erecting fortifications, in every part of the town; and it would make you sorry to see the place so changed: the old fort walls, are demolished in part, although that is an advantage to the Broadway. There is a Battery carried across the street, erected partly at Lord Abingdon's expense, for the Fascines were cut out of the wood that belonged to the Warren estate: it was a beautiful wood—Oliver De Lancey had been nursing it these forty years; it looks in a piteous state now. . . . You remember Bayard's Mount, covered with cedars; it commanded a prospect exceedingly extensive! The top of it is so cut away, that there is room enough for a house and garden; a fortification there erected, as well as round the Hospital—in short, every place that can be employed in that way, is or will be, so used. You may recollect a sweet situation at Horn's Hook, that Jacob Walton purchased, built an elegant house, and greatly and beautifully improved the place; he was obliged to quit the place; the troops took possession, and fortified there. Oh, the houses in New York, if you could but see the insides of them! Kennedy's house, Mallet's, and the next to it, had six hundred men in them. . . . The merchants have raised their goods to an enormous price; many articles are scarce indeed. . . . Common rum, 6 to 7 shillings per gallon; poor sugar, 4 a hundred; molasses none; cotton 48 per lb."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X, part 2, 111.

13 Lossing states that Washington occupied, as his headquarters, a house at 180 Pearl St., until summoned to Philadelphia by congress near the end of May; and that on his return [June 6, q. v.] he went to the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, where he remained until the British entered the city on Sept. 15.—Pictorial Field-Book of the Rev., II: 594. See, however, reference to the Kennedy house under April 12; also items of April 17, and May 19 and 22. Mrs. Lamb says he went to the Mortier house on this day, and that Mrs. Washington joined him there on her arrival, April 17 (q. v.).—Hist. City of N. Y., II: 70. Washington's headquarters were in front of the "Oyster Battery" on May 22 (q. v.); he was at the Mortier house on June 20 (q. v.); and went to the Kennedy house on July 20 (q. v.).

Rev. Charles Inglis, the assistant rector of Trinity Church, in a review of events written on Oct. 31 of this year (q. v.), states: "Soon after Washington's arrival, he attended our church; but on the Sunday morning, before divine service began, one of the rebel generals called at the rector's house (supposing the latter was in town), and, not finding him, left word that he came to inform the rector that 'General Washington would be at Church, and would be glad if the violent prayers for the King and royal family were omitted.' This message was brought to me, and as you may suppose I paid no regard to it.

1776 "On seeing that general not long after, I remonstrated against Apr. the unreasonableness of his request, which he must know the clergy could not comply with, and told him further, that it was in his power to shut up our churches, but by no means in his power to make 'the clergy depart from their duty.' This declaration drew from him an awkward apology for his conduct, which I believe was not authorized by Washington . . ."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 641.

13 The "Asia" goes to Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776. Adj.-Gen. Horatio Gates issues the following order from headquarters at New York: "Whereas the Asia having quitted her station, and left the harbour, the navigation between this city and New-Jersey, by the Kills, is become quite safe; the troops upon Staten-Island and Bergen Neck, are to let all boats coming to New-York, or returning to Jersey, to pass and repass without molestation."—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776. See also De Voe, Market Book, 119.

"The following order is issued from the New York headquarters: "All persons infected with the Small-pox are to be immediately removed to a secure place to be provided for by the Quarter Master General, who will consult the magistrates of this city thereupon. A proper guard, composed of men who have had the disorder to be fixed at this Hospital, to prevent any intercourse but such as the manager shall licence."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 105-6.

15 "We hear his Majesty's Ships Phoenix, Savage and Nautilus now at this Station, will fall down to Sandy Hook this Day or Tomorrow."—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

"Washington writes to the president of congress that he arrived in New York "on Saturday last" (April 13, q.v.). All the British ships of war have left the harbour, "some of which including the "Asia" are now below the Narrows, and the rest gone to sea." He finds "many works of defence begun, and some finished," and he reports on the disposition of the troops.—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 17-19; Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 45.

16 "A Poll" is opened at the city hall "for the Election of Twenty-one Deputies, to represent this City and Country in the next Provincial Congress." It was continued by adjournment till April 18, when the following persons were elected for that purpose:

Abraham Brassier,	Henry Remsen,
Jacobus van Zandt,	Comfort Sands,
John van Cortlandt,	John Jay,

"The Engineers & Overseers of the Works" are ordered "to use every possible dispatch in completing them," as the British troops may soon arrive at New York.—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 107.

17 The following order is issued from headquarters at New-York: "The General being informed that many of the houses taken up for barracks are much abused by the soldiers, which is a grievance which might be prevented by the officers paying a proper attention to their duty, and more carefully observing the conduct and behaviour of their men, the Barrackmaster is therefore ordered to place a proper proportion of officers in the same houses with the soldiers, who are to be answerable for any mischief done, to prevent any wood being cut upon the floors, or any water or filth thrown out of the windows, as all damages wantonly committed must be paid for out of the pay of the men quartered in the house where such damage is done. The offenders must also expect to suffer a severe corporal punishment for any breach of these orders.

"The officers are moreover expressly ordered to see that the men's barracks are kept clean; and the General again urges the necessity of the same cleanliness being observed in the person of the soldiers.

"The Colonels and commanding officers of Regiments are to exert their utmost endeavours to complete their companies to the establishment."—4 Am. Arch., V: 987; Glover Corresp. (MS.), 107. On April 30, Washington repeated the order that the officers and soldiers were not to injure the buildings they occupied, requiring "All Damages wantonly done to the Houses, where the Troops are quartered, to be paid for by the Troops quarter'd in them."—Apr. Orderly Book, cited in Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 57; 4 Am. Arch., V: 1152. See also Sept. 22, 1776.

"The "Lady of his Excellency General Washington" arrives in New York from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 22, 1776. She occupies the Mortier house (later known as Richmond Hill).—See April 13, Brig.-Gen. Green's brigade arrives from Cambridge by way of New London.—Ibid. A part of Spencer's brigade arrives also.—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 45.

Washington writes to the committee of safety urging that communication be no longer kept up between the inhabitants of the colony and the enemy's ships of war (see April 8), and gives his reasons.—Writings of Geo. Washington, (Ford ed.), IV: 21-25, 56. On the next day, the committee forbade such intercourse.—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1776. See April 29.

"The following "Secret Intelligence," regarding recent preparations to defend New York, is sent from this city, presumably to the British War Office. The document bears this date, and is the second anonymous one of the kind, the first, as here stated, having been sent on April 9 (q.v.):

"Since my last of April 9th I have endeavour'd to collect the number of the Brigade which arrived from Boston the 9th and 10th Instant commanded by one Sullivan, which is Six Regiments, about 550 Men in each Regiment, and on the 11th instant the following brass field pieces arrived here from Cambridge, Four 6 Pounders, two of which are the King's, Four 3 D<sup>o</sup> and Two 4 D<sup>o</sup>, Total Ten. Eight 6 Pound<sup>rs</sup> belonging to New York, which were cast at the Forge on Greenwich Road—those Six belonging to New York are joined in a Park with the King's, by the Liberty Pole. The total in all Eighteen.

"From Philadelphia the 12th inst<sup>l</sup> arrived here 40 Artillery Men—M<sup>r</sup> Washington arrived here the 13th as a private Gentleman the 14th and 15th arrived from Boston 120 Men and from the best Accounts I can get from there, they left in Boston Six Regiments which may be near 3060 Men; and they are the whole of Washington's Troops left in or near Boston. But if any attempt should be made by the King's Troops there, they wholly depend on the Assistance of the County Militia.

"The two Privateers fitted out here has not met with such good success as they expected, they cannot get Men to man them as yet—One that carries Six 4 Pounders is to have 40 Men, and the other that carries Four 4 Pounders is to have 30 or 35 Men.

"They have now mounted on Fort George Seven Guns 32 and 12 Pounders; and on the lower Battery under Fort George have mounted Ten 32 Pounders—the Embrasures on this last Battery, are not as yet finished. They have three 32 Pounders mounted on the Cock pit Battery, behind M<sup>r</sup> Harrison's Brew-house near the Forge.—There is no alteration in the rest of the Batteries since the Account given the 9th April, only the redoubt on Long Island is entirely left off, which was all the care they had for their rear, they have made one small Breast Work between the Ferry and the Battery on the Bank, forty paces round and open in the rear. The works on Governors Island and red Hook, they are now working at. I have not seen, but am made to understand, that on the Governor's Island is to have [sic] Four Guns, the works are about 400 Yards round—Red bank is to mount Three Guns. I am informed they are throwing up some works on each side of the Narrows, but cannot affirm it for a certainty.

"I can say no more at present, but will do everything in my power to serve his Majesty's Arms. I am &c<sup>a</sup>

"NB. Since I wrote the fore part of the above, two Brigs and three Sloops, are come down the Sound, with the remaining part of Washington's Army about 300 Men. It is a great pity that some method cannot be taken to stop the communication down the Sound to the Town; as it would certainly prevent the Rebels from receiving any supplies but by Land.

"NB. This Letter is from a Man whose Information has proved he may be depended upon. N<sup>o</sup> 1 is from the same person.

and county of New York.—N. Y. Merc., April 22, 1776. See Jan. 17.

Lieut. Isaac Bangs, a physician who served in the Revolutionary army, comes to New York with the New England troops, and remains here until May 4. Some of the things he recorded in his journal during that time are these: (Apr. 17) "For about 10 Miles below New York the Passage between the Maiee & Long Island was very Narrow. On both sides many very elegant Country Seats, & at Hell Gate a handsome & well-constructed Fort lately built by our People. At Turtle Bay are 4 large & beautiful Stores made for the Use of the King's Stores & Ammunition, &c. From this Place the Yorkers took a very large Quantity of Bombs & Shot; but the Enemy had conveyed the Powder away before. Near this place are several elegant & beautiful Country Seats, Several evacuated by the Tories. I visited the Garden of one Gentleman in which was a Summer House which the Gardener shewed me in which were many curious Flowers, &c.; but the greatest Rarity was Orange, Lime, Pomgranet, & Citron Trees all Bearing Fruit. The Lemons were the largest & best that ever I saw, as also the Oranges, both sweet and sour. One Lime tree had 5 different Sorts of Fruit growing at once beside Blossoms . . ."

"19th I spent the greatest part of my Time in viewing the City, which I found vastly surpassing my Expectations. The City is nearly as populous as the Town of Boston; the Publick Edifices greater in number, yet not in general so grand & Magnificent as those of Boston . . . In the Town we found every street leading from the Water almost stoped with Breast Works built by Gen<sup>l</sup> Lee [see Feb. 29] on his arrival in this Town, to prevent the Enemy from landing to set fire to the Town. On the South west part of the Town, which is a Point between the two Rivers, is a very strong & costly Fort built by the Kings Troops & many masons men for the Protection of the City from the Enemy.

"On the outside of the Fort at the Edge of the wall was a Battery, erected at a vast Expence to the King, built of hewn stone, the outside about ten feet high, the inside filled up to form a plane that the Wall was not more than a foot and a half high. . . . From the above mentioned Fort a spacious street running east northerly in a right line, reached without the Town about 1 Mile. In this, near the Fort, is the Equestrian Statue of King George 3<sup>d</sup> [see Aug. 16, 1776], a Present from himself to this City. [I have since been informed it was bought by the subscription of the Gentlemen of this City]. The design was in imitation of one of the Roman Emperors on Horseback. The Man George is represented about  $\frac{1}{2}$  larger than a Natural Man; the Horse, in proportion, both nearly constructed of Lead gilt with Gold, raised on a Pedestal of white Marble, about 15 Feet high, enclosed with a very elegant Fence about 10 feet high, the 2 lower feet Stone, the remainder of open worked Iron; the inclosure was oval, containing about  $\frac{1}{4}$  of an acre of beautiful green. This, with several Churches and other Elegant buildings on either side of the spacious street, form a most beautiful prospect from the Fort. Opposite the Town on the south is the Town of Brooklinn on Long Island, at about 1 Mile distance. The Town of Brooklinn with the adjacent Hills, on which are several elegant Country Seats.

"[April] (20) I visited, and took a full view of the Waterworks [see March 4 and 11] that are making to convey Water through the City (that from the Pumps being very bad & unwholesome to that degree that the Inhabitants buy water for Coffee, &c. from Carts that are employed to carry it about the City). These Works were begun about 12 Months since at the City Expence, to defray which they issued Bills that are current as other Money. A Dutchman undertook the Jobb for a certain sum, & hath already performed the most difficult part of the Work, tho not with that success that was expected by the Citizens, as they say. He saith he hath done as well as he promised. The Work that is already done (the most difficult part) is to convey Water from the side of an Hill nigh a Pond to the top of the Hill, which being higher than any part of the City, the Water is to be conveyed in Pipes through the City. As the Man that attended spoke very broken English & the Machiene was not at Work, it was with great Difficulty that I understood the Construction of the Machiene; & to pretend to give a particular description of this Work would be folly in me, as I could by no means do it Justice. The first part of the Work was the Well, about 40 feet Diamiter, and to appearance about 30 feet to the surface of the Water. In this Well was the Engine, which forced the Water almost to the Top, & from thence through a Apr. 17 Wooden Tube up to the Top of the Hill, which was about 5 Rods distance and about . . . Feet perpendicular above the Top of the Well. At the Top of the Hill was an artificial Pond, whose superficies was about  $\frac{1}{4}$  of an Acre, and when filled, the Water would be about 8 or 10 Feet deep; from hence the Water was to be conveyed (as I before said) in Pipes through the City. All of this I could easily understand; but the grand Question was how was the Machiene in the Well first actuated & continued its motion? This I was surpris'd to find was wholly done by the Power of Boiling Water. . . .

"It was a long time before I could discover even by seeing the Works how this could be effected, & the Man who shewed the Works could give me no satisfaction as to this till at length I found that by Means of a large Copper (which is kept boiling when it is requisite for the Works to be set in Motion) the Steam or Vapour of the Water is conveyed from thence into a strong Copper Tube of about 18 Inches Diamiter & about 10 Feet Long, which stands perpendicularly. The lower part or end of this Tube is tight; but the upper End hath in it a moveable Stopper which may move upwards or Downwards with as much ease as possible, and at the same time to keep any of the Air from without entering into the Tube & to keep it as tight as possible another part of the Works constantly supply the Top of the Tube above the Stopper with a small stream of Water. The Steam of the Hot Water (as I take it) entering into the Tube rarifyeth the Body of the Air contained therein to a great degree, when the Stopper is let loose and flyeth upwards with great Rapidity to the upper End of the Tube, when the Pressure of the Air from without throweth [it] back to the Bottom of the Tube with as great Force as it came upwards, when it gets to the Bottom it is again drove upwards by the same cause, & repelled when it arrives at the Top; thus the Stopper is kept in constant Motion by the Means of Steam or Vapour, & to this Stopper is fastened a stout Wooden lever by a bar of Iron. The Lever is Fastened in the Middle upon an Axis; and as the Stopper of the Tube moves upwards and downwards, it moves the Lever, which worketh the Engine in the Well, which forceth (as I before described) the Water into the Pond at the Top of the Hill. The Engine hath been tried & generally throws . . . Gallons in a Minute into the Pond. Thus have I given as particular description of this curious Engine as I possibly could, having viewed it but about 15 Minutes. I hope soon to see it at Work, when I can give a more particular description of several small parts of it for which I could see no use . . . [Under date of June 21, Dr. Bangs mentions such an engine at the cedar swamp of a Mr. Schuyler in New Jersey, which cost  $$3,000$ , and would "cast out of the earth 80 hogheads of water per minute." These works, he said, "were greatly superior in magnificence to those in the city."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 306.]

"[May] 4. Took a survey of the City Goal, which the Goaler shewed us. The Prisoners here are as well treated as in any Prison I ever visited. The Goal itself is a very Magnificent Building (upon the North side of the Common), having more the appearance of an elegant Mansion House than of a Common Gail; the inside is regularly built, and is as convenient, both for the Prisoners & Jailer, as I can possibly imagine any could have been."—Jour. of Lieut. Isaac Bangs (Apr. 1 to July 29, 1776), ed. by Edward Bangs (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1890).

"Tryon writes to Lord Germain: "The general Assembly of this Province is now dissolved. The Council, by whose advice it was prorogued to the 17th Instant not having been permitted to wait on me agreeable to my Summons in Order to advise concerning the further prorogation of it. A strong evidence of the little attention that is now paid even towards preserving the Form of a legal and constitutional Representation of the people."

"The governor states that he has ordered a detail of men "to act as night guard at the Light House on Sandy Hook, to prevent the Seamen from insulins when watering at the well near the Light House. . . . The Pilot's house adjoining to the Light house is burnt down to prevent its being made a lurking place to the enemy, three or four hundred of which appeared yesterday near the Isthmus of the Peninsula where the Light house stands."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 677.

" . . . a considerable number of troops have arrived here from New-England. As great numbers of the inhabitants have moved into the country, many of their houses are taken up for the soldiers. The behaviour of the New-England Soldiers is decent,

1776 and their civility to the inhabitants very commendable: They attend prayers, with the Chaplain, evening and morning regularly, in which their officers set the example. On Lord's day they attend public worship twice, and their department in the house of God, is such as becomes the place.—N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

“ Though the season is so far advanced, yet the number of troops that have lately arrived, and the uncommon severity of the weather, have occasioned such a demand for fuel, that oak wood sells for 30s. per cord, and nut for 40s.—N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

19 Gov. Tryon, sends a letter from the “Dutchess of Gordon,” which is at Sandy Hook, to Mayor Mathews, stating that, it has been found “expedient for his Majesty's service, to burn down the Pilot-house at the Hook,” but that care has been taken of Adam Dobbs, the keeper, and his property. He states that if the mayor “will send down a sloop to the Hook, it will be suffered to bring up to New-York, Mr. Dobbs, his servants and effects.”—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), May 1, 1776.

“ The common council orders that John Moore be paid £118:5:1 “in full for the Balance of his Account for Work done at the Bridewell &c.”—M. C. C., VIII: 136. After the war, Moore declared that his account had not been settled (see Jan. 10, 1785).

“ The common council authorizes the payment of £13:13:9 to Christopher Colles, “on Account of the Water Works.”—M. C. C., VIII: 136. This was to pay for the labour of men at the water works from March 15 to April 18, as shown by three accounts submitted by Colles, each inscribed: “The above account kept p [per] me Chris. Colles.”—From the original vouchers in box 1, comptroller's office. See May 24.

“ Henry Brevoort is paid £20 for “Iron Monger's Ware sold to this Corporation.” His account includes references to the city hall, workhouse, the house at Bedlows Island, the house in Chatham St., the goal, the lower barracks, ferry house, Fly Market, the house of Milldollar, and the sentry boxes at the Battery.—Original voucher in box 1, comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 136.

20 Washington proposes “to establish out of the Continental Forces, good lookouts on the Heights and Head Lands at the Entrance of the Harbor, who, upon the appearance of a Fleet shall make such signals as being answered from place to place shall convey the earliest intelligence to Head Quarters of the strength and approach of the Enemy.”—These signals for greater Certainty to be followed by Expresses,” etc.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 33.

“ Col. Rufus Putnam, Washington's chief engineer in 1776, states in his memoirs: “On my arrival at New York, I was charged as chief engineer with laying out and overseeing the works which were erected during the campaign at New York, Long Island and their dependencies with Fort Washington, Fort Lee, King's Bridge, etc., most of which, but not all, appear in a plan of New York island etc., and obstructions in the river, which accompanies Marshall's Life of Washington.” He says that his “whole time was taken up from daylight . . . until night . . . besides going in the night by water from New York to Fort Washington.”—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 136, citing the original in the archives of Marietta College, Ohio.

22 A list of persons, with their addresses, “who have paid Duty of Excise for 1776 to Evert Bancker” bears this date. It is printed in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 287, followed by a “List of Liquor Sellers in New York City,” with their addresses (ibid., 287-92). See also April 4.

25 The following order also is issued: “Complaints having been made to the General, of injuries done to the farmers, in their crops and fields, by the soldiers passing over and trampling upon the young growth, in a wanton and disorderly manner, he expressly orders the officers commanding, either upon duty or in quarters, in the country, to take especial care to put a stop to such practices, and endeavour to convince their men that we come to protect, not to injure the property of any man.”—4 Am. Archives, V: 1071.

The following letter, from Abraham van Dyck, commander of the “Grenadier Company,” is sent to Lord Stirling, “after completing the Grenadier Battery:” “The Circular Battery which the Grenadiers under my Command, have for some Time past been employed about, is now compleated, and I am requested to acquaint ymar Lordship therewith . . . Stirling replied to this with complimentary sentiments on the 29th, referring to it as “to the North-West of this City.”—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1776; Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 55; Glover Corresp., 112-13. See April 29.

“ The general in command at New York (Washington) condemns the “riotous behaviour of some of the soldiers of the Continental army, yesterday & the evening before,” and issues a warning that hereafter the “authors” of similar actions “will be brought to the severest punishment.”—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 111.

“ Jane Wiedenburg, writing to Capt. Richard Varick, states: “our City in A Short time Will be Very Well Fortified the Streets are so Blucked up there is hardly any Passing They are Erecting A Fort on the Governors Island, they Have A Very fine one they Say on Long Island & several in town I hope they May Be of Service to us if Occasion Requires.”—Hist. Mag. (1869), 2d ser., V: 106.

“ Enclosed in a communication from Gov. Tryon to Lord Germain, is “An Account of various Fortifications at N. Y., with 3 plans—The form of the Fortifications on Long Island for 13 Guns, “Plan of the Breast work inclosing the Hospital,” & plan of work which lies about 1800 feet from the East River not far from Brookland ferry.”—Stevens, Cat. Index of MSS., 1765-1783, in Library of Congress, citing the original in the Public Record Office, CLXXXVI: 685.

“ Dr. Isaac Bangs records in his diary: “. . . I tried the Church of England in the afternoon. But the satisfaction I received from the substance of an excellent sermon was greatly abated by the pedantic behaviour of the priest, the irreverent conduct of the people and the foolish parade of ceremonies. I am determined next Sunday . . . to attend worship with the Dutch priest, whom I heard last week, choosing rather to worship where I understand nothing, than to hear and see such folly.”—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 306.

29 The troops in New York are formed anew into four brigades, and assigned to their respective camps. “Heath's first brigade was posted on the Hudson, just without the city above the Canal Street marsh and about Richmond Hill; Spencer's second, on the East River, around the Rutgers' farm and Jones' Hill; and Stirling's fourth, in the centre, near Bayard's Hill and the Bowery Road; while Greene's third brigade was assigned to ‘the ground marked out upon Long Island.’”—Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, by Henry P. Johnston (1878), 63-64.

“ Washington writes to John Augustine Washington: “We have already gone great lengths [see April 27] in fortifying this city and the Hudson River. A fortnight more will put us in a very respectable posture of defence. The works we have already constructed, and which they found we were about to erect, have put the King's ships to flight; for, instead of lying within pistol-shot of the wharves, and their sentries conversing with ours, (whilst they received every necessary that the country afforded,) they have now gone down to the Hook, near thirty miles from this place, the last harbor they can get to . . .”—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 56; Glover Corresp. (MS.), 112-13.

“ In a published order, Washington states that “an Intercourse and Correspondence with the Ships of War, and other Vessels belonging to, and in the Service of the King of Great-Britain [see Apr. 17], is highly detrimental to the Rights and Liberties” of “the United Colonies,” and that such intercourse was forbidden by order of the committee of safety on April 18; but, nevertheless, “there is Reason to believe that sundry base and wicked Persons, preferring their own present private Emolument to their Country's Weal, have continued to carry on the same, particularly some who under Pretence of coming to the Market of this City by Water, have put themselves, their Vessels and Effects in the Way of the Ships of War, for the Purposes of giving Intelligence and furnishing them with Supplies or Provision.” He therefore orders that if in future anyone carries on such intercourse, “or any Kind of Correspondence whatsoever, or furnish and supply the said Ships of War, and other Vessels in such Service, with Provisions and Necessaries of any Kind, that he or they so offending will be deemed and con-

- May Gen. Washington, writing from New York to Gen. Lee, says, in part: "We have done a great deal of work at this place. In a fortnight more, I think the city will be in a very respectable posture of defence. Governour's Island has a large and strong work erected, and a regiment encamped there. The point below, called Red Hook, has a small, but exceedingly strong barrette battery; and several new works are constructed, and many of them almost executed at other places."—5 Am. Arch., I: 97.
- 1 The ferry to Paulus (Paulus) Hook, of which Abraham Mesier is ferry-man (see May 1, 1774), is abandoned.—M. C. C. (MS.), VIII: 243. It was not resumed until after the Revolution.—See Nov. 26, 1783.
- " Cornelius Bradford announces that he has engaged the Merchant's Coffee House, where he intends collecting "interesting intelligence," and will note the arrival of all vessels, and endeavour to carry all the public papers, as well as supplies of all kinds of liquors, etc.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776. This coffee-house was first opened by Mary Farrara in 1772 (April 27, q.v.). Bradford changed its name to the New York Coffee House.
- " Dr. Isaac Bangs records in his diary: ". . . took a survey of the furnace . . . In this furnace have been cast many excellent brass field-pieces (six pounders), besides iron caanon equal to any ever made in any part of the world."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 306.
- 2 The first, second, and fourth brigades are ordered to encamp on May 3 on the ground laid out for them (see April 25).—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 114. On May 4, it was chronicled: "The weather proving wet & cold, the Regiments that did not encamp yesterday are to remain in their present quarters until Monday morning."—Ibid., 115.
- 4 Ensign Caleb Clap, of Col. Baldwin's regiment, of Mass., records in his diary a picturesque description of ceremonies in the Jews' Synagogue and the Lutheran Church.—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 134.
- 5 The following order is issued from headquarters at New York: "The Officers commanding in or near the encampment are to be particularly attentive to prevent waste or depredation being committed upon the fields, fences, trees or buildings about the Camp-Turf is not permitted to be cut, unless by the express order of the Chief Engineer . . . The Quarter Master General will supply a quantity of boards for flooring the tents of every Regiment, which are upon no account to be converted to any other use."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 115-16.
- 8 "All the American regiments at New-York were ordered to hold themselves in readiness, to march at a moment's notice. Several soldiers were taken down with the small-pox, and some of them died."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 46.
- " Mrs. Eve Provost, of New York, writes an appealing letter to the committee of safety in behalf of her son, David Provost, "a passenger on board the Brig<sup>e</sup> Amazon lately taken by the Men of war at the Hook," and who "is detained a Prisoner on Board the Asia Man of War." She asks the committee to use its influence with Gen. Washington "to Permit some Person to go on Board of the Asia in order to treat about my dear son's Releasement, as it is peculiarly hard upon him who had nothing to do with the Vessel or Cargo to be detained a prisoner almost at my own Door." The letter is endorsed: "We can't take the Asia yet."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. (Rev. Papers), I: 301.

- 10 The provincial congress orders "That every male inhabitant of the city and county of New-York, above the age of sixteen years, and under the age of fifty years, who has withdrawn himself from the same since the first day of June last past, be required, and he is hereby required, to return without delay with his arms and accoutrements, and that every male inhabitant between the said several ages be henceforth prohibited, and is hereby prohibited, from departing this city and county, and absconding himself from the same for more than twenty-four hours, without leave of the Colonel, or commanding officer of the battalion or regiment to which he belongs; and that the committees in the neighbouring counties and Colonies into whose district such inhabitant of this city and county have so withdrawn themselves, be, and they are hereby requested, to take effectual means to compel the said inhabitants who have so withdrawn themselves to return to their usual places of abode in the said city and County."—Jour. of the Provin. Cong., I: 458. For exemptions from this draft order, see June 15.
- 11 William Smith writes from New York to Gen. Howe in Boston: "As I have not a doubt of my last letters to administration convincing them that this city and province is the only spot in America for carrying on the war with effect against the rebels, and that in consequence the forces expected this spring as well as those now under your command, will be ordered thither: It may be necessary and advisable to send the army thro' the Sound, between Connecticut and Long-Island . . . The [Long] Island has a plain on it, at least 20 miles long, which has a fertile country about it, is 20 miles from the city of New-York; Connecticut opposite to it; New-Jersey about 30 miles distant; Philadelphia 110; Maryland 130; Rhode-Island 150: so that in this fertile island the army can subsist without any succour from Britain or Ireland and in 5 or 6 days invade and reduce any of the above colonies at pleasure. Add to these great advantages that the possession of the Narrows, and Nutton-Island would be the destruction of this city, but of this I think there would be no need, for all the principal inhabitants are at heart with the crown particularly all my brethren the members of the assembly but as the mob now commands prudence forbids them to declare without a military force. You have many with you who are acquainted with the navigation of the Sound. The spot which I advise you to land at is Cowbay."—Ind. Chron. (Boston), Sep. 26, 1776. Cow Bay was the modern Manhasset Bay.—See Simeon De Witt's map of N. Y. State, 1802.
- 12 The following order is issued from headquarters at New York: "The Carpenters, Boat-Builders, and Painters, who were selected for the publick service this morning by Major-General Putnam, are to parade to-morrow morning, at sunrise, in the street opposite to General Putnam's, where they will receive his orders."—4 *Am. - 15 A convention in Williamsburg, Va., with 112 delegates present, resolves unanimously "That the Delegates appointed to represent this colony in General Congress be instructed to propose to that respectable body to declare the United Colonies free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to, or dependence upon, the crown or parliament of Great Britain; and that they give the assent of this colony to such declaration, and to whatever measures may be thought proper and necessary by the Congress for forming foreign alliances, and a confederation of the colonies, at such time, and in the manner, as to them shall seem best; also "that a committee be appointed to prepare a Declaration of Rights, and such a plan of government as will be most likely to maintain peace and order in this colony, and secure substantial and equal liberty to the people."—From Jefferson's printed copy of the Proceedings of the Convention of Delegates (1776), p. 32 (preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library). Conn. Gaz. (New London), June 7, 1776. Richard Henry Lee, one of the delegates in congress from Virginia, presented such a resolution on June 7 (q.v.). A correspondent from Williamsburg to the N. Y. Journal, of June 6, declared that this resolution was "the result of most mature deliberation . . . It was followed in the afternoon by such military expressions of gladness and exultation, as the condition of our troops here would admit, and the evening was closed with illuminations, &c. The procuring of foreign assistance was the immediate object of this Resolution, as the alternative of separation or submission was the assigned ground of it. But a political connection on any terms, with a people who have exerted against us every species of barbarity and inault, would have had few advocates."—N. Y. Jour., June 6, 1776. See May 30.
- " Congress, which assembled in Philadelphia on the 12th, passes a resolution recommending "to the respective Assemblies and Conventions of the United Colonies, where no Government sufficient to the exigencies of their affairs has been hitherto established, to adopt such Government as shall, in the opinion of the Representatives of the People, best conduce to the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular and America in general." The preamble of this resolution anticipates the principles expressed later in the Declaration of Independence.—4 Am. Arch.

WHITE PLAINS, JULY, 9 1776.

IN CONVENTION BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK,
RESOLVED UNANIMOUSLY, That the Reasons assigned by the CONTINENTAL CONGRESS, for declaring the United Colonies FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATES, are cogent and conclusive, and that while we lament the cruel Necessity which has rendered this Measure unavoidable, we approve the same, and will at the Request of our People and Friends, join with the other Colonies in supporting it.
 ————
 JOHN WELLS, That a Copy of the said Declaration and the foregoing Resolutions be sent to the Chairman of the Committee of the County of WESTCHESTER, with Orders to publish the same with Beat of Drum, at this Place, on Thursday next, and to give Directions that it be published with all convenient Speed in the several Districts within the said County.—And that Copies thereof be forthwith transmitted to the other County Committees within the STATE of New-York, with Orders to cause the same to be published in the several Districts of their respective Counties.

ROBERT BENSON, Secretary.

IN CONGRESS, JULY 4, 1776.
A DECLARATION
 OF THE
REPRESENTATIVES
 OF THE
UNITED STATES
OF AMERICA,
 IN GENERAL CONGRESS ASSEMBLED.

WHEN in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Governments, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence forbids the transference of a power to another hands, unless the abuses which have produced the necessity, are such as to require it. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security. — Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former system of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his Assent to laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the Colonies.
 He has forbidden his Governors to pass laws of moderate and pressing importance, unless suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the Legislature, a right inalienable and inseparable from a free and a self-governing People.

He has raised together legislative bodies with powers of taxation, in violation of the Charter of the Colonies, and in disregard of the rights of the Colonies, and in violation of the rights of the Colonies.

He has refused to assent to laws for the relief of the Colonies, and to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the Legislature, a right inalienable and inseparable from a free and a self-governing People.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Migration of our People, and refusing to assist in the execution of the Laws for encouragement of our People, and for the enlargement of the Colonies, and for the relief of the Colonies, and to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the Legislature, a right inalienable and inseparable from a free and a self-governing People.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Acts for the establishment of Judiciary Powers.

He has affected to obstruct the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent
 to Acts for the establishment of Judiciary Powers.

He has affected to obstruct the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent
 to Acts for the establishment of Judiciary Powers.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies, without the Consent of our Legislature.

He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil Power.

He has endeavored to bring us under a yoke of Tyranny, by imposing Taxes on us, without our Consent.

29 "The General Committee of Mechanics in Union, of the city and county of New York," present an address, dated "Mechanick-Hall," May 29, to the representatives of this province in the provincial congress, stating that if these representatives "think proper to instruct our most honourable Delegates in Continental Congress, to use their utmost endeavours in that august assembly to cause these United Colonies to become independent of Great-Britain," it would give the mechanics "the highest satisfaction," and they "herely sincerely promise to endeavour to support the same with our lives and fortunes." The provincial congress replied, on June 4, that "the Continental Congress alone, have that enlarged view of our political circumstances, which will enable them to decide upon those measures which are necessary for the general welfare." They therefore cannot instruct the delegates to the continental congress, as desired in the address.—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1776. A second address was presented by the mechanics on June 14 (q.v.).
" Charles Lousley and Thomas Elms, of New York, paper makers, petition the provincial congress for exemption from military service, owing to the need of keeping their business in operation for the public good. They claim they have carried the art of paper-making "to higher degrees of perfection than ever it arrived before in America," adding that they "have been the means of increasing the number of Paper Mills, improving their construction, and moderating the price of paper." Their work, they say, is "being carried on at a great expence no less than 208 per day for rent and a number of hands who require constant oversight and direction . . ." " The vestry of the city and county of New York present a petition to the provincial congress for a loan of £5,000 to the city for the support of the poor. There are now about 400 poor in the almshouse and adjoining buildings. The most opulent of the inhabitants of the City "have retired to the Country." The poor include all classes of dependents.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 311; and see ibid., I: 465; Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 467. In response to this appeal the provincial congress passed a resolution, on June 8, "That the sum of £1500 be . . . lent to the Justices and Vestrymen of the City and County of New-York" for this purpose, "to be repaid at such time and in such manner as this or some future Congress or Legislature of this Colony shall direct."—*4 Am. " The provincial congress adopts the following resolutions: "Whereas the present government of this Colony by Congress and Committees, was instituted while the form of government under the Crown of Great Britain existed in full force, and was established for the sole purpose of opposing the usurpation of the British Parliament, and was intended to expire on a reconciliation with Great Britain, which it was then apprehended would soon take place, but is now considered as remote and uncertain.
" And whereas many and great inconveniences attend the said mode of government by Congress and Committees, as of necessity in many instances legislative, judicial and executive powers have been vested therein, especially since the dissolution of the former government by the abdication of the late Governor and the exclusion of this Colony from the protection of the King of Great Britain . . .
" And whereas doubts have arisen whether this Congress are invested with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine on so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of government and internal police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion and control whatever [see June 7] . . . Therefore
"Resolved, That it be recommended to the electors in the several counties in this Colony by election in the manner and form prescribed for the election of the present Congress, either to authorize . . . their present Deputies, or others in the stead . . . to take into consideration the necessity and propriety of instituting such new government as . . . is described and recommended. And if the majority of the counties by their Deputies in Provincial Congress, shall be of opinion that such new government ought to be instituted and established, then to institute and establish such a government as they shall deem best calculated to secure the rights, liberties and happiness of the good people of this Colony, and to continue in force until a future peace with Great Britain shall render the same unnecessary. 7 In the continental congress, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, introduces these resolutions:

"Resolved
"That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.

"That it is expedient forthwith to take the most effectual measures for forming foreign Alliances.

"That a plan of confederation be prepared and transmitted to the respective Colonies for their consideration and approbation."—From original in Lib. of Congress. See reproduction in Hazelton, Decl. of Independence: Its History, insert between pp. 108 and 109. These resolutions were in conformity with the instructions of the Virginia convention, of May 15 (q.v.), to her delegates. Committees were appointed by congress, to consider these matters, on June 10 (q.v.).

8 "The provincial congress passes a resolution "That the thanks of this Congress be presented to His Excellency Genl Washington, for the important services he has rendered to the United Colonies, and for the attention he has paid to the interest and civil authority of this Colony; and that he be assured of the readiness of this Congress to afford him all the aid in their power to enable him to execute the important trust reposed in him." The president of the congress waited on Gen. Washington the same day, communicated this resolution to him, and received the following reply addressed to the congress (which was entered in the journal on the 9th): "I am extremely obliged for the high sense you entertain of my services, and for your promises of every possible assistance in the discharge of my important duty. Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, replies to the letter of the New York provincial congress (see March 8). His delay in answering he attributes to the necessity of laying the matter before the state assembly, which body failed to act until the "sitting of this Assembly." He gives them assurance that the delay "was not from any disregard to your respectable body, nor for want of inclination to cultivate the utmost harmony between this and the Province you represent . . . Your candour in imputing the intrusion of a number of our people into your capital, (in the manner they did,) to an imprudent though well intended zeal for the public cause, gives me real pleasure; and can give you the strongest assurance that this Colony by no means approve their conduct, yet a severe censure at this time, . . . might be attended with such inconveniences as you will readily apprehend . . . and which, I dare say, will suggest to you at once a satisfactory excuse for our not taking such measures, as might have been expected, in times of peace and quiet; though in such happy seasons the proper resort for the private injury must have been to the courts of law, which are the only jurisdiction who can legally take notice of violences of this kind. . . . Though we by no means approve or justify the people of this Colony taking any part therein; but the same candour you have expressed in your letter, I presume will induce you to view the matter, so far as it respects this Colony or any of our people being concerned therein, in the still more favourable light, when you reflect that the head or leader of the whole transaction was a respectable member of your city and Congress, who we consider as the proper person to whom the whole transaction is imputable, and who belongs, and is amenable to your jurisdiction alone; and, therefore, the affair cannot be considered as an intrusion of our people into your Province, but as a violence or disorder happening among yourselves."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 491-92. When Rivington went to England, early in 1776 (Jan. 10, q. v.), the matter seems to have been dropped without further official action.

Instant, and to forward them with all Dispatch to the City of New-York; and that you direct that they March in Companies, or any other Way that will hasten their Arrival there. The important Day is at Hand that will decide not only the Fate of the City of New-York, but in all Probability of the whole Province. On such an Occasion there is no Necessity to use Arguments with Americans; their Feelings I well know will prompt them to their Duty, and the Sacredness of the Cause will urge them to the Field. The greatest Exertions of Vigour and Expedition are requisite to prevent our Enemies from getting Possession of that Town; I must therefore again most earnestly request you, in the Name, and by the Authority of Congress, to send forward the Militia, agreeable to the Requisition of Congress, and that you will do it with all the Dispatch which the Infinite Importance of the Cause demands."—*N. Similar riots occurred the next day, and Gens. Putnam and Mifflin complained to the provincial congress about them. The congress, therefore, passed the following resolution: "That this Congress by no means approve of the riots that have happened this day; they flatter themselves, however, that they have proceeded from a real regard to liberty and a detestation of those persons who by their language and conduct, have discovered themselves to be inimical to the cause of America. To urge the warm friends of liberty to decency and good order, this Congress assures the public that effectual measures shall be taken to secure the enemies of American liberty in this colony; and do require the good people of this city and colony to desist from all riots, and leave the offenders against so good a cause to be dealt with by the constitutional representatives of the colony."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 491.

In a letter to Capt. Richard Varick written on June 13, Peter Elting mentioned the riots and congress's resolution. He said that among the Tories carried through the streets were "Capt. [Theophilus] Hardenbrook, Mr. Rem. Rapelje, Mr. Queen the Poticary & Lessly the barber. There is hardly a toory face to be seen this morning."—N. Y. City during the Am. Revolution, 97. "The provincial congress of New York, in reply to a letter from the New York delegates in the continental congress, states that these delegates are not authorized by their instructions "to give the sense of this Colony on the question of declaring it to be, and continue, an independent State."—Am. Arch., VI: 814.

In connection with the resolution offered by Richard Henry Lee on June 7, the continental congress now appoints a committee of five, headed by Thomas Jefferson, "to prepare the declaration." It was further decided to appoint a second committee, "to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these colonies," and a third committee "to prepare a plan of treaties to be proposed to foreign powers."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 431. See July 2.

"The following resolution is enacted by the committee at New York: "Although all such persons as are above the age of fifty years, are, by Congress, exempted from bearing arms, the imminent danger to which this city and county are exposed, renders it necessary that every healthy, tho' aged friend, should have an opportunity of rendering assistance by voluntarily forming themselves into companies, for garrison duty in the city and county. Such gentlemen as are willing to step forth, as aforesaid, are requested to meet at the house of the Widow Vandewater near the New Brick Meeting-House, on Monday next [June 17] at 4 o'clock in the afternoon."—N. Y. Packet, June 13, 1776.

"The New York provincial congress distributes handbills announcing that the province will soon be invaded, and recommending that the officers of the militia review their commands, and be ready to march when called upon.—From broadside in archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"From the headquarters at New York comes this order: "The great extensiveness of the fortifications & works requiring a greater number of artillerymen than are at present in the Artillery Regiment; the General, in order to remedy the deficiency, and forward the service, directs that four able bodied men be pitched upon in each Company of every Battalion now here (the Rifle Corps excepted) for the purpose above mentioned."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), in Columbia Univ. Library, 139.

"John Hancock, president of the continental congress, writes from Philadelphia to Gen. Washington: "The establishing a War Office is a new and great event in the history of America, and will doubtless be attended with peculiar advantages, when properly conducted and inspected. I hope the Committee will be ready in a few days to enter upon the execution of their duty. You will see the outlines of this office in the enclosed resolves. Some further regulations, it is more than probable, will be necessary in the course of time. The Congress have only laid a foundation at present; it still remains, in a great measure, to erect a system of rules and 1776 laws that will enable us to carry on military operations with more knowledge, certainty, and despatch."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 884-85.

June 14 Another address (see May 29) is presented to the delegates in the New York "Colonial Congress" by "the Mechanics in Union, for the City and County of New-York, represented by their General Committee." This discusses at length the power and authority of this congress "to deliberate and determine on so important a Subject as the Necessity of erecting and constituting a new Form of Government and internal Police, to the Exclusion of all Foreign Jurisdiction, Dominion and Control whatever."—N. Y. Merc., June 17, 1776.

" A printed letter from the Continental Congress was distributed, which gave intelligence that for certain, within ten days, the fleet from Halifax would be here, and it was strongly recommended to make all possible defence. In consequence of this, many more troops came to town, and all was in alarm."—Shewkirk's Diary, in Johnston's Campaign of 1776, part 2, 108.

" The continental congress resolves: "That it be recommended to the convention of the colony of New York, to make effectual provision for detecting, restraining, and punishing disaffected and dangerous persons in that colony, and to prevent all persons from having any intercourse or correspondence with the enemy; and that General Washington afford his aid therein, when necessary."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 441. See June 15.

15 The provincial congress resolves "That the clergy and licensed physicians be exempted from drafting [see May 10] for the militia to be raised in this city;" also "That such of the freemen be exempted as will agree to form a separate company for the preservation of this city, in case of invasion, and be under the command of the General [Washington] until the further order of this Congress."—*Jour. 17 The continental congress resolves: "That letters be written to the conventions of New Jersey and New York, and to the assembly of Connecticut, recommending to them to authorize the commander in chief in the colony of New York, to call to the assistance of that colony, when necessity shall require it, such of the militia of those colonies as may be necessary; and to afford him such other assistance as the situation of affairs may require."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 452.

" The provincial congress resolves "That Capt. Hamilton's company of artillery be considered so many and a part of the quota of militia to be raised or furnished by the city and county of New York."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 497.

" "Colonel Magaw's and Col. Shea's Battalions are this Day expected from Pennsylvania, and a great Number, of the Militia from the different Parts of New-Jersey, Connecticut and this Province, so that in the Course of this Week we may expect to have here an Army of at least 25,000 Men."—N. Y. Merc., June 17, 1776.

18 "The provincial congress gives an "elegant entertainment" to "his Excellency General Washington, and his suite, the General and Staff Officers, and the commanding officers of the different regiments in and near this city." " The New York Committee publishes the following extract from its minutes: "Whereas it has been represented to this Committee that printed tickets are circulating in this City for small change, which, if permitted, in our estimation will have a tendency to depreciate the Paper currency emitted by Congresses, Committees, or Corporated bodies," it is resolved that they "will not receive in payment any tickets issued by any individual;" and they "recommend to the publick not to encourage, by any means, the circulation of any such tickets for the future."—4 *Am. " That Washington was at the Mortier house on this date is evident from testimony (see June 21) which states that one Corbil keeps a tavern "to the southeast of General Washington's house, to the westward of Bayard's woods, and north of Lispenard's meadow."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 1157; Johnston, Campaign of 1776, 86.

" Viscount Howe, having been appointed a commissioner for the granting of pardons, issues a proclamation declaring that "due Consideration shall be had to the meritorious Services of all Persons, who shall aid and assist in restoring the public Tranquility in the said Colonies, or in any Part or Parts thereof; that Pardon shall be granted, dutiful Representations received, and every suitable Encouragement given, for promoting such Measures as shall be conducive to the Establishment of legal Government and Peace, in pursuance of His Majesty's most gracious Purposes." The proclamation is issued from "on board His Majesty's Ship the Eagle off the Coasts of the Province of Massachusetts Bay."—From original MS. in Emmet Collection, No. 6976.

21 A plot against the lives of Washington, Putnam, and others is discovered. One of Washington's body-guard, Thomas Hickey, was found guilty and was hanged. The plot became known as the "Hickey Plot." Although Mayor Mathews and others were accused and arrested, the conspiracy was supposed to have been organized by Gov. Tryon, on "The Dutchess of Gordon," and aimed at a delivery of the city and the army to the royal forces.—See the correspondence relating to it in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), and authorities there cited. See also Minutes of the Trial and Execution of Certain Persons for Conspiracy against the Liberties of America (J. Burr, London, 1776).

Gen. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, entered in his journal on June 21 the following statement regarding this plot: "Some days past, the General received information that a most horrid plot was on foot by the vile Tories of this place and the adjacent towns and villages. Having taken the necessary precautions, at two o'clock in the morning a number of officers and guards went to different places and took up many of their principals; among whom was David Matthews, Esq., Mayor of the City; and to our great astonishment we find five or more of the General's life guard to be accomplices in this wicked scheme; which was at a concerted time, to assassinate His Excellency, and the other general officers, blow up the magazine, spike the cannon, etc. It was to be put in execution as soon as the enemy's fleet appeared, if no proper time offered before; but, thank God, they are discovered, and many of them in close custody; where, I hope, they will receive the punishment due such infamous wretches."—Correspondence and Journals of S. B. Webb (ed. by W. C. Ford), I: 1150; N. Y. Herald, Aug. 28, 1876.

Ensign Caleb Clap entered in his diary on the same day the following account of it: "At Evening the Mayor of the City of New York was taken up and a number of the Citizens with three of General Washington Life Guard, and some others belonging to Different Regiments, it is Reported to the amount of 40 are now taken, some are now in Irons, other Confined in the State House, the Mayor is confined in A Publick House by the state House, this arising from a Chest of Arms being Sent from here to Long Island in order to be conveyed to the Asia, in the Chest was A List of A number of the Tories that [had] givin there Name to Stand by the British Forces, and when We ware attack they was to Destroy the

J. Townsend, who was encamped with the patriot army "about one Mile N W of the City upon the north River in a very Pleasant Place," wrote to his father on June 22: "Lt Col. Clap has just Come out of the City and brings information that the Mayor of the City and about twenty of the Citizens were taken into Custody this morning, who are found out in laying a plan to take our Genl Officers and Convey them to the Asia Man of War, and when any attack should be made for to blow up our Magazines; in order to Effect this they Brihed a number of our Soldiers and put them (old Country men all) under pay who receive their pay weekly and were to execute the foregoing, one of which men belongs to the Genl Life Guard, who is Confined in Dark Hole—the Mayor has also sent a Draft of all our works in and about the City to the Asia, the Town is in a good deal of uproar and Confusion this morning; I went the grand Rounds with Major Smith last night found by one of the Capt's upon guard in a Fort that just before we Came up that a Man was perceived Creeping in at one of the Ambuzezers, was hail'd but made no answer and retreated, upon which the Centine fired three times upon him before he got of but did not stop him, we have had our alarm Cannon, in the Alarm Battery, spiked up once, and several pieces in the Artillery Park, which must be done by some of those in our army who receive pay from the other side. I find the plan went further than I have before mentioned, that they were to set fire to the Town in nine places if required—the plan if it had succeeded must have proved fatal to our Army here—the one belonging to the Genl Guard mentioned before, belonged formerly to this Regt. (Col. Reads) and inlisted out of it into the Guard, there is one more of the guard suspected and Confined, the Genl's house is but a few rods from our incampment that I have a good opportunity of nowing the movements that is made there." (P. S.) "Since writing this Letter there has six of the Genl. Guard found to be in the plan among whom are the Drum & fife."—From the original letter in the "Miscellaneous Collections," N. Y. Hist. Soc.

On June 24, Ezra Stiles recorded in his diary: "a Plot—was lately discovered, and the Mayor of the City, David Matthews, Esq., & a number of others were seized and taken into Custody. The Plot was to blow up the Magazine, assassinate G. Washington & a number of capital Characters in the Army, pull up Kingsbridge, set fire to the City and give signals to the Kings Fleet & Army for Landing & taking possession."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 18, 20.

A letter written on June 21 from New York to Philadelphia stated: "Since Friday last a most barbarous and infernal plot has been discovered among our Tories, the particulars I cannot give you, as the Committee of examination consists of but three, who are sworn to secrecy. Two of Gen. Washington's guards are concerned, a third who they tempted to join them made the first discovery. The general report of their design is as follows, upon the arrival of the British Troops, they were to murder all the Staff Officers, blow up the Magazines, and secure the passes of the town. Gilbert Forbes, a Guo-Smith in the Broadway, was taken between two and three o'clock on Saturday Morning, and carried before our Congress, who were then sitting, he refused to make any discovery, upon which he was sent to goal. The Rev. Mr. Livingston went to see him early in the morning, and told him, he was sorry to find he had been concerned, that his time was very short, he was having about three days to live, and advised him to prepare himself. This had the desired effect, he desired to be carried before the Congress again, promising to discover all he knew. Several have been since taken, between 20 and 30, among them our Mayor, they are all now in confinement. Their party, it is said, consisted of about 500."—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), June 26, 1776.

Geo. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, recorded in his journal, also on June 24: "The guard at the City Hall has in Charge those traitors to their country who were concerned in the late horrid plot."—N. Y. Herald, Aug. 28, 1876; Correspondence and Journals of S. B. Webb (ed. by W. C. Ford, 1893-4), I: 150.

The charge against Mayor Matthews and the others was of "dangerous designs & treasonable conspiracies against the Rights & Liberties of the United States of America."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 347. Matthews was made a prisoner on June 22.—Ibid., I: 347. He was examined on June 23.—Ibid., I: 354-5. See also Sept. 10, 1776, and Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 326.

Being a decided Loyalist, Mayor Matthews's name had been entered on the list of the suspected, as early as May of this year. When arrested by order of the committee of safety (see June 22), he was lodged in the New York jail, but was soon removed to Connecticut. The charge against him was that he was cognizant of, or concerned in, Gov. Tryon's plot to assassinate Gen. Washington and blow up the fort. He escaped from Litchfield, Conn., in 1777, and he is represented by Sabine as in N. Y. in 1778, and as register of the court of admiralty in 1782. By the act of 1779, he was attainted and his property confiscated. He left the United States in or about 1783.—Foot-note by O'Callaghan in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 640-41. He died on July 26, 1800, at Sydney, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, where he had resided for fifteen years, and having been attorney-general of that island shortly before his death.—Com. Adv., Sept. 25, 1800. Regarding the proceedings taken with Hickey, see June 26.

Col. Benjamin Tupper writes from Sandy Hook to Gen. Washington: "I landed here the evening before last, and by reason of several inconveniences, could not make an attack until this morning at four o'clock, when I advanced within one hundred and fifty yards of the Light-House, in so secret a manner that my party were not discovered. I advanced with an officer, and, after a few words, he fired several shot at me, but, as God would have it, he missed me. I returned to my party and ordered the artillery to play, which continued an hour, but found the walls so firm I could make no impression. I retired towards the shipping, not thinking, but, as there were two men-of-war arrived yesterday, that they would have been so complaisant as to send a party on shore to have attacked me, but could not provoke them. I occupied the ground about two hours and a half between two smart fires, viz: from two men-of-war on one side, and the Light-House on the other: but, what is remarkable, I had not one man killed, nor one wounded so much as to apply to a surgeon."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 1011. Col. Tupper was in command of "a motley little fleet, made up of schooners, sloops, row-galleys, and whale-boats." He had distinguished himself "by a naval exploit or two in Boston Harbor during the siege."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, 91.

Mayor David Matthews is apprehended at Flatbush. He is "dragged out of Bed at Midnight by an Officer and twenty Men belonging to the Rebel Army. By Order of the provincial Congress [see June 25], he was committed to close Confinement in the common Jail among Felons, during a Month in the hottest Time of the Year, and afterwards sent under Guard to the Committee at Litchfield, with an express Order from the President of the said Congress to detain him in Prison."—*N.  elevated, to pierce and stop the way of vessels meeting of them.
 These were boxed at the bottom, to contain a vast weight of Stones, —Robertson's Private Jour. (MS.), 1775. Washington writes to the president of congress: "For two or three days past, three or four ships have been dropping in; and I just now received an express from an officer appointed to keep a look-out on Staten Island, that forty-five arrived at the Hook to-day; some say more; and I suppose the whole fleet will be in, within a day or two."—Writings of Geo.

 whole day. At evening, nearly 100 sail had arrived, Col. Durkee's regiment was ordered over to Paulus Hook. The General Officers were in Council."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 48. A newspaper account reads: "Last Saturday arrived at the Hook (like the swarm of Locusts, escaped from the bottomless pit,) a fleet said to be 130 sail of ships and vessels from Halifax, having on board General Howe, &c. sent out by the Tyrants of Great-Britain, after destroying the English constitution there, on the pious design of enslaving the British Colonies and plundering their property at pleasure, or murdering them at once, and taking possession of all, as Ahab did of Naboth's vineyard."—N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), July 11, 1776. In a letter to Gen. Clinton, Washington states:
 "Would have you make all possible preparation in case the enemy should have in view to push some of their Frigates up the North River, to give them a proper reception."—Letters of Geo. Wash-

- 30 " Capt. Francis Hutcheson, assistant secretary to Sir William Howe, wrote on July 10 to a friend in England regarding their arrival at Staten Island: "We found Governor Tryon at the Hook on board the Dutchess of Gordon; he has with him Mr. Barrow, Mr.
 Kemp, Oliver Delancy, Mr. Apthorp & Major Beyard. The three last Gentlemen made their escape in a Cannon from Apthorp's house to the Assial lying below the Narrows, about ten nights ago."

 Tories were at this time.—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 217.

- " The provincial congress, having received intimations that "divers disaffected and dangerous persons in this Colony" have 1776 "lately left their usual places of residence and secreted themselves June in woods and swamps, and other places, in all probability with a 30 design to jio the enemy, when an opportunity shall offer, which, if not prevented, will greatly endanger the peace, quiet and safety of the inhabitants," passes a resolution recommending the committees of the several towns and cities, maors, precincts and districts in the colony, to apprehend and imprison such persons. The Congress empowers these committees to order the officers of militia in their respective districts to execute this resolution.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 512.

The congress also passes the following resolution: "Whereas there is great reason to apprehend that an attack will soon be made upon this city: And whereas during the tumult and confusion incident upon such an attack, it may be difficult to assemble a sufficient number of members to form a Congress: And whereas the minutes and the other necessary publick papers and records of this Colony, ought to be removed from this city: And Whereas the present or future Congress of this Colony, as well by reason of the removal of the papers aforesaid as for other causes and considerations, will be unable to deliberate and determine in this city on the several important matters submitted to their consideration:

"Resolved, therefore, That the Treasurer and Secretaries of this Congress, be and they hereby are directed forthwith to repair with all and singular the public papers and money now in their custody or possession, unto the White Plains, in the county of Westchester, and that this Congress be, and it hereby is adjourned unto the Court House in the White Plains aforesaid; there to meet on Tuesday, the 20d day of July next, and proceed upon business; and that the next Congress of this Colony do meet at the same place on Monday, the 8th day of July aforesaid, unless otherwise ordered by this Congress."—Ibid.

Following the records for June, in the printed Calendar, is a of Jacobus Stoutenburgh Enginier, 1776." This list shows that more than half the firemen were in military service or out of town.—

July 1 "The resolution respecting independency" (see June 10) is taken into consideration at the session of the continental congress.—*Jour.
Cont. Cong.* (Ford ed.), V: 504. No record of the discussion appears in the Journal. From letters of contemporaries written long afterward, it appears that John Adams took the leading part for the resolution, and John Dickinson against it. Many other members must have joined in the discussion, for the debate seems to have been prolonged.—Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 201. "After some time," reads the Journal, "the president resumed the chair," and "the determination thereof was postponed, at the request of a colony, till tomorrow" (q.v.)—Jour. Cont. Cong., V: 504-5.

The events of this day in the congress, and those leading up to it, are presented by Bancroft, from whose Hist. of the U. S. (author's last revision, 1886, chap. 28) the following extracts have been taken:

"On the morning of the first of July, the day set apart [see June 10] for considering the resolution of independence, John Adams, confident as if the vote had been taken, invoked the blessing of heaven to make the new-born republic more glorious than any which had gone before.

"At the appointed hour, the members, probably on that day fifty in number, appeared in their places; among them, the delegates lately chosen in New Jersey. The great occasion had brought forth superior statesmen—men who joined moderation to energy.

Every colony was found to be represented, and the delegates of all but one [New York] had received full power of action. Comprehensive instructions, reaching the question of independence without explicitly using the word, had been given by Massachusetts in January, by Georgia on the fifth of February, by South Carolina in March, North Carolina, in the words of Cornelius Harnett, on the twelfth of April, led the way in expressly directing its representatives in congress to concur in a declaration of independence. On the first of May, Massachussetts expunged the regal style from all public proceedings, and substituted the name of her 'government and people'; on the fourth, Rhode Island more explicitly renounced allegiance, and made its delegates the representatives of an independent republic; Virginia on the fifteenth, the very day on which John Adams in congress carried his measure for instituting governments by the sole authority of the people, ordered her delegates at Philadelphia to propose independence, and by a circular letter communicated her resolve to all her sister colonies. The movement of Virginia was seconded almost in her words by Connecticut on the fourteenth of June, New Hampshire on the fifteenth, New Jersey on the twenty-first, the conference of committees of Pennsylvania on the twenty-fourth, Maryland on the twenty-eighth. Delaware on the twenty-second of March had still hoped for conciliation; but on the fifteenth of June she instructed her delegates to concur in forming further compacts between the united colonies, concluding treaties with foreign powers, and adopting such other measures as should be deemed necessary for promoting the liberty, safety, and interests of America.

The vote of the eleventh of June showed the purpose of New York;
but, under the accumulation of dangers, her statesmen waited a few days longer, that her voice for independence might have the direct authority of her people.

"The business of the day began with reading various letters, among others one from Washington, who returned the whole number of his men, present and fit for duty, including the one regiment of artillery, at seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-four. . . . With this force the general was to defend extensive lines against an army, near at hand, of thirty thousand veterans.

"A more cheering letter, which Chase had forwarded by express from Annapolis, brought the first news of the unanimity of the Maryland convention, whose vote for independence was produced and read.

"The order of the day came next, and congress resolved itself 'into a committee of the whole to take into consideration the resolution respecting independency.' . . . In the absence of the mover of the resolution [Richard Henry Lee—see June 7], the eyes of every one turned toward its secondor, John Adams; . . . Of his sudden, impetuous, unprepared speech, no minutes ever existed, and no report was made. It is only remembered that he set forth the justice and the necessity, and the seasonableness and the advantages of a separation from Great Britain; he dwelt on the neglect and insult with which their petitions had been treated by the king; and on the vindictive spirit manifested in the employment of German troops whose arrival was hourly expected. He concluded by urging the present time as the most suitable for resolving on independence, inasmuch as it had become the first wish and the last instruction of the communities they represented.

"Dickinson of Pensylvania rose, not so much to reply as to justify himself before congress. . . . These were his words:

" . . . The declaration will not strengthen us by one man or by the least supply, while it may expose our soldiers to additional cruelties and outrages. Without some prelusive trials of strength, we ought not to commit our country upon an alternative, where to recede would be infamy and to persist might be destruction.

"It is singularly disrespectful to France to make the declaration before her sense is known, as we have sent an agent expressly to inquire whether such a declaration would be acceptable to her, and we have reason to believe he is now arrived at the court of Versailles.

"The formation of our governments and an agreement upon the terms of our confederation [see June 11] ought to precede the assumption of our station among sovereigns. A sovereignty composed of several distinct bodies of men, not subject to established constitutions and not combined together by confirmed articles of union, is such a sovereignty as has never appeared. . . .

"The confederation ought to be settled before the declaration of independence. . . . The boundaries of the colonies ought to be fixed before the declaration, and their respective rights mutually guaranteed; . . . When things shall be thus deliberately rendered firm at home and favorable abroad, then let America, bearing up her glory and the destiny of her children, advance with majestic steps and assume her station among the sovereigns of the world."

"Wilson of Pennsylvania could no longer agree with his colleague. He had at an early day foreseen independence as the probable though not the intended result of the contest; he had

1776 uniformly declared in his place that he never would vote for it July 1 contrary to his instructions. . . . But, now that their authority was communicated by the conference of committees, he stood on very different ground.

"Before the end of the debate rose Witherspoon of New Jersey. In a short speech he remarked . . . that, in his judgment, the country was not only ripe for independence, but was in danger of becoming rotten for want of it, if its declaration were longer delayed. Others spoke; . . . Before the vote was taken, the delegates from New York read to the committee a letter which they had received from the provincial congress, explaining why their formal concurrence must, for a few days longer, be withheld. The resolution for independence was then sustained by nine colonies, two thirds of the whole number; the vote of South Carolina, unanimoously it would seem, was in the negative; so was that of Pennsylvania, by the vote of Dickinson, Morris, Humphreys, and Willing, against Franklin, Morton, and Wilson; owing to the absence of Rodney, Delaware was divided, each member voting under the new instruction according to his former known opinion, Mackean for independence and Read against it.

"The committee rose, and Harrison reported the resolution; but, at the request of Edward Rutledge, on behalf of South Carolina, the determination upon it was put off till the next day. [See July 2.]

"A letter from Washington, of the twenty-ninth of June [7.v.], was then read, from which it appeared that Howe and forty-five ships or more, laden with troops, had arrived at Sandy Hook, and that the whole fleet was expected in a day or two. . . . No one knew better than the commander-in-chief the exceedingly discouraging aspect of military affairs; but his serene and unflinching courage in this hour was a support to congress. His letter was referred to the board of war which they had recently established, and of which John Adams was the president."

"The Number of Transports now at Sandy-Hook, we hear amounts to 113 Sail, and we have not the least Reason to doubt, that General Howe is in this Fleet. From the Number of Troops now here, and those on their Way, from different Parts of the Country, it is computed our Army will soon amount to 25000 Men."
—N. Y. Merc., July 1, 1776. See, further, July 8.

"The British fleet leaves Sandy Hook (see June 29) "for the Narrows," and three hours later anchors about two miles off Gravesend. "There was orders for the troops to be ready to embark at 4 next moro<sup>g</sup>—but after a long Consult<sup>o</sup> of Genl Off<sup>rs</sup> it was agreed not to be proper consider<sup>g</sup> the country we had to march thro' & the Difficulty of keep<sup>g</sup> up our Communicat<sup>o</sup> wth the Ships &ca &ca."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See July 2.

"About this date, Capt. Alexander Graydon's regiment and Magaw's were employed on the construction of Fort Washington. —Graydon, Memoirs of a Life (1822), 148.

"On the second congress at Philadelphia resolves: "That these United Colonies are, and, of right, ought to be, Free and Independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connexion between them, and the state of Great Britain, is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."—Jour. Cont. Cong., 1774-8 (ed. of 1823), I: 392. Cf. Virginia resolution of May 15; see also June 7. The delegates of 12 of the colonies voted for the resolution, those from New York being excused from voting on account of their instructions (see June 11).

Bancroft describes the transactions of July 2 as follows: "On the second day of July there were present in congress probably forty-nine members. Rodney had arrived from Delaware, and, joining Mackean, secured that colony. Dickinson and Morris stayed away, which coaled Franklin, Wilson, and Morton of Pennsylvania, to outvote Willing and Humphreys. The South Carolina members, still uncertain if Charleston had not fallen, for the sake of humanity, came round; so, though New York was still unable to vote, twelve colonies, with no dissenting one, resolved: "That these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; . . ."

"The greatest question," he [John Adams] wrote [on July 3 to his wife], "was decided which ever was debated in America, and a greater, perhaps, never was nor will be decided among men. When I look back to 1761, and run through the series of political events, the chain of causes and effects, I am surprised at the suddenness as well as greatness of this revolution. Britain has been filled with folly, and America with wisdom. It is the will of heaven that the two countries should be sundered forever; it may be the will of heaven that America shall suffer calamities still more wasting and distresses yet more dreadful. If this is to be the case, the furor of affliction produces refinement in states as well as individuals; but I submit all my hopes and fears to an over-ruling Providence . . ."

"The hopes of reconciliation which were fondly entertained by multitudes of the honest and well-meaning, though weak and mistaken, have been gradually and at last totally extinguished. Time has been given for the whole people maturely to consider the great question of independence, so that in every colony of the thirteen they have now adopted it as their own act.

"But the day is passed. The second of July 1776 will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America; to be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival, commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty, from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forward forevermore.

"You will think me transported with enthusiasm, but I am not. I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure that it will cost us to maintain this declaration, and support and defend these states; yet, through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory; that the end is worth all the means; that posterity will triumph in that day's transaction, even though we should rue it, which I trust in God we shall not." [See Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife, 191-94.]

"The resolution of congress changed the old thirteen British colonies into free and independent states. It remained to set forth the reason for this act, and the principles which the new people would own as their guides. Of the committee appointed for that duty, Thomas Jefferson of Virginia had received the largest number of votes, and was in that manner singled out to draft the confession of faith of the rising empire. He owed his distinction to respect for the colony which he represented, to the consummate ability of the state papers which he had already written, and to that general favor which follows merit, modesty, and a sweet disposition; but the quality which specially fitted him for the task was the sympathetic character of his nature, by which he was able with instinctive perception to read the soul of the nation, and, having collected its best thoughts and noblest feelings, to give them out in clear and bold words, mixed with so little of himself that his country, as it went along with him, found nothing but what it recognized as its own. . . ."

"From the fulness of his own mind, without consulting one single book, yet having in memory the example of the Swiss and the manifesto of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, Jefferson drafted the declaration, in which, after citing the primal principles of government, he presented the complaints of the United States against England in the three classes of the iniquitous use of the royal prerogative, the usurpation of legislative power over America by the king in parliament, and the measures for enforcing the acts of the British parliament. He submitted the paper separately to Franklin and to John Adams, accepted from each of them one or two verbal, unimportant corrections, and on the twenty-eighth of June reported it to congress, which, on the second of July, immediately after adopting the resolution of independence, entered upon its consideration. During the remainder of that day, and the next two, the language, the statements, and the principles of the paper were closely scanned."—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1886), 441-46. A draft of the declaration in Jefferson's handwriting is in the Emmet Coll. (No. 1524). See July 4.

The following address is issued from the military headquarters at New York: "The time is now near at hand which must probably determine whether Americans are to be slaves or freemen. Whether they can have any property they can call their own, whether their houses and farms are to be pillaged and destroyed, & they consigned to a state of wretchedness, from which no human efforts will probably deliver them. The fate of unborn millions will now depend, (under God) on the courage & conduct of this army. Our cruel & unrelenting Enemy leaves us no choice but a brave resistance or the most abject submission. This is all we can expect. We have therefore resolved to conquer or die. Our own & our Country's honor all call upon us for a vigorous and manly exertion; and if we now shamefully fail, we shall become infamous in the whole world. Let us therefore rely upon the goodness of the cause and the aid of the Supreme Being (in whose hands victory is) to encourage and animate us to great and noble actions."

1776 "The eyes of all our country-men are now upon us; and we shall July have their blessings & praises if happy we are in being the instru-2 ment of saving them from the tyranny meditated against them.
Let us therefore animate & encourage each other, and shew the Whole world that freemen contending for liberty on their own ground is superior to any slavish mercenaries on earth."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 1: 152.

" "Att 9 o'clock this morning the whole Army was under Arms at their several Alarm Posts, occasioned by five large Men of War coursing up thro: the narrows—We supposed them coursing on to attack our Forts—never did I see them more cheerfully; they seem to wish the Enemies approach—they came up to the watering Place, about five Miles above the narrows, and came too."—Gen. Webb's Correspondence (ed. by Ford), I: 151-52.

" Gen. Howe disembarks his troops on Staten Island. Gov.
Tryon, who has no special duties assigned to him in his military character, does all in his power in his civil capacity "to promote his Majesty's service," and gives all the information he possesses to Gen. Howe.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 681. See also "General

Capt. Francis Hutcheson, Gen. Howe's assistant secretary, writing to a friend in England, on July 10, from the camp on Staten Island, described the circumstances on landing here. Among other things, he observed: ". . . its imposing they did not fortify the Narrows, which would have annoyed us greatly; they fired a few shots on some of the ships as they came through from the Long Island side without doing any mischief. The Army is now [July 10] all landed and Cantoned all round the Island. The Head Q<sup>r</sup>s is on the Road to Iizabeth town [at] the House a Mr Hicks formerly lived in, but lately occupied by a Mr Banker of New York, who was a member of the Provincial Congress; he is treated to a Q<sup>r</sup> on board one of the men of war, and General Howe has taken care to give orders for his Reception . . ."—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 217-18, citing "Haldimand MSS., British Museum."

There was published in London, on Jan. 17, 1777, as part of the Atlantic Neptune (see Vol. I, p. 353), a map of the country around New York and the Hudson entitled "A Sketch of the Operation of His Majesty's Fleet and Army under the Command of Vice

3 Ensign Caleb Clap records in his Diary: "Col<sup>l</sup> Nixon's Regiment is ordered to March on to Gover[ners] Island, . . .

"about Ten O Clock AM three large Men of war came up through the Narrows with two Tenders, they came to an Anchor, Against Stratton Island, about 12 o Clock—

"After those Ships appeared this side the Narrows A Signal was Hoisted, and Guns fired from the North Battery, and the whole Army was immediately under Arms, ready to Receive them "About 5 O Clock P. M. the Ships was under Way and moved up Slowly fired several Shots on the People on Stratton Island

"General Putnam with A Detachment of 5 or 6 Hundred Men is gone on to Long Island in order to prevent the Enemy's Landing
"this sudden alarm put the Citizens in the greatest confusion they are moving out of Town as fast as Possible

"I conclude almost all the sloops and Craft that Lay about the Town are gone up the Rivers (North and south)." Other incidents of the day, on Staten Island, are described.—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., II: 136.

" Garret Abeel writes: "The night before last, just after dark, there was an alarm that the fleet was under way and coming up; the drums beat to Arms. I sat up till I found that the Tide was spent, and wind wont not permit them to come up; then I went to bed. About 11 o'clock I was awakened by Col. Rensen, who came with an order to have our Regiment out by 4 o'clock in the morning.
When I got up was hurried to go around to the Captain's to warn them; before long the alarm guns were fired, and the fleet appeared in the Narrows; the drums beat to arms, and every one was ordered to his post. Mine was at the New Brick Meeting House, where our regiment parades. There I stayed till it was found that they were come to anchor under Staten Island. Capt. Randall has just informed me that they had only landed on Staten Island and drove the few Riflemen we had there to Elizabethtown point; shall be a little easier, as two thousand men are going over to prevent their marching into the country. If they had landed here they must have met with a warm reception, as I judge we had Monday by 12 o'Clock, 15,000 Men in the City and its neighborhood. Tomorrow 7,000 Troops are expected from New England."—Whittemore, The Abell and Allied Families, 16.

" Brig. Gen. Mercier from Virginia, arrives in camp at New York, having been appointed and ordered here by congress. Gen.
Herd, with New Jersey militia also arrives, under orders from Gen. Washington.—Gen. Webb's Corresp. and Jour., I: 152.

4 The congress at Philadelphia "resolved itself into a committee of the whole to take into their further consideration" independency, the preliminary resolution concerning which was voted two days earlier (q. v.). The Declaration of Independency is read and "agreed to." The full text is represented in the rough Journal of Congress by a copy of the original broadside, printed by John Dunlap (doubtless on July 5) in accordance with an order of congress of July 4, and which was probably wafered onto the page the day it was printed.—See reproduction in Hazelton's Dec. of Ind., opp. p. 170. There is a copy of the Dunlap broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Emmet, No. 2062), and one in the author's collection. For reproduction from a photograph, made in 1893, of the original parchment document, which is preserved in the Library of Congress, Washington, but no longer exhibited, see Avery's Hist. of the U. S., v, opp. p. 398.

The order of congress of July 4 also required that copies of this printed issue of the declaration should be sent "to the several assemblies, conventions, and committees, or councils of safety, and to the several commanding officers of the continental troops" (see July 6), and that it be "proclaimed in each of the United States, and at the head of the army" (see July 9).—Jour. Cont. Cong.
(Ford ed.), V: 510-16.

"American independency was not an act of sudden passion, nor the work of one man or one assembly. It had been discussed in every part of the country by farmers and merchants, by mechanics and planters, by the fishermen and the hackwoodmen; in town-meetings and from the pulpit; at social gatherings and around camp fires; in newspapers and in pamphlets; in county conventions and conferences of committees; in colonial congresses and assemblies.
The decision was put off only to ascertain the voice of the people."
—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 426.

Concerning the drafting of the declaration Jefferson writing to Madison, in 1823, said that the committee for that purpose consisted of Sherman, Livingston, Franklin, John Adams, and himself.
The others "pressed on myself alone to undertake the draught. I consented; I drew it; but before I reported it to the committee, I communicated it separately to D<sup>r</sup> Franklin and mr. Adams requesting their corrections; because they were the two members of whose judgments and amendments I wished most to have the benefit before presenting it to the Committee; . . . their alterations were two or three only, and merely verbal. I then wrote a fair copy, reported it to the Committee, and from them, unaltered to Congress."—Hazelton, op. cit., 144, citing the MS. in Lib. of Congress. Jefferson wrote this letter because of some statements concerning the drafting that had been made by John Adams and Timothy Pickering. He says that their observations—"that it contained no new ideas, that it is a common place compilation, it's sentiments hacknied in Congress for two years before, and that its essence contained in Otis's pamphlet," may all be true; of which I am not the judge. Rich<sup>d</sup> H. Lee charged it as copied from Locke's treatise on government. Otis's pamphlet I never saw, & whether I had gathered my ideas from reading or reflection I do not know.
I know only that I turned to neither book or pamphlet while writing it."—Ibid. For the controversy in regard to the signing of the declaration on July 4 by the members of congress, see Hazelton, op. cit., chap. IX; "The authentication of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings (Nov., 1884), 273-98.

There is reproduced in Pl. 46, Vol. IV, the only known impression of a broadside of the declaration printed in New York, "by John Holt in Water-Street" (see Hazelton, op. cit., 491).

Elbridge Gerry wrote to James Warren, on July 5, expressing his satisfaction that the declaration had been issued, although unanimity had not been reached because the New York delegates 1776 were not "empowered to give either an affirmative or negative July July voice."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 516 (footnote). New 6 York's sanction to the declaration was given by the provincial 4 congress on July 9 (q.v.), and on the same evening the declaration was read, by Washington's order, to the army drawn up for the purpose on the Common in New York City.

The declaration was first printed in a newspaper in the *Penn.
Eve. Post* (Phila.), July 6, 1776. Its first publication in a New York newspaper was on July 11 (q.v.). It was officially "published" at the city hall on July 18 (q.v.).

At the opening of parliament, on Oct. 31, the declaration moved the king to say: ". . . so daring and desperate is the Spirit of those Leaders, whose object has always been Dominion and Power, that they have now openly renounced all Allegiance to the Crown, and all political Connection with this Country: They have . . .
presumed to set up their rebellious Confederacies for Independent States. If their Treason be suffered to take Root, much Mischief must grow from it, to the Safety of my loyal Colonies, to the Commerce of my Kingdoms, and indeed to the present System of all Europe. One great Advantage, however, will be derived from the Object of the Rebels being openly avowed, and clearly understood;
We shall have Unanimity at Home, founded in the general Conviction of the Justice and Necessity of our Measures."—Daily Advertiser (London), Nov. 1, 1776.

Before the end of the year the declaration prompted the publication in London of two anonymous pamphlets by way of reply.
One was entitled Strictures upon the Declaration of the Congress at Philadelphia; in a Letter to a Noble Lord, &c. (London, 1776). It has been proven that Thomas Hutchinson, former governor of Massachusetts, was the author. The position is taken that "there were men in each of the principal Colonies, who had Independence in view, before any of those Taxes were laid, or proposed, which have since been the ostensible cause of resisting the execution of Acts of Parliament. . . . Their designs of Independence began soon after the reduction of Canada" (1763). The several paragraphs of the declaration are stated, and each is warmly refuted.

The second pamphlet is entitled An Answer to the Declaration of the American Congress (1776). One John Lind was hired by the British government to compose this rejoinder; it attracted much attention, and went into several editions. In the introduction it is stated that "The Declaration of the American Congress is an insult offered to every one who bears the name of Briton.
For in considering the present contest between Great Britain and America, it is a truth which deserves our particular attention, and which therefore cannot be too often repeated, nor too strongly inculcated, that the dispute is not, nor never has it been, between his Majesty and the whole, or any part, of his subjects. The dispute is clearly between one part of his subjects and another. The blow given by the Congress appears indeed to be levelled at his Majesty;
but the wound was intended for us."

Robertson records: "Last night the Rebels brought two pieces of Cannon to Deckery's Ferry one 12 & one 9 Pf and Early in the morn<sup>g</sup> fired on the George Sloop & killed & wounded 5 men—but the sloop drove them off w<sup>t</sup> the loss of one man & some wounded The Gen<sup>l</sup> would not Allow the Grasshoppers to be fired—This day we brought up 2—12P<sup>r</sup> & 2 Royal Howitzers near Deckers Ferry—The Rebels fired from a field piece at our Transports coming up the Narrows—the Asia returned the fire & drove them off—all the troops landed—This Night a Sloop came in from Shrews-berry in the Jerseys w<sup>t</sup> 66 men in Arms to join the Army; under M<sup>r</sup> Morris formerly an Off<sup>r</sup> in the 47th Reg<sup>t</sup> landed the entrench<sup>g</sup> tools w<sup>t</sup> the Cannon—The Emerald Arrived w<sup>t</sup> a Ship loaded with Provisions from the Loyalists at New York—Sev<sup>l</sup> People came in,
in Boats from Long Island & the town—most horribly persecuted by the Rebels."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Kemble states that the men came in from Shrewsbury on July 6 (q.v.). See also Clap's Diary, in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 137.

5 The first division of the Connecticut forces arrives, "commanded by the Hoo. Brigadier Gens Waterbury and Wadsworth, and this day the remainder are expected to arrive—5000 men."—

"The continental congress resolves "That the post master general be directed immediately to have expresses established between this city [Phila.] and New York, and that General Washington be desired to send off despatches to Congress every day."
—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 522.

The president of congress, John Hancock, sends the declaration July (the broadside printed by Duolap—see Hazleton, op. cit., 170-71, 476) to the New York convention, with a letter in which he says: 6
"The Congress, for some time past, have had their attention occupied by one of the most interesting and important subjects, that could possibly come before them, or any other assembly of men. Although it is not possible to foresee the consequences of human actions, yet it is nevertheless a duty we owe ourselves and posterity in all our public counsels, to decide in the best manner we are able, and to leave the event to that Being, Who controls all things, to bring about his own determinations. Impressed with this sentiment, and at the same time fully convinced, that our affairs may take a more favorable turo, the Congress have judged it necessary to dissolve the connection between Great Britain and the American Colonies, and to declare them free and independent states; as you will perceive by the enclosed Declaration, Which I am directed to transmit to you, and to request you will have it proclaimed at the head of the army, in the way you shall think most proper.

"The important consequences to the American States from this Declaration of Independence, considered as the ground and foundation of a future Government, will naturally suggest the propriety of proclaiming it in such a manner that the people may be universally informed of it."—5 Am. Arch., I: 33. The original MS.
of this letter, formerly in the department of state, is now in the Library of Congress.—Hazleton, op. cit., 137, 612.

Kemble records: "Saturday, July 6th, 7th, & 8th. Nothing extraordinary, but the Coming in, on the Evening of the 6th, about 58 Men from Shrewsbury, with Lieut. Morris. Observe the Rebels have fortified Governors Island very strongly, as well as Red Hook and the Heights to Brookline Ferry. Paulus' Hook likewise defensible, with an Encampment of about 700 Men on it. Are told they have 5,000 encamped on King's Bridge under the Command of Miflin, and 3,000 at Col. Morris's [see June 13, 1765], tho' the leaders are very suspicious of the Majority of their army and don't rely on any but the New England Forces, about 7,000 Men."—N. Y.

Orders are given by Gen. Spencer to confine one John Lewis in

"The Fleet, from Halifax, we informed our Readers in our last [see July 1] was arrived at Sandy-Hook, to the Amount of 113 Sail: 'Tis difficult, from this Situation to ascertain their Number, but we suppose it does not exceed 130 Sail." Here follows a report of each day's movements of ships for the past week, at the Narrows and about Staten Island, stating, in part, that "by Thursday [July 4] Noon the whole Fleet was at Anchor in a Line from Kill Van Kull to Simonson's Ferry on the East Side of Staten Island. The Asia brought up the Rear of the Fleet, and in the Narrows was fired at from a small Battery on Long-Island, which Complement was returned by about 40 Twenty-four Pounders . . ." (mentioning the houses, etc., hit). See also July 4. The movements of the British troops, after landing on Staten Island, are mentioned.— N. Y. Merc., July 8, 1776.

Ensign Caleb Clap records in his diary: "About 130 Sail are now, this side the Narrows, towards straton Island . . . It is expected Admiral Howe will arrive soon, from England, as we have accounts that he sail'd in the Eagle Man of war some time since,

1776 The new provincial congress of New York, meeting at White July Plains, gives its sanction to the Declaration of Independence in the 9 following resolution, the delegates having been elected with authority to form a government for the "State of New York:"

"In Convention of the Representatives of the State of New York, White Plains, July 9th, 1776.

"Resolved unanimously, That the reasons assigned by the Continental Congress for declaring the United Colonies free and independent States, are cogent and conclusive; and that while we lament the cruel necessity which has rendered that measure unavoidable, we approve the same, and will, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, join with the other Colonies in supporting it.

"Resolved, That a copy of the said Declaration and the foregoing resolution be sent to the chairman of the committee of the county of Westchester, with orders to publish the same, with beat of drum, at this place on Thursday next; and to give directions that it be published with all convenient speed in the several districts within said county; and that copies thereof be forthwith transmitted to the other county Committees within the State of New-York, with orders to cause the same to be published in the several districts of their respective counties . . .

"Resolved, That the Delegates of this State in Continental Congress be and they are hereby authorized to concert and adopt all such measures as they may deem conducive to the happiness and welfare of the United States of America."—Jour. Provin. Congs., I, 518. The resolution was written by John Jay—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, I, 72 (footnote). The constitution of the State of New York was adopted April 20, 1777 (q.v.).

"The following announcement is issued by Washington from "Head Quarters:" "The Honorable Continental Congress, impelled by the dictates of duty, policy & necessity, have been pleased to dissolve a connexion which subsisted between this Country & Great Britain, & to declare the United Colonies of North America free & independent States.

"The several Brigades are to be drawn up this evening on their respective grounds at 6 o'clock, when the Declaration of Congress, shewing the grounds & reasons of this measure is to be read with an audible voice. The General hopes this important point will serve as a fresh incentive to every Officer & Soldier to act with fidelity & courage, as knowing that now the peace & safety of this Country depends (under God) solely upon the success of our arms; and that he is now in the service of a State possessed of sufficient power to reward his merit, and advance him to the highest honor of a free Country."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 155.

This order is also found in the "Varick Transcripts" of Washington's general orders, I, 308, in Lib. of Congress, which volume is attested by Col. Alexander Scammell, adjutant-general, as having been copied by John Stagg, assistant adjutant-general, of the continental army. The following bibliographical note is supplied by the Division of Manuscripts of the Library of Congress: "The 'Varick Transcripts' were made by Richard Varick, by order of Gen. Washington, in 1781-3. The work was begun in 1781, and finished in 1783. The general orders were copied in the spring or summer of 1781. The exact date of this particular transcript is not easily ascertainable; but it was before the army left New York on its march south to Virginia, in June, 1781. Col. Scammell's attestation is in the end of the volume, which covers the dates July 3, 1775, to Sept. 30, 1776, and was made prior to July 1, 1781. He was killed at Yorktown. The original orderly-book, from which this Varick transcript was made, is now in the possession of the Lib. of Congress." See also Hazleton, Declaration of Independence (1906), 252.

The order is also found in the orderly-book of Capt. Lunt's company, kept by Nathaniel Mitchell, of Newburyport, Mass., owned by the late Joseph T. Brown, Sr., of New Rochelle, N. Y. To this order another is added, in this orderly-book, which, when the book was owned by Mr. Brown, was copied as follows by Mr. Victor H. Paltsits, to show the manner in which the declaration was distributed to the American army in New York: "The Brigade Majors are to Receive at the Adjutant Gen<sup>l</sup>s office Several of the Declaration to Be deliver'd to the Brigadiers and Col<sup>l</sup> of Reg<sup>ts</sup> the Brigade Majors are Excused from further attendance at Head Quarters Except to Receive Orders of the Day that their time and attention May be withdrawn as little as Possible from the duties of their Respective Brigades."

Wm. Smith (now at Haverstraw) records in his diary: "My Brother John brought me this Day the printed Renunciation of the British Gov<sup>t</sup> in Future. He says . . . That the New York Delegates did not declare any opinion upon this great Point for Want of Instructions—That Virginia Pensylvania Massachusetts & Connecticut hesitated at first for a previous Settlement respecting their Limits—A Circumstance that ought to have alarmed N Y and in which they should have joined to restrain the Avidity & Claims of the New England Colonies." Smith then ventures a prophecy which corresponds so closely to actual occurrences as to seem almost uoocanny: "I think it now most probable that the Terms expected by Lord Howe, and which I suppose will be similar to those suggested by Lord Drummond, will be unfavorably recieved—That France will tamper with the Colonies tho' she will not declare for them till Great Britain is exhausted & that then these Domestic Quarrels may inkindle an European War—that this Province will become the main Theatre of the civil commotions of America in consequence of the access by Hndson's River & the Lakes—That opposition at Home will be compelled to fly or attempt to raise the collective Body in their Defence, & that there is Reason to fear when Great Britain & France have worried each other, that a Peace may be patched up by a Partition of the Provinces.

"It strikes my Attention with some Amazement that the Declaration of the 4th Inst contains no Vindication from the Charge of having long since formed the Project of Independency contained in the King's last Speech to Parliament on the 27th Oct<sup>r</sup>, which Opposition must take unkindly considering their open support of the American Cause.

"If the Fears Sufferings & Losses of the Nation create Troubles at Home and a Change of Men and Measures the two Countries may still be reconciled, but with great Advantages to America & this perhaps is the best Event the Empire can wish for—I dread France—She will be guided only by Motives of Interest—No Promises will bind her—She will perceive it more advantageous to her Ambition to ferment our animosities, than hastily to plunge into a War—She will deceive both Parties that her Ends may be achieved at our Expence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

The Declaration of Independence is read "at the Head of each Brigade after which a part of the 80 Psalm was sang, and then Mr Leonard made Prayers, after that the whole Brigade gave three Cheers."—From "Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III, 137-38; N. Y. Packet, June 11, 1776; Memoirs of Maj-Gen. Heath (1798), 490. The N. Y. Merc., July 15, 1776, is in error in giving Wed., July 10, as the date of this event. See also Gen. Webb's Correspondence, etc., I, 153. Benson J. Lossing states:

"The brigades were formed in hollow squares on their respective parades. The venerable Zachariah Greene (commonly known as "Parson Greene," the father-in-law of Mr. Thompson, historian of Long Island), yet (1852) living at Hemstead, at the age of ninety-three years, informed me that he belonged to the brigade, then encamped on the "Common," where the City Hall now stands. The hollow square was formed at about the spot where the Park Fountain now is. He says Washington was within the square, on horseback, and that the Declaration was read in a clear voice by one of his aids. When it was concluded, three hearty cheers were given."—Pictorial Field-Book of the Rev. (1852), II, 801.

Washington, writing to John Hancock, the president of congress, on July 10, acknowledging the receipt of the president's letter of July 6 (q.v.) (which contained a copy of the declaration and the request that it be proclaimed at the head of the army), says: ". . . Agreeably to the request of Congress, I caused the Declaration to be proclaimed before all the army under my immediate command; and have the pleasure to inform them, that the measure seemed to have their most hearty assent; the expressions and behavior, both of officers and men, testifying their warmest approbation of it . . ."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV, 225.

ADDENDA

THE ADDENDA CONTAINS MATERIAL OBTAINED TOO LATE FOR INCLUSION IN THE BODY OF THE BOOK, OR WHICH IT SEEMED DESIRABLE TO SEPARATE FROM THE TEXT. THE MATERIAL IS CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED, AND IN MOST CASES REFERENCES THERETO ARE GIVEN IN THE BODY OF THE TEXT OR AS MARGINAL NOTES.

1505

— AT about this time was published the well-known and very interesting xylographic leaf found by Mr. Henry Stevens in 1850, and now belonging to the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection.

This leaf, which measures  $13\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{2}$  inches, represents "the people and island which have been discovered by the Christian King of Portugal or by his subjects" (Brazil, visited by Vespuccius in 1501). It has a German inscription taken for the most part from the first German edition of the Mundus Novus of Vespuccius, which suggests the possibility that it was drawn by Vespuccius on his voyage in 1501-2. This very important block-leaf is in all probability the earliest view of America and the American Indians. Only one other copy is known—that owned by the Königliche Hof- und Staatsbibliothek at Munich.

The print is fully described, and its origin and significance discussed, in a monograph by Mr. Eames, published in a folio edition of seven copies in 1920.

— The John Carter Brown Library contains a unique map of the world showing the New World discoveries as well as the name America. This map, which was brought to light by Mr. Henry N. Stevens, shortly after 1900, is described in his Ptolemy's Geography, p. 15, as "evidently an earlier impression of the one found in the 1513 Strasburg Ptolemy," and was, Mr. Stevens thinks, "prepared by Waldseemüller at St. Dié prior to 1507 for the then projected edition of Ptolemy, but not used."

1508 — In this year appeared the first issue of Ptolemy to contain American maps, and a separate chapter on the American discoveries. The well-known Ruysch map of the world is supposed to have been prepared for this atlas, although it is occasionally found bound up with the 1507 edition.

1513

— In this year was published the first Strasburg edition of Ptolemy, with the "Admiral's Map."—See 1507, Addenda.

1558

— In this year, Dei Commentarii Del Viaggio in Persia . . . Et Dello Scopimento dell' Isola Frislanda, Etlanda, Engraulanda, Estailanda & Icaria was published in Venice. It contained the first printed narrative of the voyages of Nicolò and Antonio Zeno to the west, and a map, said to have been reproduced from a contemporary chart left by them, of their discoveries in the last decade of the fourteenth century.—Church Catalogue, No. 110. For an account of the Zeno travels and a discussion regarding the authenticity of this work, see 1393.

1560

— The map referred to in Vol. II, p. 15, footnote 44, as reproduced in Remarkable Maps, Part I, No. 13, and given in outline on C. Pl. 17, Vol. II, is, I believe, one of the six (?) folio sheets of a fine, large map of the world which I saw last summer (1921) in the possession of Mr. Chadenat, the Paris book-seller. This map, of which no other copy is known, is dated (?) 1560. Mr. Chadenat assigns it to Gastaldi, and considers it to constitute the first modern world atlas, antedating that of Ortelius by a decade.—See II: 14. This map differs materially from Gastaldi's well-known maps of 1546 (C. Pl.

17 and Remarkable Maps, Part IV) and 1556 (C. Pl. 14 and Ramusio, Vol. III), the latter of which is evidently taken from the same original as the map of Tierra Nueva in the 1548 Ptolemy. It seems, therefore, likely that it is based on data obtained or adopted by Gastaldi after the publication of his earlier maps. It is clearly more suggestive of the Verrazzano than of the Ribero type.

— On this day, Drake held a service for the Indians at Albion, the present San Francisco Bay, perhaps the first Protestant service held on U. S. soil. This bay is shown, although not named, on the "Silver Map," issued probably in 1581, to commemorate Drake's circumnavigation of the globe.—The World encompassed by Sir Francis Drake, etc. (London, 1628), reprinted by Haldyut Soc., 1854; Miller Christy, The Silver Map of the World (1900).

1582

— "The student of American colonial history of the seventeenth century is likely to be frequently perplexed by a confusion (and sometimes by an apparent contradiction) of dates unless he understands and keeps in mind the differences between the 'old style' and the 'new style' calendars. The ordinary year represents the mean time required for the earth to pass over its orbit around the sun. This passage requires 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 + seconds. As only whole days can be counted in measuring the ordinary or civil year, the fractional parts of the day make a difference between the civil and the solar periods. To remedy this difference and to secure uniformity in time-reckoning, Julius Caesar decreed (B.C. 46) that the year should consist of 365 days and 6 hours, that the 6 hours should be disregarded for three successive years, and that an entire day should be added to every fourth year. This day is called the intercalary day and the year to which it is added the bissextile or leap year. Such was the origin of the Julian calendar. Dates reckoned according to the Julian calendar are called 'old style' abbreviated to O. S. The old style is still used in the Russian Empire. [The revolutionary government adopted the New Style in 1918.]

"But the addition of the intercalary day made the average Julian year a little more than eleven minutes longer than the solar year and, by 1582, the cumulative error of the calendar was about ten days. In the year 325, the council of Nice, the first of the ecumenical councils of the Christian church, had determined when Easter should be observed. In 1582, all fixed ecclesiastical observances were falling ten days behind their proper seasons. To correct this error and to remove the consequent confusion, Pope Gregory XIII decreed that the fifth day of October, 1582, should be called the fifteenth. This suppression of ten days restored the vernal equinox to the twenty-first of March, the date on which it occurred at the time of the council of Nice, and thus brought into their proper seasons the fixed festivals of the church. To guard against future errors, it was decreed that years ending with two ciphers should not be leap years except when the number is an exact multiple of 400. Such was the origin of the Gregorian calendar, the error of which is only one day in about five thousand years. Dates reckoned according to the Gregorian calendar are called 'new style', abbreviated to N. S. From 1582 to 1700, the difference between the old style and the new was ten days. The year 1700 being a leap year in the Julian calendar and a common year in the Gregorian calendar, the two styles differed, in the eighteenth century, by eleven days. . . .

"Most Catholic countries adopted the Gregorian calendar soon after it was established. Great Britain, however, continued to use the Julian calendar until 1752. At that time the dates of the Julian 1582 calendar were eleven days behind the dates of the Gregorian calendar. To secure uniformity in dates and time reckonings, the British parliament decreed that eleven days should be stricken from the calendar and that the day following the second day of September, 1752, should be called the fourteenth. Prior to this time, the official English year began on the twenty-fifth of March, Lady Day or Annunciation, so-called from the common belief that the incarnation of Christ was announced to the Virgin Mary by the angel Gabriel on that day (Luke, I, 26-38). In reckoning the months, March was called the first and February the twelfth, September, October, November, and December thus having the numerical rank indicated by their names. At the time of the correction of the British calendar in 1752, the beginning of the official year was changed, from the twenty-fifth of March to the first of January to conform to the common usage of the greater part of Christendom—a change that had been partly anticipated by writing dates from the first of January to the twenty-fourth of March inclusive as follows: January 8, 1704-05, or January 8, 1704/5. As usual, English law was conformable to English custom.—Avery, Hist. of the U. S., II: xxxi—xxxiii. See also Sept. 3/14, 1752.

— The Expediitio Francisci Draki in Indias Occidentales, published at Leyden in this year (Church Catalogue, No. 134A) contains four large folding views, one of which, St. Augustine, is the earliest known view of a North American city. The author's collection contains a copy of this rare view.

1594

— During this and the following year, Robert Dudley cruised with three ships in the West Indies, and on his return to England, while skirting the coast from Florida to Newfoundland, about April 15, 1595, was in 40° 10' N.L., "160 leagues distant by the great circle from the island of Bermuda, . . . counting 20 leagues to a degree," as recorded in the router of Abram Kendall, master of Dudley's flagship, the "Great Bear," printed in the Arcano del Mare, Book II, chap. v, p. 12. This account, as well as Dudley's own journal, printed in Hakluyt's Voyages, III: 574, and the account of Capt. Wyatt, are all given, with explanatory notes, in The Voyage of Robert Dudley to the West Indies, 1594-1595, published by the Hakluyt Society. See also description of C. Pls. 35, 36, 37, Vol. II.

1599

— Samuel de Champlain left Seville in January, 1599, on the "armament of the King of Spain, which was accustomed to go every year to the Indies," and spent three years in the West Indies, Central America, and Mexico. On his return, he sailed along the east coast of Florida, and, having sighted the Bermudas, reached Seville again in 1602.—From MS. written and illustrated by Champlain, and pub. for the first time by the Hakluyt Soc. in 1859.

1601

— "In Onno 1601 several Merchants of Holland set out 17 Armatures for to seize, plunder and make prize of all Spanish ships and vessels in the West Indies or to burn and destroy any of the Spanish towns and villages in those parts, and for the better effecting their designe they received liberty of Queen Elizabeth to loan some harbour about the Island Manhattan, &c., betwixt the degree of 40 and 41 where they could finde the most convenient places for their cleaning and refitting their ships, here they built a large magazine for their purpose which they fortified with four bastions and called the place Stains Ile, settled 3 factories, one there, the 2nd on the south west point of the Manhattan Isle, where since was built New Amsterdam, a 3rd on a point of land called Pauls Hook, where they drove a very considerable trade with the Native Indians for several sorts of Furs, and made hold with the Queens Grace, so far that they began a Colony there and called it New Netherlands, and in the year 1608 forced an English ship under the Command of our Capt. Smith to strike to the States flag, which King James, though a peaceable prince, so highly resented that he commissioned Sir Samuel Argall to sail thither with five men of war to destroy the said Colony, which was accordingly effected, and they engaged never to plant there again, and yet the West India Company of Holland in the year 1620 began a Colony there a second time, having made their position so strong in the English Court that they were not disturbed till the year 1664, at which time, such was the general complaint of the English Merchant, and also of the English Planters that live under their government, that although there was peace betwixt the Majtities of Great Britain and the States of the United Provinces, His Majesty commissioned Colonel Richard Nichols and some other gentlemen to dispossess the West Indian Company of the said Colony and to incorporate it into the English Monarchy as soon as the said ships arrived the Governor and Inhabitants quietly surrendered themselves and became subjects of England under the Government of His Highness the Duke of York."—From a MS. of c. 1675 in the author's collection.

1609

The material regarding Hudson's voyage was in print before the author saw a copy of Naber's book on the voyage of the "Half Moon," issued by Nijhoff in 1921 as Vol. XIX of the Linschoten Society publications, and entitled Henry Hudson's reize onder Nederlandsche Vlag van Amsterdam naar Nova Zembla, Amerika en terug naar Dartmouth in Engeland. Volgens het journaal van Robert Juet uitgegeven door S. P. L'Honoré Naber. It is a satisfaction to note that Naber's conclusions are, in general, the same as those reached by the author, and outlined in Vol. II of the ICONOGRAPHY, published in 1916, and developed in more detail in the present volume.

1610

For reproduction of the title-page of the only known copy of the original folio 1610 edition of Van Meteren, and the two pages containing the account of Hudson's third voyage and the discovery of Manhattan Island and Hudson River, see Apr. 4 to Nov. 7, 1609; 1611; and Pls. 1B and 1C, Vol. IV.

1619

"In 1619—one year before the Pilgrim Fathers came to the land named New England by Captain John Smith—Sir Edwin Sandys, president of the Virginia Company in old England, moved the grant of ten thousand acres of land for the establishment of a university at Henrico [in Virginia]. The proposed grant which was duly made, included one thousand acres for an Indian college; the remainder was to be the foundation of a seminary of learning for the English'. The very same year the bishops of England, at the suggestion of the King, raised the sum of fifteen hundred pounds for the encouragement of Indian education. Thus, by the combined authority of church and state, was anticipated by more than two centuries the endowment of such institutions as are now represented by the Hampton School and by the University of Virginia."—Adams, The College of William and Mary, 11.

1622

In this year, Nicolaes van Wassenaer began the publication in Amsterdam of the Historisch Verhaal, or "Historical Account of all the most Remarkable Events which have happened in Europe," etc. The first volume covered the months from Jan. to June, 1621, its preface being dated Aug. 30, 1621. See Pl. 3, Vol. IV.

1626

Frederick Muller's catalogue of May 18, 1869 (item 1218) describes under the date 1626-54 two manuscripts (12-pages), one on the occupation of New Netherlands by the West India Co., the other on the South (Delaware) River and the capture of Fort Casimir by the Swedes; bought by Westerman & Co., New York.

Frederick Muller's catalogue of the Van Cleef collection, sold Dec. 19, 1872 (item 1090), describes an "autograph letter signed P. Courten concerning New Netherlands (1626)." This item was bought by F. W. Christern of New York. Under the same item is offered a lot of "different MSS. relating to the West Indies 1626-1634." This item was also bought by Christern.

1628

Endicott arrives in New England and lays the foundation of the settlement at Salem, which lay within the grant obtained by him and his associates on March 19, and which extended from a point three miles north of the Merrimack to a point three miles south of the Charles River, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. On March 4, 1629, a royal charter was granted, creating a corporation under the legal style of "The Governor and Company of Massachusetts Bay in New England." Six small ships were fitted out, and sailed under the command of Francis Higginson, with 300 men, 80 women, 26 children, 140 head of cattle, 40 goats, and

June The Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions, granted by the 7 West India Co. to those who will plant colonies in New Netherland, bears this date. It reads, in part (translated):

"Freedoms and Exemptions for the patroons, masters or private persons who will plant any colonies in, and send cattle to New Netherland, drawn up for the benefit of the General West India Company in New Netherland and for the profit of the patroons, masters and private persons.

"I. Such participants of the said Company as may be inclined to plant any colonies in New Netherland shall be permitted to send, in the ships of this Company going thither, three or four persons to inspect the situation of the country, provided that they, with the officers and ship's company, swear to the Articles, so far as they relate to them, pay for board and passage, goods and coming, six stivers a day (such as desire to mess in the cabin to pay 12 stivers) and agree to give assistance like others, in cases offensive and defensive . . .

"III. But they [patroons] are warned that the Company reserves to itself the island of the Manhattes . . .

"XII. Inasmuch as it is the intention of the Company to people the island of the Manhattes first, this island shall provisionally also be the staple port for all products and wares that are found on the North River and lands thereabouts, before they are allowed to be sent elsewhere, excepting such as are, from their nature, unnecessary there and such as can not without great loss to their owners be brought there; in this case the owners thereof must give timely notice in writing of the difficulty attending the same to the Company here, or the commander and council there, that such measures may be taken as the situation of affairs shall be found to require.

"XIII. All the patroons of colonies in New Netherlands and colonists living on the island of the Manhattes shall be at liberty to sail and traffic along the entire coast from Florida to Terra Neuf, provided that they do first return with all such goods as they shall get in trade to the island of the Manhattes and pay five per cent duty to the Company, in order that if possible, after proper inventory of the goods in the ship, the same may thence be sent hither . . .

"XV. It shall also be permitted the aforesaid patroons, all along the coast of New Netherland and places circumjacent, to trade their goods, products of that country, for all sorts of merchandise that may be had there, except beavers, otters, minks and all sorts of peltry, which trade alone the Company reserves to itself.
But permission for even this trade is granted at places where the Company has no agent, on the condition that such traders must bring all the peltry they may be able to secure to the island of the Manhattes, if it is in any way practicable, and there deliver them to the director, to be by him sent hither with the ships and goods; . . .

"XXVI. Whosoever shall settle any colonies out of the limits of Manhattes Island must satisfy the Indians of that place for the land and may enlarge the limits of their colonies if they settle a proportionate number of colonists thereon . . .

"XXXI. The Company promises to furnish the fort on the island of the Manhattes, and to put it in a posture of defense without delay. And to have these Freedoms and Exemptions approved and confirmed by their High Mightinesses the Lords States General."

1630

Maggs Brothers' catalogue No. 412 (1921) contains a description of a series of 28 MS. maps (18 by 28 inches), drawn by João Teixeira, cosmographer of the King of Portugal, signed and dated Lisbon, 1630. Inserted before the Portuguese title are two blank leaves, with the following inscription in Spanish on the first leaf:

"General Maps, Original and Universal of the Whole World,

1630 Together with the Principal Ports and Fortresses of Both Indies, and a Topographical Description of the Australian Magellanic Region, in the Year 1629, Offered to the King Our Lord, in His Supreme and Royal Council of the Indies, by Captain Don Francisco de Seixas y Lovera, Elected Chief Alcalde and Governor of the Province of Tacuba in the Kingdom of New Spain, for His Majesty; the President of that Council Being His Excellency the Marquis de Los Velez, Gentleman of His Majesty's Bedchamber, and of His Councils of State and War, and General Superintendent of All the Maritime Armadas of the Monarchy. Presented on Behalf of the Governor by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustante."

The second leaf has the following dedication (translated):

"Table of the Contents of this Book.

"Firstly, On the First Map the Portuguese Show the Demarcation of the Conquests Between the Two Crowns (of Portugal and Spain).

"This is the Map which the Portuguese Usually Show at the Congresses which Have Taken Place and Take Place Between Castille and Portugal. In Order to Cheat the Spanish Ministers the Portuguese Ministers Make Use of this Map, Because in this Said Map the Portuguese Have Introduced a Deceit and Have Taken Away the Land of Brazil 100 Leagues More to the East from Where it Ought to be. By this Means they Include in their Demarcation the Rio de la Plata, to which They Have No Right. Because in the Distance which There is from the Immediate Coast of Brazil to the Coast of Malaguta, in Guinea, on the Scale of that Map there are 410 Leagues Distance from One Coast to the Other. And So the Portuguese, by Showing this Map, Towards the West they Usurp the Said 100 Leagues in Brazil by Cape Saint Vincent Constituting the Meridian of 360 Degrees from the Equator They Take Away More Than 8 Degrees Because These Said 8 Degrees Should be More to the East, and Also it is Seen Distinctly in this First Map that they Show the Coast of Brazil, which in the Fifth Map they Show Differently (From the Cape of Saint Augustin of Guinea and Malaguta, the Said 450 [sic] Leagues), and the Second Map Shows a Greater Distance, with Little Difference Between the Two Coasts, Because the Map which is Called Second Map is the One which is in this Book of the Demarcations Between the two Crowns, while the First is Suppressed; and the One which is Called Second is Really the Fifth Map of this Book in which the Portuguese Place the Coast of Brazil and Ethiopic Africa where they Really Should Be.

"This Truth is Easily Seen Because the Distance which there is from the Rio de La Plata to the Cape of Good Hope in the First Map is 1,100 Leagues, and in the Second Map (the Fifth in this Book) the Portuguese Show that there are 1,200 Leagues from the Rio de La Plata to the Cape of Good Hope, which with the Difference of 100 Leagues Already Mentioned Have been Usurped by the Portuguese in their Demarcation of the Rio de La Plata, which is Really 100 Leagues Outside their Line of Demarcation.

"This is Manifest by the Said Maps which Have Been Made by the Best Men Whom the Crown of Portugal Could Find, and by its Orders, and which Was Kept with All Possible Safeguards as a Book of Original Maps in the Library of the City and Royal Archives of Lisbon, whence in 1681, to Serve His Majesty, Captain Don Francisco Seixas y Lovera Removed it to Serve His Majesty (Using Intelligences and Money) and He Found its Importance for the Crown of Spain, Because it is an Original and Has the Maps of All the World and is Written Truly and by Hand. Nothing of it Has Been Printed Up to the Present Day, Moreover it Must Have Cost More than 4,000 Silver Crowns to Make, and Many Years Were Spent in Making it, and for which, After the Revolt of Portugal, its Owner, Don Geronimo de Atiade, was Rewarded with One of the Highest Ranks of that Kingdom, He Who Had Before Been the Commander of the Naval Armadas of the East Indies.

"With this Book Captain Don Francisco de Seixas y Lovera Begs to Serve His Majesty, in His Royal and Supreme Council of the Indies. At the Time the President was the Marques de Los Velez. The Book was Presented by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustante, of His Majesty's Council, and Secretary.

"At the End of the Same Book is a Map of the Coast and Islands of the Australian Magellanic Regions, which Don Francisco de Seixas Has Made from His Practical and Theoretical Observations.

"The Contents of this Book Have Been Given in Order that His Majesty May Use it in the Congresses Against Portugal, and 1630 Moreover the Royal Council of the Indies May Keep this Original — so as to Resolve their Doubts on Many Points when People Pretend to Know what is Uncertain. In this Way the Truth Will Be Known and His Majesty Will Be Better Served, which is Desirable Both in Small and Great Monarchies.

"Madrid, 16th April, 1692.

[Signed] "Don Francisco de Seixas y Lovera."

This important and interesting collection apparently forms a complete cosmography of the world, as known in 1630. (The catalogue descriptions are printed entirely in capitals.)

"About this time Cornelis [van] Voerst returned with his family from the 'Colonia Batavica' [New Netherlands], which by our people has been founded in the Virginias; and about March, being again engaged to settle a new colony (plaatse), he sailed there with his wife and children."—Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniale Aanwinsten," 212B, fol. 140 recto, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

"Cornelius van Voerst till this time has been delayed by his masters at Amsterdam, while at the same time his wife and children were deemed to have already arrived in the Virginys [New Netherlands]. He would follow with two ships."—Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniale Aanwinsten," 212B, fol. 110 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

Regarding "a certain new ship" which was at this time being built (see p. 77), the records reveal neither its name nor size. The Dutch West Indies Co. owned at different times, between 1621 and 1626, three ships named "New Netherlands," of 110, 150, and 400 lasts burden, respectively. De Laet, in Jaerlijck Verhael (1644), 240, mentions under date of Aug., 1631, a ship "Nieuw-Nederlant," and under Sept. (same page) also a yacht "Nieuw-Nederlant," possibly the same vessel. In the fleet of the company three ships of 500 lasts are recorded.—De Laet, Jaerlijck Verhael (1644), Appendix, entitled "Kort Verhael," 3, 4. We know that, of the three ships of the name, one was "a great ship." It could not have been the ship "New Netherlands" which "was equipped in the spring" of 1624—a vessel of only 130 lasts (260 tons), "whereof Cornelis Jacobsz. May of Hoorn was skipper," and which brought over the first (?) colonists.—Wassenaar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 75; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149. Moreover, De Vries, himself an able skipper, saw the ship "in the beginning." He wrote that, on July 12, 1632, there arrived at Cowes from the Texel "the ship 'Nieuw-Nederlant,' of the West India Company, a great ship which was built in New Netherlands, which was bound for the West Indies, whereby I had [meaning with his own ship] good company."—Korte Historiaal (Alckmaer, 1635), 96. Also, on April 2, 1632, John Mason wrote, probably to Secretary Coke, a report of what the Hollanders had done by way of settling in the territory claimed by Great Britain. He declared they had "built ships there, whereof one was sent into Holland of 600 tunnes [300 lasts] or thereabouts," and said this was done on the "river of Manahata."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 17. See also March, 1633, and Nov. 22, 1635. From the foregoing evidence it seems a safe assumption that the "great ship" was the one classed officially by De Laet as of 400 lasts (800 tons).

In the Representation of July 28, 1649, one of the complaints against the company was the "great expense" for unnecessary things, among them the building of the ship "New Netherlands," which was placed "in the beginning."—Jameson, op. cit., 321.

In the year 1633, the ship "Nieuw-Nederlant" was captured and carried into Dunkirk.—Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 266, 273. What her subsequent fate was is unknown. Cf., however, N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 119 (Feb. 16, 1650).

June 12-22 On Aug. 26, 1629, "twelve gentlemen, among the most eminent in the Puritan party, held a meeting at Cambridge, England, and resolved to lead a migration to New England, provided the charter of the Massachusetts Bay Company, and the government established under it, could be transferred to that country." This resolution was the direct result of the intolerable situation brought about by the meddling disposition and wrong-headed obstinacy of Charles I, which culminated in the king's virtual refusal, in June, 1628, to grant the famous Petition of Right—a situation which resulted in the king's protracted experiment of governing without a parliament. No obstacle being raised to the removal to America of the government of the Mass. Bay Co., John Winthrop was selected as governor, and Thomas Dudley as deputy-governor. The leaders of the expedition sailed in April, 1630, on the "Arbella," and on June 12 landed at Salem. Before Christmas of that year, 17 ships, carrying over 1,000 passengers, had arrived in New England, and soon after the new colonists were engaged in starting settlements at Charlestown, Boston, Newtowne, Watertown, Roxbury, and Dorchester.—Winthrop's Jour. (1790), 1-21; Fiske, The Beginning of New Eng., 98 et seq.

Because of the unhealthfulness of Charlestown, John Winthrop and a number of colonists move across the Charles River, and settle at a place called by the Indians Shawmut. The colonists changed its name to Trimountain, but, on Sept. 4, the court at Charlestown decreed that it be called Boston.

The earliest mention of Staten Island by that name was, apparently, one found in a patent of the island granted on this date to Michiel Pauw. The name was derived from the states-general, and followed upon the Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions of June 7, 1629, art. v.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 2; Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 139-41.

Secretary Servatius Carpentier writes from Olinda de Penambuco to the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Zealand: "The yacht den Bruynvisch, which I bore private instructions, I again despatched immediately on the 3d instant, sending with it 20 men and 30 women, negroes, who were captured in the last prize, and also a little barley, as much as was necessary to convey the said blacks to Pavia. . . . The instructions as to the coast of Africa and Pavia it had carried out as desired."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 49, with Letters and Papers of Brazil, 1630-1632, in National Archives, The Hague.

1631

"Cornelius van Voerst is in his colony across the River, outside of the jurisdiction of the Governor, with whom he can not get on very well. This colony, the lord of Tienhoven, Pauw, at Amsterdam, has furnished with all necessaries and he is eius Loci quodammodo dominus.

"Johan van Voorst, a clever little fellow of fourteen years sailed this summer, 1631, to [join] his father [in the colony of Pavia]. It is a pity that he should not be better employed, and educated for a more civilized life, for in those places nothing but barbarism is found."—Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniale Aanwinsten," 212B, fol. 111 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

Then, without a break, but evidently entered at a later date [1632, q. v.], follows: "Johan, coming hither with a ship from New Netherlands and arriving in England, was detained there more than four months and arrived at Amsterdam in principio Julii, new style. With [the same ship, the Eendracht—see Apr. 5, 1632] came also all the authorities, governor director, secretary, minister, not being able to get along together very well and other arrangements will be made. Neefken [little cousin, evidently referring to Johan van Vorst] brought a letter from his father to cousin van Wyckersloot, in which he sent us and other relatives greetings and wrote that his son Hendrick had sailed as Assistant around the north [om de noorden, meaning, perhaps, up the Hudson, or along the Conn. and Mass. coast]; that he was no longer in his service, but must make some trips (maer wat moste besueken), and that he was reasonably proficient in the language [of the savages]."—Ibid.

Then, again without a break, follows some news about Brazil, and then this: "From New Netherlands or the Virginies there come several thousand beaver and other skins. Jan van Voerst, Cornelis' son, having come with the ship from New Netherlands or Virginia, was detained all summer in England. He came over in June and brought a letter from his father and two eagle's talons and a sea spider (scorpion). The officers there not being able to get along together, they all came back and other arrangements will be made, in order that the new colony may be better managed and promoted, as otherwise through their mismanagement (disorder) it would be entirely ruined. As the ships stayed away long beyond the usual period, the colonists there suffered greatly for want of grain and other necessaries which they expected from Holland."—Ibid.

It will be noticed that Buchelius states in one place that Johan van Vorst arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July and in another that he was detained all summer in England and came over in June. According to Eckhof, Michielius appeared before the Amsterdam Consistory on March 4, 1632. It is not unlikely therefore that Johan van Vorst was detained in England from the end of February until the end of June, and that he arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July, as stated.—See also 1630, — made by Mr. Van Laer. The translations which were used in the text prove to have been somewhat carelessly made.

- Feb. Roger Williams arrives at Boston from England. On April 12, 5-15 he became teacher in the Salem church. He was the first in America or Europe to proclaim the doctrine of full religious toleration; holding that the state should leave matters of religious opinion and worship to the conscience of the individual, and confine government to secular affairs.—Winthrop's Jour., I: 57, 61-62; Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I: 241-42.

1632

- In this year, the erection of the first church in Boston was commenced.—Winthrop's Jour., I: 89.
- Johan van Voorst, youthful son of Cornelis van Voorst, manager of the colony of Pavnion, doubtless in this year returned to Holland on the "Eendracht" (see April 5, 1632), as described by Arnoldus Buchelius in a note which, because of its close connection with other earlier items, has been printed under 1631 (q. v.). This note contains the important but hitherto unknown information that "On the same ship also arrived all the magistracy—the director-governor [Peter Minuit], the secretary [Johan van Remunde], and the clergyman [Jonas Michaelius]."—Koloniale Annunsten, 212B, fol. 111 verso, in Rijksarchief at the Hague.
- In this same connection Buchelius remarks: "As ships were detained longer than usual, the colonists there [in New Netherland] suffered greatly for want of wheat and other necessaries, which they expect from Holland."
- Mar. By the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, between France and 19-29 England, New France, Acadia, and Canada, are ceded to the dominion of France, and all British interests there are surrendered.

1633

- Apr. De Vries arrives before Fort Amsterdam—Korte Historiæ, 113. Hendrick de Forest sailed with De Vries, but left him at St. Martyn, and entered the service of the West India Co.—De Forest, A Walloon Family in Am., II: 353; Van Rensselaer Bowier

shortly after this time. Cf. Sept. 11, 1636.
- June In a memorial drawn up by the Amsterdam chamber of the 16 West India Company, at the request of the States of Holland, and presented on June 16, 1633, to the states general, for their information, in connection with the discussion of colonial questions at the peace negotiations then entered upon between Spain and the Netherlands, the directors state in regard to New Netherland:
"This part, which according to the climate [read: latitude], ought to be as warm and suitable for the cultivation of fruit as the extreme limits of France, toward Spain, is in fact almost colder than these, yes, even more northerly countries, so that the people sent thither by us have thus far been able to find but barely enough food to live and have not been a source of profit, but of detriment to the Company. It is true, the trade in peltries which is conducted there, is advantageous, but one year with another it can at the most bring home but between fifty and sixty thousand guilders" (in De vijftich duysent guilders, or fully fifty thousand guilders).—From Handelinge met die van d' andere zijde 1632/33/34, in National Archives, The Hague; pub. by Dr. M. G. de Boer, 1900, 343-62.

- Nov. A memorial of this date, addressed by Kiliaen van Rensselaer 25 to the Assembly of the XIX of the W. I. Co. (from Van Rensselaer-Bowier MSS., 235, citing Letter Book, f. 41-53b; printed in Dutch in Oud Holland, 1890, VIII: 55-69, as Appendix A to Mr. De Roever's articles on the colony of Rensselaerswyck), shows clearly the various selfish interests at work within the company from the very beginning, and their serious effect upon the prosperity of New Netherland. It reads (translated, footnotes being inserted in brackets):
"Noble, Honorable, Wise, Prudent and Very Discreet Gentlemen: Kiliaen van Rensselaer, in the capacity of patroon of his respective colonies situated within the jurisdiction of New Netherland, shows with all due reverence how he, the remonstrant, formerly director of said Company and commissioner of the aforesaid regions, found the affairs of New Netherland in the beginning of his administration, namely, that sundry colonists, as early as 1623, had been conveyed thither with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to carry on trade, principally in the furs abounding in that country. And considering that if this trade should be free to all without restriction, the fur-bearing animals would be too much hunted and the furs would be sold here below their value, to both the damage and the loss of the Company, which has as yet no other source of income from those regions to meet the expenses connected therewith, he therefore so influenced his fellow commissioners that they deemed it advisable to curtail this trade somewhat for a time; in the meanwhile planning how the Company, according to the charter, might settle the said regions at the least expense and with the greatest benefit to the country, considering that the same is a salu-brious and fertile land, situated from about 38° to 48° north latitude, being provided with an extraordinarily fine climate and many beautiful, deep rivers, embracing within its limits more land and coast, sea and river than all the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, from all of which, in time, much good may result to the Company; being, moreover, an excellent rendezvous for all ships, which can arrive there in 14 days from the West Indies, and being also well adapted for raising all kinds of grain and animals which could these be sent here or at least within other limits of the charter, as Cape Verde, Guinea and Brazil. Following this, it was found good, with the advice of the Assembly of the Nineteen, to send a large number of farmers, animals, horses, cows, sheep and other necessaries, in order thus to relieve the Company of the heavy expense of transporting all sorts of provisions needed by the people in that land. This intention was diametrically opposed to the views of those who had no other aim than to send their ships from here to trade in the aforesaid places, notwithstanding that it was clearly pointed out to them that such trading could bring no profit to the Company but rather decided damage and continual loss, since the amount of furs coming thence—seeing that the trading places are so distant from each other—could bear no heavy outlay; besides, that other nations of adjoining regions, when our ships should be away from there, would immediately seize and occupy these and keep us out, as they now do in Virginia, Canada, New England and elsewhere.

"Now when the aforesaid farmers and animals had been sent thither and when, as is generally the case with new undertakings, everything did not succeed at first as might be wished, certainly not nearly so well but that the contrary minded could find occasion for fault-finding, the Company proceeded after this fashion: on the one hand, since there were now farmers and animals, they decided that little or no provisions ought to be sent, not considering that it takes time to clear the land before it can be plowed or cultivated and that in the beginning several horses and cows perished which they would not replace, whereby the people were forced to take the merchandise and trade it for provisions, thus damaging the Company to an incredible number of thousands; on the other hand, instead of an ordinary freighter [een ordinair veerman] of large hold which would need to sail only once a year, they have sent usually two, three and more small vessels, so overloaded with skippers, officers, provisions and ammunition that the three together could not take in half as much for the country as the larger alone [while the latter would not have cost [much more] than each of the small vessels in view of the fact that usually many people sail back and forth who could man the large ship but would overload the small ones, which error has cost the Company no less than the other.

"By these means and many others, too long to be here related, the condition of New Netherland continuously deteriorating, all the blame was laid mainly to the account of those who favored the colonization, and especially to the commissioners for that region, who to clear themselves asserted that they were willing to undertake the colonization at their own expense and without cost to the Company, if the Company would only favor the matter a little and render some assistance, and that they would make no objection and would be satisfied if all participants should be thereunto invited and public freedoms and exemptions framed concerning it. This proposition, though as just as anything in the world can be, nevertheless met with great difficulty before it could be brought about. The contrary minded, seeing that they could no longer prevent it directly, began indirectly under pretext of economy to curtail these freedoms, finding no other way than to exclude the fur trade, which had formerly been granted to others who had been sent there and were

supported by the Company, asserting that this colonization had no other intent than to lay the expenses to the Company's charge and to take the trade in furs away from it, which was pure calumny, as the following will clearly show, since several of the Colonies were registered before the Freedoms were extended to include the fur trade. And now when the contrary minded could no longer prevent action, some of the Freedoms and Exemptions were finally passed by the Assembly of the Nineteen, March 10, 1628, with the exclusion of the fur trade however, which was the only objection of the opponents and amounts to little, as will later appear. That the Freedoms were too much limited and the patroons too much restricted caused great discontent among the chief participants, and on February 1, 1629, this grievance was publicly stated (not by him, the remonstrant, who was director elected by the chief participants, but by Mr. Charles Looten and others), and request made that a committee be appointed to amend the Freedoms which had been granted, who, being nominated the third of the same month, took the matter up and drafted several articles, which, however, through his refusal (to serve on the committee) because he was himself in favor of the colonization, were never communicated to him, the remonstrant; and in order to give no one any cause for reproach, although at liberty to do so, he would accept no appointment, either from the directors or from the chief participants, to investigate this matter and also refused to be present at such investigations even when the Assembly of the Nineteen by resolution of October 25, 1628, thereto invited him and opened the door, but charged his associate [Assessor] with the direction thereof without communicating with him, which he is obliged to add here, since the chief participants have been made to believe, in order to vilify him, that he, the remonstrant, is the greatest cause thereof (although the very opposite is manifest and, even if it were true, it would be no disgrace to him but praiseworthy). Hereupon it happened that the delegates of the chief participants setting out the 21st of February following and presenting themselves in person in competent numbers before the Assembly of the Nineteen, requested that the Assembly would make an agreement with them, since they intended to organize colonies and were not satisfied with the former Freedoms. (Alas, how have these men now changed!) And doing all they could, they were unable to bring the matter to a conclusion in the Assembly, since the contrary minded (with whom they are now on such good terms as the following will prove) opposed them, yet they accomplished this much that the Assembly of the Nineteen saw fit on the 26th of the same month to pass a resolution making the propositions of the chief participants a subject for discussion at the next meeting and to this end ordering the points of difference to be set forth and sent to the Chambers; whereupon it followed that the leading Chamber of Amsterdam issued a call for a meeting on April 18, 1629, article 2 of which reads as follows: "To reconsider all the former articles, freedoms and exemptions granted the respective colonies in several former meetings and the matters connected therewith, and to deliberate whether the same might be amplified by the accompanying articles requested by several influential participants and amended as the occasion requires." To consider which articles, a committee was appointed the 29th of May following, who after many long debates finally decided the matter and presented the amendments to the Assembly, who read them several times, voted upon them and finally approved them in full, June 7, 1629, as they stand recorded in the Resolution Book and were afterwards issued in public print; and these have never been revoked or retracted.

"Hereupon several registrations were immediately made, and the work was undertaken with great courage by many. However, it did not last long for the opponents rested not but watched all transactions sharply, finding a pretext in that the late Mr Samuel Godijn, some time before, viz in December 1628, sent two persons thither with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam and knowledge of the chief participants, according to the report of February 1, 1629, provided with merchandise, to buy and pay for the places indicated to them, with further consent that he might exchange his remaining merchandise for furs, but must consult with the Company in regard to this matter, since at the time of sending his people the Freedoms had not been extended to the fur trade, all done in conformity with the letter of December 1628 [day of the month left blank in the Letter Book], addressed to the director of New Netherland. These persons on returning home reported with joy that, to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants, though in spite of the opponents, they had purchased, paid for and obtained title to the land; that, furthermore, they had exchanged the remaining merchandise for furs and sent these with bill of lading and with knowledge of the director to their patroon. The returns of the sale of these furs, amounting to about $5,600 (from which must be deducted the merchandise given in exchange, the interest, the insurance, the expenses, the freight and the duty to the Company), were so magnified by the contrary minded, who had their supporters as well among the directors as among the chief participants, that [it seemed that] two individuals with but a small quantity of merchandise had purchased a large quantity of land and had besides obtained immense returns, from which these opponents took occasion to proclaim that the patroons were not contemplating colonization at all, but only the securing to themselves of the fur trade and depriving the Company of the same, which would be total ruin to the Company as regards [profit from] these regions, not knowing or else intentionally ignoring that the expenses of the late Mr Godijn would first come in when he should be obliged to send with his own ships at his own expense so many people, animals, provisions and other necessities, that these $5,600 would not even enter into consideration; yet by their calumnies they brought it about that they found many sympathizers who gave credence to the same. Thus they injured Mr Godijn exceedingly, withholding from him to this day the aforesaid $5,600 (which he must yet seek to obtain by suit), furthermore constraining him to dismiss the people whom he had undertaken to convey thither and surrender them to the Company, also to part with his merchandise and provisions which he had brought together with difficulty and put the same in the hands of the Company. They did not stop even here but sought to make the remonstrant also odious (although he, as above stated, had acted so impartially in the matter), asserting that he and the other patroons had taken possession of the best places and that those who followed would come too late, though the contrary is true since not a hundredth part of the land has as yet been trodden by Christian foot, and daily and even by the latest letters new places, far exceeding the first, are revealed, where there is room enough for directors, chief and lesser participants and all the inhabitants of these lands. By these means, however, in addition to the former slanders of the late Godijn, they brought it about that several chief participants, yes, even some of those who had so fervently supported the affair, now became prejudiced and opposed to it, siding with the contrary minded, who, being now strengthened, sought means to insult the remonstrant publicly at the meeting of the chief participants, inasmuch that five or six of them came together two hours before the meeting in order to devise some way of accomplishing their ends in the meeting, which they would also have carried through had not the remonstrant been warned of it and been on his guard, refuting with sound arguments their slanders which, with your permission, they spit out (of which they may well be ashamed), charging that he and the other commissioners of New Netherland, who were patroons, had damaged the land by some hundred thousands for the sake of their own designs (of which damage not they, but the contrary minded are the cause, as has already been mentioned). They proceeded with such bitter injuries against others who had also registered colonies, that they thereby intimidated several, who were obliged to abandon the work already begun because others who shared therein declined to go on. And thus was undermined the necessary, laudable and good work which had been undertaken with such exertion and had taken so many years and had been discussed at so many meetings of the Nineteen and examined by all the Chambers, in and before its beginning, by so little an occasion as the return of the $5,600, concerning which of a truth it may be said, that instead of shearing the sheep when they had wool, they were skinned at birth when they had no wool, and all this under the pretext that the patroons had no other design than to deprive the Company of the fur trade and charge the expenses to them, as has been heretofore mentioned.

"In order now to prove what a shameful slander this is, and on the contrary to show the diligence in the matter of colonizing the aforesaid region of the late Godijn aforesaid in his own colony, in which the remonstrant shared and was included, and also what the remonstrant himself has accomplished in his colony and what expenditures they together have made in face of the opposition they received, the following brief statement is given. In December 1630 they equipped a ship of about 150 lasts, named de Walvis, ballasting it with all kinds of materials, such as lime, brick and tiles, also put-

Nov. boats for whaling, all kinds of ammunition, provisions and merchandise, 25 and over 80 persons, costing all together, including the yacht de Salm, of which mention will hereafter be made, over 50,000 guilders, which indeed, is ten times more than the 15,600 which in the beginning they received for their returns, upon which all their calamities were founded. With this ship and people, they, the remonstrants, took possession of, settled and peopled the fertile and well wooded island of Tortuga, located on the northwestern side of Hispasola, placing thereon over 25 able-bodied men, well fitted out, besides the people [Halde oock mede enigh Volck om te setten aen 't Eylant van Tortuga in West-Indien/daer wy met setigh Francken ghecontracteert hadden/het selve Eylant voor ons te houden als een Colonie onder de H. M. H. Staten ende West-Indische Compagnie]. We also had on board some people to land at the island of Tortuga in the West Indies, having contracted with sixty Frenchmen to hold the said island for us as a colony under the High and Mighty Lords the States General and the West India Company. De Vries, Korte Historiael, p. 95) of the Frenchman Francoys Rouland, and several negroes, supplied with provisions, arms, ammunition and other necessities, besides proper instructions, all in accordance with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam, of date August 28, 1630, which was given for one voyage only. And although the remonstrants would afterwards in accordance with their request of March 15, 1632, very gladly have assisted and continued the work or consented that the Company should do so itself, they could by resolution of the 25th of the same month obtain no other action than that the said [second] voyage was refused them notwithstanding the Company did not undertake it, and so this beautiful island fell into the hands of the English losing all that had been expended on it, scattering half the people and causing the rest to perish, for which damage they will seek redress at the proper time.

"With this aforesaid ship de Walvis, they also in 1631 took possession of the bay of the South River in New Netherland, occupying the place of their colony with 28 persons engaged in whaling and farming, and made suitable fortifications, so that in July of the same year their cows calved and their lands were seeded and covered with a fine crop, until finally by the error of their commis all the people and the animals were lamentably killed, whereby they suffered incalculable damage, which damage the remonstrants attempted to repair in the year 1632 with the former ship den Walvis and besought the Company to lend a helping hand, who neither by word nor deed would render any assistance but forbade them by resolution of April 26, 1632, to take with them more than 300 guilders worth of merchandise, for which they obtained about 200 beaver and otter skins, while they would have obtained much more from nations who had never traded with the Company if they had had more merchandise, from which the Company would have realized the duty of one guilder per skin, which [profits] both now lose. And the most intolerable of all is, that after the remonstrants had given these 205 skins upon their arrival into the hands of the Chamber of Amsterdam that it might levy its duty on the same, this Chamber threw them among and mingled them with its own skins and also sold them with its own goods, contrary to the will of the remonstrants, just as if all the goods of the patroons were free booty or confiscated (who is so perfect, that he can bear all this wrong!), and still they must hear that they intend nothing else than at small expense to deprive the Company of the furs.

"Furthermore, he, the remonstrant, in December 1630 [sent] the yacht de Salm, accompanied by the aforesaid ship den Walvis, to his granted colony, the island du Sable, in order that this yacht, being supplied with people, provisions and all necessities, might take possession of said island and settle it, since it was uninhabited and abandoned by the French, which yacht, to his misfortune, was captured and brought into Dunkirk.

"What the remonstrant has further done towards the promotion of the population of his colony called Rensselaerswyck, on the North River of New Netherland, may be seen from his declaration of December 2, 1630, submitted to the Chamber of Amsterdam, and so continuing from year to year, until in July 1632 he was provided with people and animals enough to start five farms, which would have been done had not the Company by resolution of July 20, 1632, refused him carpenters, smiths and other mechanics, when these were not working for the Company, although he was willing to pay their expenses to the Company; this is quite too partial a policy, not only hindering him in his good undertaking, but doing so to the damage of the Company which would otherwise have had the benefit of the wages, while they on the contrary, according to the last letter written him from there, do employ his carpenters and others of his people in their service.

"The Company has never attempted to make room in their ships, according to the tenth article of the Freedoms, for the transportation of animals and such like, only allowing him to place a few calves on the upper deck, and they were all thrown overboard in the encounter with the Turks. The Company also prevented him from conveying his animals from the Manhattans to his colony, and most of them died from rough treatment and the like, which loss he also means to recover from the Company. It has likewise happened lately that the director of New Netherland has held his people idle for a long time at the Manhattans and would not let them travel farther up the river unless they took an unlawful oath, given him by the Chamber of Amsterdam, although these persons had already here taken the usual oath and had besides given bond and security to the satisfaction of the Assembly.

"The Company by the above resolution of July 20, 1632, also refused to give him any merchandise in that country to purchase the rest of his territory, notwithstanding his reasonable request, and by the same resolution declined to furnish his people with any provisions or victuals in exchange for grain, butter, cheese and the like with which they would pay, although their people would have suffered from hunger if his farmers had not supplied them with wheat and rye, ground in his mill (as the Company has none at that place); and what is worst of all and most to be regretted, instead of the servants of the Company being on good terms with the patroons and their servants, they on the contrary have appointed as commis at Fort Orange, situated in his colony, against the wishes of the remonstrant, a person who has publicly slandered the Company, has helped those sailing into that region from other kingdoms to buy the smuggled furs and is disliked by the savages, who complain that years ago he treated them cruelly, so that they will not deal with him but on the contrary try to affront him, to the Company's injury, as by way of revenge they have already burned the yacht de Bever which was anchored there, and according to rumor (as the remonstrant is informed by letter) they seem to have killed all the remonstrant's animals, horses, cows, sheep and hogs, apparently also on account of the hatred they bear towards him [the commis]. This person is also highly antagonistic to the remonstrant, since he has been told what reports of him the remonstrant made during his administration, although he and others to whom the administration was committed reported nothing but the truth. What trouble the remonstrant has to expect from this can be easily understood, for either his colony will be ruined by the savages in order to affront the commis at Fort Orange or, if this does not happen through the savages, then the commis himself will do his best towards it. So the case stands thus, that probably the whole trade of Fort Orange will be lost to the Company and the remonstrant's colony will be destroyed without hope of redress, against which the necessary precautions should be taken.

"All this strife is caused solely by the opponents of the colonization and of the patroons who, when the latter as a result of the change had retired from the administration, obtained full power to carry out all their plans (upsetting the existing order of things and calling home all the officials, who having no other occupation will spy out the land, this one on behalf of France and that one on behalf of England, as has already happened and as will happen again); it was even decided by resolution of March 25, 1632, with the advice of lawyers and counselors, despite the opposition of the patroons, to deprive them of the Freedoms and Exemptions which had been granted and given to them with so much difficulty by the Assembly of the Nineteen.

"Now the main cause of all these differences is nothing but the trade in furs or peltries found in that country and the question by whom it shall be conducted. The contrary minded maintain that it will be most profitable for the Company to have only the directors of the Company trade in furs, excluding all patroons, colonists and others. The patroons, on the other hand, maintain that this trade can be carried on, not [only] without loss to the Company, [but] in all cases, with less expense and more profit to the Company, by their servants than by those of the Company, and that they can make a profit and pay duty to the Company where the Company must suffer loss. As to the first alternative, instead of this course being the most profitable for the Company, it is really true that it will bring not profit but loss, considering that out of all New Netherland only 60,000 or 70,000 guilders at the most can be obtained in returns, which by their methods will not be increased but diminished, as will be further shown. In order to get these 60,000 or 70,000 guilders, it is necessary that at least once a year a well equipped vessel be sent thither, supplied with merchandise for trading, especially if the colonies were gone, since then the provisions for the employees in that country must be sent along from here. Hereto must be added that in case the vessel should perish, not only would all the trade for that year be lost but their people in that country would be in great danger of famine, and besides, that to suspend business even for one year would diminish the fur trade and perhaps divert it entirely. Moreover the fur trade in New Netherland is carried on, not in one place (as on the river of Canada), but what is much more costly in many places, and these not only many convenient but also many inconvenient places far distant from each other, as the bay of the South River, 30 leagues from the Manhatans, not up the river, but from bay to bay over the open sea. The *Sanhekan*s, a trading post on the South River, is in addition to the aforesaid 30 leagues, 35 leagues farther up the river, making 65 leagues from the aforesaid Manhatans. Up the North River to Fort Orange is quite 40 leagues. To the north, up to the Sloeps-baye (Om de noort tot aen de Sloeps-baye. Sloeps-baye was the Dutch name for Narragansett Bay, in Rhode Island) is also fully 40 leagues, so that the distance for a single trip would be about 175 leagues going and as much returning, making 350 leagues for an entire journey. Besides this, the furs are not all to be found at these places but are scattered about among many rivers and brooks, which must be sailed up and down, sometimes 10 or 20 leagues, and the savages are at enmity with each other almost everywhere and do not allow each other to pass to and fro. Moreover, since it sometimes freezes three or four months continuously in that country, the rivers are closed, not only by storm and wind but also by ice, and all the trading posts are cut off from the Manhatans, the place of rendezvous. All this being true and perhaps unknown to many, it follows of necessity that these places must be provided with forts, and also with sloops to fetch and carry goods to and fro from the places of rendezvous, or else that yachts or sloops touch at these places and do the trading. It must also be taken into consideration that, the best season of the year being the winter time when most fur-bearing animals are caught, these yachts and sloops would have to leave their trading posts and go to the place of rendezvous, so that instead of the aforesaid distance of 350 leagues, going and coming, at least 700 leagues would have to be covered in two journeys. And then there is the sailing back and forth to furnish each other with supplies and information of everything, in addition to the risk of perishing by water and, if they be not strongly enough manned, of being attacked on land by the savages (as they have attempted more than once). All this being well considered, it will be found, no matter how economically it may be managed, that the ship which must go with merchandise from the fatherland and return—not counting the interest, risk and ill usage—the garrison and fort at the Manhatans, the garrison and fort at Fort Orange, the yachts and sloops for the trade on the South River and the northern regions, besides the sloops plying between, counting all the expenses of building, mounting, equipping, keeping up, manning and victualing, will cost so much that the aforesaid 60,000 or 70,000 guilders, which are the utmost to be expected thence, will come far short by many thousands; besides they must also expect and withstand general uprisings of the savages; all of which the remonstrant offers to prove and establish and has often maintained for many years. But they would grant him no hearing and even accused him of doing it all for his own benefit in order to take away the trade from the Company, although he, as stated in the beginning, was the sole cause of this trade being restricted which formerly stood free and open. He argues that the nature of those regions being well examined, the case stands thus, that nothing can be accomplished there by poor people, who are like a dying plant or leaking roof, also that the rich and well-to-do will not go there themselves, but that a good work can be accomplished by the two, just as the blind can carry the crippled and the crippled can show the way to the blind, so the rich may stay at home and send their money thither and the poor may go and perform their work with the money of the rich. To this end freedoms and exemptions were needed in order to raise up patroons who should send out many laborers, as it appeared that the remonstrant and his associates have done, and many others would have followed their example had they not been treated so indiscreetly and been forced to suffer loss, with loss also to the Company.

Nov.

“But to return to the subject, in order to dispose of the objections of the contrary minded who may say that much more than 60,000 or 70,000 guilders could be gotten there annually, especially if the colonists who so defraud them were gone and if attention were devoted entirely to the benefit of the trade, it should be stated that the remonstrant gives much the highest figure, and that during the ten years that the Company has traded there, taking one year with another, there has never been nearly so much as this received, but ordinarily only 50,000 or 60,000 guilders. But instead of this being the fault of the colonists, the contrary appears; for instance during the two years when the late Mr Godijn and his people were trading in Swanendael, the Company received from the South River through their servants a no less quantity of skins than in former or later years, but he obtained his furs in addition to these by bartering with other tribes. This caused so much jealousy that the Company ordered their director to send a commis there, which was done [with the result that the Company's servants], trading close by the people of Godijn, deprived him in one year of over 500 skins in Swanendael alone, for which the Company is justly bound to pay, since they had never obtained more than 20 to 30 skins a year in that region before this colony was started. It is maintained with insufferable impertinence that the Company has excluded all but themselves, not only from the fur trade, but even from the whale fishery, etc., just as if their High Mightinesses, having granted the Company the Guinea trade to the exclusion of all others, had not shut out themselves, but were alone allowed to send merchandise and to trade for gold through one or two commisen, while the Company was obliged to pay for all the other expenses of forts and fitting out of ships. It is evident that many wish the patroons to found colonies to their own loss, and then to have [the Company] send a commis or “assistant,” who under their sheltering wings and protection may buy in the furs at small cost and deprive the patroons of them, notwithstanding the fact that all the game and the free right of hunting within their territory has been granted to the patroons by the 23d [Should be 22d] article of the Freedoms.

“It is further to be considered that the Company, to protect them against attacks of the savages, must keep their forts, yachts, and sloops manned by many idle people, who must cost much more than the people of the patroons, since they send not idlers but laborers who in some degree must earn their bread and need but one commis and “assistant” to do all the business for which the Company needs at least 25 persons; besides, the servants of the Company, serving for hire, are only seeking to make a good deal of money and then get away; they will not trouble themselves to make perilous journeys inland, because their pay goes on just the same. The patroons' people, on the contrary, having families of women and children, who after some time will become established there, try to make terms with the savages and, pushing far inland for their own profit, discover much more than do those who only lie in garrison. So that it is far more profitable for the Company to have no expenses, turn over the trade to the patroons and draw a clear profit than to deprive the patroons of their privileges and on the other hand encumber themselves with the maintenance of forts, sloops, yachts and people, the which expenses, as before stated, amount to so much that they suffer loss where they otherwise might draw a clear profit. Besides this loss, which must be borne, the colonies also will be ruined if they are shut off from the fur trade. The farms which now afford their sustenance will at the same time fail and all provisions must then be sent over from here as before at ten times the expense. To go on doing this, added to the loss, would be double folly, while on the other hand [everything would go well] if the trade were granted to the patroons, who have money and means to send everything at their own expense, which right of trade, as stated above, was formerly with good intentions (though too soon for the time) fully granted to the poor people, who having no means had to be supplied by the Company with everything. Is it not better that the Company should draw a clear profit than make themselves trouble and loss?

“Are not the contrary minded well aware that their course will never increase the trade because the savages, who are now stronger than ourselves, will not allow others who are hostile and live farther away and have many furs to pass through their territory, and that this would be quite different if we had stronger colonies? Yes, that the Maguaes, who will not allow the French savages who now

1633 trade on the river of Canada and who live nearer to us than to them
Nov. [the French] to pass through to come to us, might through persuasion 25 or fear sooner be moved to do so and that from these savages more furs could be obtained than are bartered now in all New Netherlands? This is only one of many things, but should be well considered as it can be accomplished in no other way than by establishing colonies. It is not the contrary minded comprehend that if they had not so unbearably treated the first patroons but had given them a helping hand, so that in place of such great loss they might have made a little profit, great numbers would have followed them?
Do not these people know that they alone are the cause of the loss of the island Tortuga and other places, and also that various islands in the West Indies, the east side of the South River, the Fresh River, the Sankhans on the South River, and also the Sackenames, for all of which colonies were registered, were not settled because the founders, on account of these harsh proceedings, gave up and let the work go which would otherwise have had such great results?
And is it not also certain that they alone are the cause that from the beginning the Company has lost so much in those regions and is still daily losing and causing others to lose, where on both sides they might have made large gains and have fared well, because they continually go against the stream, doing what they should leave undone, fearing what they should wish for, blaming whom they should praise, envying whom they should pity, hindering whom they should help, and who by these proceedings have nothing else to expect, than to lose what they still have?

"All of this the remonstrant has kept secret until now, but having been solicited by resolution of the 19th inst. to make a statement of these grievances, he could not in good faith neglect to put the same in writing, in the shape of a complaint. Addressing himself first to the deputies from their High Mightinesses, he prays them in all submission so to arrange this matter that the government of this country be not deprived of such a spacious, beautiful and well situated territory for which other nations are so earnestly longing, having already settled near its boundaries on the east and west as well as on the north, which surely will happen if the course which has been taken for some years back be persisted in, but that, on the contrary, it may flourish under the authority of their High Mightinesses and the direction of the Company and that to this end the populating for which their High Mightinesses made such special provisions by the 2d article of the charter of the West India Company may be duly promoted, those who labor zealously therein supported and continued, the conceded Freedoms and Exemptions with amplification of the same not only maintained but even in spite of all passion and chicanery enlarged and extended in so far as it can be done without loss to the Company in order that persons who have been disheartened may be again inspired to resume the work with courage, the patroons receive indemnification for all losses which they have suffered, what they have obtained by right enjoyed by them in rest and peace and, above all things, the spread of the Christian reformed religion promoted in those regions.

"Addressing himself then to the directors of the respective Chambers, the remonstrant urges them to so manage the affairs of New Netherlands that the Company, instead of continual loss, may receive a vast annual income; to examine the course pursued for some years and to charge the instigators of the same to draw up a complete statement showing in what way the Company can make a profit instead of proceeding blindly and passionately as heretofore.

"Further he prays the deputies of the Chamber of Amsterdam that they will be pleased to use their influence in their Chamber that no passionate persons be appointed as commissioners for that work, but only reasonable men who are in sympathy with the work and understand their business, and to recall the commissis of Fort Orange, who is not only antagonistic to the remonstrant but of no service to the Company.

"And finally he prays the lords directors and representatives [Assessores; i. e. associate directors representing the chief participants] of the chief participants, in particular those of the Chamber of Amsterdam, to be pleased to defend him in the assembly of the chief participants against all calumnies and injuries which have been or may be spread against the remonstrant and his associates, notwithstanding their innocence.

"To all of which the remonstrant awaits the favorable resolution of the very honorable assembly."

In a letter written on April 23, 1634, from Amsterdam, by Apr.
Kiliaen van Rensselaer to Wouter van Twiller, reproduced in Van 23 Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 270, Van Rensselaer says: "They have secretly tried to make Isaac de Rasière, who married the niece of Ray [a director of the West India Co.], director in your place, as I have only lately found out. . . . It was not until lately that Aldrich could get permission to order a suit of clothes for you (since they were busy with Rasière. . . .)"

The king places the superintendence of the English colonies in 28-the hands of a commission led by William Laud, Archbishop of May Canterbury. The members of the commission have power to "impose penalties and imprisonment for offences in ecclesiastical matters; to remove Governors, and require an account of their government; to appoint judges and magistrates, and establish courts; to hear and determine all manner of complaints from the colonies; to have power over all charters and patents; and to revoke those surreptitiously or unduly obtained."—Cal. of State Papers,

The Council of New England agrees upon "several divisions of Feb.
lands upon the sea coasts of New England, to be immediately held 3-13 of His Majesty, which were granted to the Patentes, Adventurers, and Council of New England by charter, by King James I." On April 18, leases for 3,000 years were granted, and on April 22, several deeds of feoffment were made to the several proprietors.
Capt. John Mason received certain lands, "to be called the province of New Hampshire," and an additional 10,000 acres "to be called Masonia;" William, Lord Alexander, received that part of the main land from St. Croix along the sea coast to Pemaquid, and up to the Kenebeck River, and "the island of Matowack, or Loog Island. . . . to be hereafter called the Isle of Sterling;" and the Marquis of Hamilton received certain lands "to be henceforth called the county of New Cambridge."—Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 195, 204. On April 25, the members of the council drew up a petition to the king stating that, as "their endeavors to advance the plantation of New England" had been "attended with frequent troubles and great charges," and as they had been "assaulted with sharp litigious questions before the Privy Council by the Virginia Company," they had decided to surrender their charter to the king, "with reservation of their lawful rights." They now ask "that particular grants of the proportions of land they have mutually agreed on may be passed to them, that having a settled government, they may cheerfully proceed in planting the several provinces."—Ibid., 204-5, 206. The charter was surrendered on June 7.—Ibid., 209.

The directors at Amsterdam make the following minute: "A June petitioo of [Pieter Pietersen] Bylevelt is presented, requesting com- 14 pensation for the loss which he claims to have sustained by his recall from New Netherlands, the same being estimated at about 7,000 guilders. Resolved to request the gentlemen who were Commissioners at the time of his recall from New Netherlands to inform the present Commissioners of New Netherlands of the reasons for his recall."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 39v0.

Pieter Pietersen Bylevelt was recalled from New Netherlands in 1631, and sold his cattle on farm No. 3 to Kiliaen van Rensselaer on July 20, 1632, when he was in Amsterdam. He probably returned to Holland with Director Peter Miquit, on the Eendracht, in the spring of 1632.—See Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 192, 225, 291; Buchelius (Kol. Aantw., 212B, fol. 129-129 verso) transcribes Oct.

a letter, dated Amsterdam, Oct. 2, 1636, from Charlet, director of 2 the West India Co. (It would seem as if this name must be intended for Pieter Varleth. Buchelius gives after the name Charlet "dir.
of the W. I. Co. for the prov. of Utrecht, who took the place of . . .
Pauw." Buchelius, however, came from, or had relatives at, Utrecht, and must have known the name of Varleth. He was himself a shareholder in the West India Co.) This letter is addressed

- 1636 to Buchelius' cousin, Corn. van Wyckerloot, and states: "On Oct. 2 Sunday, we received news that there arrived at Tessel [the Texel] the yacht 'de Sevensterre,' coming from New Netherland. The cargo consists of about 8000 beaver and otter skins, a quantity of Virginia tobacco, more than 200 ox hides & other things. They report that matters there stood as before. A large quantity of grain grown there was in stock."

- There is an estate, or country-seat, called "Otterspoor" about a mile north of Maarsse and about four miles south-west of Tienhoven, on the river Vecht, in the province of Utrecht. The tract in Harlem (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967) may have been so named by Van Tienhoven, in memory of the "Otterspoor" estate in Utrecht.
 Mar. 1— Colonists, led by William Coddington and Anne Hutchinson, Hook) northward to the River Schuykill, no limit being assigned towards the interior."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV:

 Apr. 28 The first document in volume one of the Register of the Provincial Secretary (N. Y. Col. MSS., I) is a lease executed before Cornelis van Tienhoven, secretary in New Netherland, on April 19, 1638.
 In the protocol of Notary Frederick van Baesehem, No. 318, fol.
 64-64v, in the city archives at Amsterdam, Mr. Van Laer found, however, a declaration by Andries Hudde, dated Jan. 31, 1639, stating that, on April 28, 1638, he wrote at Fort Amsterdam, in his capacity as secretary in New Netherland, a power of attorney from Cornelis van Tienhoven to Adriaen Janz. Haes, to collect the inheritance of his grandfather, Cornelis Cornelisz. [van Tienhoven].
 In this declaration, Hudde is referred to as "gewestenen Secretaris van Nieuwderlandt in America, inwoonder deser Stede Amsterdamt,"—i.e. formerly secretary of New Netherland in America, inhabitant (or resident) of this city of Amsterdam.
 O'Callaghan, in The Register of New Netherland, mentions Hudde as secretary, as well as surveyor, but does not fix the period during which he held the former office. From the item just quoted, which was supplied by Mr. Van Laer, it seems clear that Hudde immediately preceded Van Tienhoven as secretary, doubtless relinquishing this office on April 1, 1638 (q. v.), when Van Tienhoven was appointed.
 The fact that the document cited above was signed by Hudde, in his capacity as secretary, on April 28, 1638, probably indicates that Van Tienhoven, being a party in interest, sought the services of his predecessor in the preparation of a power of attorney to himself; and that, in order to make the document legal, they agreed that it should be signed by Hudde as secretary.

"At length, on March 1st, the Rensselaerswyck, surrounded by an escort of whales, 'some ten or twenty swimming, for at least two hours about our ship,' approached her destination. On the same day the skipper anchored 'behind Godyn's Point' (Sandy Hook) and entered in the log the fervent exclamation, 'God be praised for his mercy.' The wind not being favorable, the vessel remained where it was for a few days and the ship's boat took some of the passengers ashore 'for the purpose of shooting geese.' On March 5, 1637, the ship anchored off 'Manatans. . . . The yacht, after all the business connected with it was completed, sailed up the river to Rensselaerswyck with the patron's colonists, and was gone nearly three months [Vander Rensselaer Bavier MSS., 375-79.]

"Meanwhile Hendrick and Isaac [de Forest], the former now thirty-one years old and the latter ten years his junior, lost no time in seeking a favorable situation for a plantation. They came prepared to earn their living by raising tobacco, for which it was said the soil of Manhattan Island 'on account of its great fertility was considered well adapted.' A stretch of rich bottom land in the northern part of the island was soon selected. This tract was called 'Muscoota' (the flat land) by the Indians, who had doubtless already cleared and cultivated a considerable part of it.

"Hendrick promptly secured from Director van Twiller a 'grant' [A verbal grant was all that was necessary in the very earliest days, but settlers were led to expect that a ground brief would be given to them after they had held and improved their land for two years. The period was often, however, much longer.]
 of one hundred morgens of land (about two hundred acres) on this fertile plain, extending 'between the hills and the kill'; that is, to give approximate boundaries, from the high land we know as Morningside Heights to a little stream now called Harlem Creek, which rose not far from the present Mount Morris Park and ran in a southerly and easterly direction until it emptied into the Harlem River. The northern boundary of the tract was at about 124th Street, while on the south it included the high land in Central Park at about 109th Street. Near this latter boundary was a copious spring, or, as the Dutch called it, 'fonteyn,' which still flows almost as it did then, a rippling brook with little waterfalls, until it empties into Harlem Mere in the northern part of the park.

"To build a house on such property was not an easy matter in 1637. The land had first to be cleared and many logs prepared, for not only were they to be used for the frame of the house and barn, but also for a heavy stockade or palisade which must be erected to surround all the buildings. This was to serve as a protection from wild beasts for the settlers and their live stock, and also as a defense against the Indians, whose trail ran near the house. A great deal of arduous labor was involved, but for this it was possible to secure the services of the 'werkbaas' (workboss) and certain slaves who were owned and maintained in New Amsterdam by the West India Company and let out for hire to the inhabitants.
 Indeed, there is little doubt that the werkbaas was so employed on Hendrick's land, for in a deposition of March 22, 1639, concerning buildings erected and work done in New Netherland through official aid during van Twiller's time, is the statement,
 "Much work has been done at la Montagne's Bouwery." [La Montagne owned this tract later.] Besides this it was afterward shown that the werkbaas knew all about Hendrick's original contract with Tobias Teunissen and Willem Bout, who undoubtedly helped in the cultivation of Hendrick's houwery and in the building of his house; for Tobias was a good practical farmer and Willem, we know, was an excellent carpenter.

"The house is said to have been 42 feet long, 18 feet wide with 2 doors [N. Y. Col. MSS., I: 59]. This description (the original of which was destroyed in the fire that damaged the State Capitol at Albany in 1911) is taken from O'Callaghan's translation, which is not always quite accurate. The Dutch farmhouse of that period was a combination of dwelling-house in front and barn in the rear. Judging from O'Callaghan's translations of the specifications of other houses, there is very little doubt that the term which he translates as 'doors' was in the original text 'uytlaeten,' literally outlets or extensions. This expression does not refer to doors but to long narrow compartments, usually extending the full length of the barn between the outer walls and the posts which supported the roof, as indicated in the plan below [see p. 952]. The width, eighteen feet, refers to the open floor in the centre, which was used for threshing.
 The spaces on the sides, the 'uytlaeten,' were for stabling purposes, and the open lots above them for fodder. [Cf. July 18, 1641.]

1638 "The house had a thatched roof made of reeds, for the con-July struction of which nine hundred bundles were used; it had also 23 a brick chimney, which it took "Dirck the mason" ten days to build.
 A brick chimney was an unusual luxury. The early chimneys were frequently 'catted'; in other words, a square chimney was made of short logs crossed at the corners, all the interstices of which were filled in and covered with clay. Of course such a method of construction was the cause of many fires.

"Hendrick's house may have been 'half timbered;' that is, the frame built of heavy timbers and the wall spaces between them filled with clay or stone. On the other hand, it is not unlikely that it was clapboarded. Many farmhouses were so built even in those early days. After the carpenters had put up the frame, the farmers themselves would often nail on the clapboards. Jasper Donckaerts, who travelled through this part of New Netherland in 1679, gives a graphic even if a cheerless account of the clapboarded houses, as follows:—

"The dwellings are so wretchedly constructed, that if you do not keep so close to the fire as almost to burn yourself you cannot keep warm, for the wind blows through them everywhere. Most of the English, and many others, have their houses made of nothing but clapboards, as they call them here, in this manner: they first make a wooden frame, the same as they do in Westphalia and at Altona, but not so strong; they then split the boards of clapwood, so that they are like cooper's pipe staves, except they are not bent.
 These are made very thin, with a large knife, so that the thickest end is about a pinck (little finger) thick, and the other is made sharp, like the edge of a knife. They are about 5 or 6 feet long and are nailed on the outside of the frame, with the ends lapped over each other. They are not usually laid so close together, as to prevent you from sticking a finger between them in consequence either of their not being well joined or the boards being crooked.
 When it is cold and windy the best people plaster them with clay.
 Such are most all of the English houses in this country, except those they have which were built by people of other nations."

"The house for curing tobacco on Hendrick's land was put up by an English carpenter, John Merris (Morris?), and it could not have been very well built, for it blew down four years later, to the great injury of the tobacco which it contained. This goes to prove Donckaerts' statement about the workmanship of English carpenters.

"Hendrick had other duties besides those connected with his bouvery, for he was still the mate and trader of the Rensselaerswyck. When he had been only three months on shore, the yacht returned from her cruise up the river and he was summoned to sail with her for the English colonies in Virginia. Isaack, only twenty one years old, was too young to have all the responsibility of the bouvery laid upon his shoulders and so his brother-in-law, La Montagne, was sent for and given command at Muscota.

"Had it not been for this unfortunate voyage, on which Hendrick contracted a fatal disease, he, not his younger brother Isaack, would probably have become the founder of the de Forest family in America. . . .

. . . it was . . . on July 26, 1637, that Captain Schellinger with pitiful brevity made the following entry in his log: 'About two o'clock in the morning my mate heinrick de freest died'

The words "transom window" are O'Callaghan's usual trans- July lation of crayn cosyne, meaning literally cross-casing, the typical 18 Dutch window of that period; and "round windows" stands for bol cosynen, meaning windows having two swinging sashes below and one stationary sash above. The word bol in this connection is of uncertain derivation and does not mean round, or convex, as usual.
Cf. trans. in De Forest's A Walloon Family in Am., I: 112. See also sketch under Dec. 6, 1642, Addenda. Cf. July 23, 1638.

The word "entrance" probably stands for uytlaat, meaning an Oct.
 extension, or row of bays and stalls outside the pnsts, on one or 21 both sides of the barn. A "barrick of four rods" means a hay barrack (hooverberg), composed of four posts (roeden) and a sliding roof; usually there were five posts, one at each corner and one in the centre.

During this or the preceding year, Jan Stevensen began his career as schoolmaster in New Amsterdam. The date is indicated by a letter, of Sept. 2, 1648, written by Dominic Backerus to the Stevensen, who has served as a faithful schoolmaster and reader for six or seven consecutive years . . . is now leaving for home."

Regarding the building of the Dutch church in the fort, De May Vries says:

"As I was daily with Commander Kieft, generally dining with him when I went to the fort, he told me that he had now had a fine inn built and of stone, in order to accommodate the English who daily passed with their vessels from New England to Virginia, from whom he suffered great annoyance, and who might now lodge in the tavern. I replied that it happened well for the travellers, but there was a great want of a church, and that it was a scandal to us when the English passed there, and saw only a mean barn in which we preached [The first church, built early in Van Twiller's administration, stood near the East River, where now stands No.
 39 Pearl Street.]; that the first thing which the English in New England built, after their dwellings, was a fine church, and we ought to do so, too, as the West India Company was deemed to be a principal means of upholding the Reformed Religion against the tyranny of Spain, and had excellent material therefor—namely, fine oak-wood, good mountain stone, and good lime burnt of oyster shells, much better than our lime in Holland. He then inquired who would undertake the work. I answered, the lovers of the Reformed Religion of whom there were enough. He then said that I must be one of them, as I proposed it, and must give an hundred guilders. I told him that I was satisfied, and that he must be the first to give, as he was commander, and then we chose Jochem Pieters. Kuyter, a devout person of the Reformed Religion, who had good workmen who would quickly provide a good lot of timber, and also chose Damen [Jan Jansen Dam or Damen, a prominent colonist], because he lived close by the fort. And so we four, as churchwardens, were the ones to undertake the work of building the church. The commander was to give several thousand guilders on behalf of the Company, and we should see whether the rest would be subscribed by the community. The church should be built in the fort, to guard against any surprise by the savages. Thus were the walls of the church speedily begun to be laid up with quarry-stone, and to be covered by the English carpenters with overlapping shingles cleft from oak, which, by exposure to the wind and rain, turn blue, and look as if they were slate."—De Vries's Notes (from the Korte Historiaal ende Journael Anteyckeninge), in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 212-13.

The "Representation" of 1650 gives the following amusing account of the method adopted by Kieft, who spurred on by De Vries, of collecting subscriptions for the erection of the new church by taking advantage of a convivial occasion. This incident was inadvertently omitted from the text of the Chronology:

"The Director then resolved to build a church, and at the place where it suited him; but he was in want of money and was at a loss how to obtain it. It happened about this time that the minister, Everardus Bogardus, gave his step-daughter in marriage; and the occasion of the wedding the Director considered a good opportunity for his purpose. So after the fourth or fifth round of drinking, he set about the business, and he himself showing a liberal example to the wedding-guests subscribe what they were willing to give towards the church. All then with light heads subscribed largely, competing with one another; and although some well repented it when they recovered their senses, they were nevertheless compelled to pay—nothing could avail to prevent it. The church was then, contrary to every one's wish, placed in the fort."—"Representation of New Netherland," in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 326. Jameson observes: "The result was a stone church in the old fort, 72 feet by 50, erected at an expense of 2,500 guilders—equivalent in specie to $1,000."

A better translation of the original Dutch text, in Albaay, now partially destroyed, would be:

"Jeuriaen Hendrickson from Osenbrugge [Osnabrück] acknowledges that he has agreed, as he hereby does [agree], to build for the Hon. Willem Kieft, director-general of New Netherland [several walls destroyed here in the original] a house at Otterspoor, as follows [literally: in the form, manner, or shape hereinafter written]: the house [to be] one hundred feet long [This evidently refers to the entire building, including the so-called voorhuys, or dwelling part, as well as the barn, or stable, in the rear, which is called the 'scheur.' Strictly speaking, the voorhuys included the entire fore part of the house, which was used for dwelling purposes, the rear part being used as a thrashing floor, cattle barn, wagon shed, etc. It does not seem to be generally realized that most of the early houses in New Netherland were of the Dutch farmhouse type, with the dwelling and stable under one roof. In many cases the chamber was partitioned off from the voorhuys. In this case, the chamber may have been in a corner of the rear part of the building, or in the attic;] the barn fifty feet wide, [namely] twenty-four feet in breadth between the posts, with two aisles extending throughout [meaning the rows of bays and stalls outside the posts], one nine and the other ten feet in width. A dwelling house [voorhuys] in front, fifty feet long and twenty-four feet wide, with a partition in the middle and a double chimney, which shall all be of brick [i.e., in the Dutch documents, as a rule means brick, stone being referred to as clipssteen], and in which he, Jeuriaen Hendrickson, shall make and lay the cellar and garret beams with the boards needed thereto; together with the window and door casings [literally: cruys cozyen, bol cozyen ende durco zyen.—that is, four-light and three-light window casings and door casings; see July 18, 1641, Afdendal], and further all that shall be necessary for the aforesaid building."

The following sketch shows its design and construction, which is typical of farm houses of the period, in New Netherland as well as in Holland.

1643

The first confederated government in the new world is formed, May 19-29 as the result of the adoption of a measure for mutual defence by Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, and New Haven, which form a loose confederacy called "The United Colonies of New England."—Wilson, Hist. of the Am. People, I: 170.

1644

The following document was published by O'Callaghan in 1846. It is entitled (translated):

"Report and Advice on the condition of New Netherland, drawn up from documents and papers placed by commission of the Assembly of the XIX., dated 15th Dec., 1644, in the hands of the General Chamber of Accounts, to examine the same, make a digest thereof, and to advise the Assembly how the decay there can be prevented, the population increased, agriculture advanced, and that country wholly improved for the benefit of the company." Dec. 15

"NEW NETHERLAND, situate in America between English Virginia and New England, extending from the South River, lying in 38½ degrees, to Cape Malabar, in the latitude of 41½ degrees, was first frequented by the inhabitants of this country in the year 1598, and especially by those of the Greenland company, but without making any fixed settlements, only as a shelter in the winter. For which purpose they erected there two little forts on the South and North Rivers against the incursions of the Indians. A charter was afterwards, on the 11th October, 1614, granted by their High Mightinesses to Gerrit Jacobsz. Witszen, ancient burgomaster of the city of Amsterdam, Jonas Wittsz., Symon Morriszen, Lambert van Tweenhuysen, Wessel Schenck, and associates, all inhabitants of these countries, to trade exclusively to the newly-discovered lands, now called New Netherland, situate in America, between New France and Virginia; to sail thereto exclusively for the term of three years, without any other persons being allowed to sail out of this country to, or frequent, that place during that time, on pain of confiscation of ships and goods, and a fine of fifty thousand Netherlands ducats.

"In the years 1622 and 1623, the West India Company took possession, by virtue of their charter, of the said country, and conveyed thither in their ship, the New Netherlands, divers colonists under the directorship of Cornelis Jacobsz. May and Adriaen Jorisz. Thienpoint. Which directors built, in the year 1624, Fort Orange on the North River, and Fort Nassau on the South River, and after that, in 1626, Fort Amsterdam on the Maohattes, in all of which garrisons were continually maintained by the company, and trade prosecuted in those several districts with yachts, sloops, and other craft. In the year 1629, the Freedoms and Exemptions conceded by the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen, were published with the approbation of their High Mightinesses. Divers Patrons and colonists resorted thither thereupon, and endeavored to advance agriculture and population. For further security, the Fort Good Hope was also erected, in 1633, on the Fresh River. But population did not experience any special increase until the year 1639, when the fur-trade with the Indians, which theretofore was reserved to the company, was thrown free and open to everybody; at which time the inhabitants there resident not only spread themselves far and wide, but new colonists came thither from Faterland, and the neighboring English, as well from Virginia as from New England, removed under us. So that in place of seven boweries, full thirty were planted, and full one hundred more expected in a short time from the plantations which were taken up. There was every appearance, in addition, that in two or three years' time provisions could be furnished for ten thousand men.

"Although the hope was now entertained, that by such means the conquered province would come to a flourishing state, it nevertheless appeared that the abuse of the free trade was the cause of the said ruin. Firstly, the colonists thereby, with a view, each to push forward his own advantage, separated themselves from one another, and settled far in the interior of the country, the better to drive trade with the Indians, whom they thenceforward sought to allure to their houses with excessive familiarity and treating; whereby they brought themselves into contempt among the Indians, who, not having been always treated alike, made this the cause of enmity. Secondly, in consequence of their proximity to the Indians, whose lands lay unfenced, the cattle belonging to our people, straying without herdsmen, seriously damaged the corn or maize of the savages. This occasioned much complaint, and no redress following, they revenged themselves, killing the cattle and even the horses. Thirdly, not only the colonists, but also the free-traders proceeding from this country in consequence of the large profits, traded away with the Maquas, arms for full four hundred men, such as muskets, powder and lead, which, having been refused to the other tribes, when demanded, augmented the hatred and the enmity among the latter. Fourthly, it happened that the Director, a few years after, imposed a contribution of maize on the Indians, whereby these were totally estranged from us.

"Hence arose various threats and injurious rencontres, which finally broke out into acts of hostility, so that first the Raritan Indians attempted to make way with one of our sloops, and afterwards killed some hogs on Staten Island; whereupon the Director dispatched eighty soldiers thither to avenge this, who burned their corn and killed three or four of their people. Both sides then desisted from further proceedings.

"It further happened that a Wechquaeskeek savage murdered, about the year 1640, an old man with an axe, in his own house, for which, having received no satisfaction from the tribe, the resolution was taken afterwards, in the year 1642, by Twelve Men chosen from the commonalty, to revenge the murder by open war; but nothing was done at the time in consequence of missing the enemy, who, observing what was designed against them, sued for peace.

"Some time afterwards the Hackingsack Indians designedly shot with an arrow a Dutchman sitting on the roof of a house, which he was covering. The commonalty were very much troubled at this, dreading the occurrence of more such acts. And while satisfaction was being sought by the Director for this, without success, God seemed to have taken vengeance on the Wechquaeskeeks, through the Mohecan Indians, who, overtaking them, slaughtered full seventy of them, and led many women and children away prisoners. This obliged the remainder to fly to our people to the Manhattans, where they were received into the houses, and fed by the Director during fourteen days. Shortly after this they were seized with another fright. They fled with the Hackingsack, full a thousand strong in the neighborhood of the fort, and over the river of Pavia. Some of the Twelve Men having noticed this, the Director, at the request of three of these, namely, of Jan Jansz. Damen, Abraham Planck, and Maryn Adriaensz., who signed in the name of all their heard, authorized an attack on the above-mentioned Indians, in the course of the night between the 27th and the 28th of February, 1643, by a party of soldiers and burghers, who, with cruel tyranny, slew eighty of them, and took thirty prisoners. And although the commonalty protested against the Director and the aforesaid three persons on account of these hasty and severe proceedings, as having taken place without their knowledge or consent, they were, notwithstanding, obliged to declare open war against full eleven tribes of Indians, who rose up in arms on that account. The consequence was, that about one thousand of these, and many soldiers and colonists belonging to us, were killed. All the boweries almost were moreover destroyed, so that only three remained on the Manhattes, and two on Staten Island, and the greater part of the cattle was destroyed. Whatever remained of these were obliged to be kept in a very small enclosure, except in Rensselaer's colonie, situate on the North River, in the neighborhood of Fort Orange, which experienced no trouble, and enjoyed peace, because they continued to sell fire-arms and powder to the Indians, even during the war against us.

"The company thus experienced the greatest loss and destruction, both by the consumption of their ammunition, and ready mooney expended in the purchasing this at a dear rate, as well as by reinforcing the garrison by the enlisting of as many Englishmen as could be hired in that country, fifty of whom the colonists solemnly engaged to pay, but the payment not having followed, it remained as a charge on the company. Those indebted to the company were hereby finally reduced to such a state, that they had no means to pay their debts.

"To remedy this great decay, various suggestions were proposed by the Director and Commonalty:

"Firstly, that to restore peace and quiet throughout the country, the Indians, who waged war against us, should, by force of arms, be utterly destroyed and exterminated. The Director demanded for that purpose, one hundred and fifty soldiers, armed with arquebuses and coats of mail, and provided with sufficient munitions of war, as he estimated the numbers of the Indians, our enemies, not to be above three hundred strong. The Commonalty, maintaining their force to be some thousands strong, considered their extermination impossible, and were of opinion that it would be wiser to establish universal quiet by a general peace. Of this they have but little hope, so long as the present administration remains there, because the Indians will no way be pacified, as they themselves declare to some of ours, until the Director be removed; for their daily cry everywhere is—Wouter, Wouter,—meaning Wouter van Twiller.

"Secondly, in order to prevent future wars, the colonists should be settled in a proper situation, near to each other, so being brought everywhere into villages and towns, they would be in better circumstances, in time of need, for self-defence. Thus being separated from the Indians, the cattle would not cause any injury to the crops of the Indians, whereby, heretofore, trouble has frequently arisen; and too great familiarity with the savages avoided, none of these being employed in domestic service.

"Thirdly, for better defence against enemies, and to ensure respect from neighbors, that it would be advisable to construct, of stone, Fort Amsterdam, which is now in such a state of decay, that men, without using the gate, pass over the walls. This, according to the estimate of the Director, would cost but from twenty to twenty-five thousand guilders.

"Fourthly, that the boundaries between the English and our nation, should be arranged by the crown of England and this state, so that all difficulties with the former people may be prevented. Whereas the Fresh River has been usurped by them since the year 1633, notwithstanding the company had previously taken possession of the whole thereof, and on the 8th June, anno 1633, when no Englishmen had ever been on, or in the neighborhood of that river, had purchased twenty miles of territory from the Indians, and erected Fort Good Hope thereupon, and maintained possession of it with our people. After which, namely, on the 16th September, the English first came from New Plymouth and Mathuses Bay before the said fort, and declared that they would erect a house three miles above the same. The commissary residing there, opposed this so long as he could, but was forced to permit the same, according to instructions, under protest. In the mean time, sundry letters, protests, and summons, passed on both sides between their governor and our director. It finally came to pass, that they arrived on the above-mentioned river in the years 1635 and 1636, with numbers of families and cattle, establishing themselves there, far and near, even on the land situate around and by our fort, and belonging to us. Which land they have divided among themselves, endeavoring to prescribe laws to us, because they having built a house or two at the mouth of the river, pretended thereby to have the key thereof.

"Fifthly, that it would be advisable for the benefit of that country all around, to facilitate emigration to New Netherland, as has been done heretofore for a long time, or at least to credit the emigrants for a time, in order to allure colonists thither, and afterwards to introduce a considerable number of farm-servants and negroes into the country, through whose labor agriculture would be so much promoted, that a large quantity of provisions could be transported thence to Brazil.

"Sixthly, that a rendezvous for vessels of war should also be established in New Netherland, which is better adapted than the island of Curaçoa, in consequence of the abundance of provisions and building-timber there; besides, that men can proceed thence safer and quicker to all the points in the West Indies, and discover the designs of the enemy.

"Seventhly, that it would be profitable for the company to keep a well-furnished store and cellar there, from which the inhabitants around could be accommodated at a certain reasonable price, for money or produce, which will otherwise be overvalued and exhausted through private traders. But as private individuals have been permitted to carry on trade, let their imported wares be fixed at a certain price.

"Finally, it is proposed by them, that the council be composed of four to five persons, in order to maintain justice and the authority of the company, together with the respect of neighbors.

"From all which 'tis to be seen into what confusion and ruin New Netherland is now fallen, such being caused by the rash undertaking of so unnecessary a war, without the knowledge, much less the order of the Nineteen, and against the will of the Commonalty there—besides what excessive expense is now required from the company both for succor and redress. There does not seem that any apparent profit can be expected from there for some years. On the contrary, it is found by the company's books in the Department at Amsterdam, that in place of being a source of profit, this district of New Netherland has cost the company from the year 1626 to the year 1644 inclusive, over 550,000 guilders, deducting the returns which have been received from there. It would, therefore, be worthy of consideration if it would not be better for the company to rid themselves, by the abandonment of New Netherland, of such heavy expenses altogether, than by retaining it, to continue them.

"But inasmuch as the company has promised, in its conceded Freedoms, to take all colonists, as well freemen as servants, under its protection, and to aid in defending them against all internal wars; and as the improvement of matters by good management here, and better direction there, is not beyond hope, so that this place may be maintained in the first instance with small profit, or at least without loss, it is therefore our opinion, under favor, that the company cannot decently or consistently abandon it.

"In order to introduce such regulation and improvement, we submit to the consideration of the Noble Assembly the following points:—

"Firstly, The establishment of the boundaries with the English should speedily and first of all be agreed upon, for it is found that they, in consequence of their great population, usurp daily more of our territory. This being first settled, it should be conditioned, that the English who find themselves in our district, or should come in there, should be subject to our government, and not be acknowledged otherwise than as original subjects.

"Secondly, The country should be brought, in every respect, into peace and quietness; and the advice of the present Director utterly to exterminate all enemies by force, by no means be adopted, not only because such is impracticable and unchristian, but it would be injurious to the company, necessitating, as it would, so heavy an expenditure on so uncertain an event, and so little appearance of profit. It would not be impolitic, therefore, to adopt the advice of the Commonalty, and to endeavor by all means to appease and satisfy the Indians, and to order hither the Director and council, who are responsible for that bloody exploit of the 28th February, 1643, to justify and vindicate their administration before the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen. In place of whom a person should be sent back as Director, sufficiently qualified to promote the interests of the company and the prosperity of the commonalty on the one hand, and to maintain on the other good correspondence with the neighboring people, especially with the Indians.

"Thirdly, It would be advisable to carry into effect and to execute the proposition of the Director previously alluded to—that the colonists should settle on some of the best adapted places with a certain number of householders, in the manner of towns, villages, and hamlets, as the English are in the habit of doing; they thereby will live more secure, according to the intention of the company in the granting of the printed freedoms and the amplification thereof.

"Fourthly, It shall be necessary, first of all, to hasten the repairs of the fort, and we are of opinion that this shall be done in a proper manner, and at the least expense, with good clay, and firm sods. The soldiers should be urged thereto by some presents, and obliged to keep it for the future in continual repair. The Director should be strictly commanded to take good care of this.

"Fifthly, We consider, under favor, that for the security of the aforesaid fort, and as elsewhere required, the persons specified in the annexed list should be sufficient, on such allowances, as there, moreover, drawn out—adding thereto that the colonists and their servants should be bound, under certain penalties, to provide themselves with good fire-arms and other weapons for self-defence; and to secure themselves in time of need, independent of the garrison, against a general attack, without the Director, colonists, or whoever it might be, being permitted to hire any soldiers, be they few or many, at the company's expense.

"Sixthly, A council should be established there, consisting of three persons; namely, the Director as president; the Second and the Fiscaal as councillors adjunct. Through which council all cases arising relating to the police, justice, dignity, and rights of the company should be treated and administered. With the understanding, nevertheless, that the Commander should take the place of the Fiscaal in criminal matters, with the addition moreover of two capable persons from the commonalty. Further, as by the 28th article of the Freedoms, the respective colonies were allowed to delegate one or two persons to inform at least, once a year, the Director and council of the state and condition of their colonies, so are we of opinion that the said delegates should moreover assemble every six months, at the summons of the Director and council, for mutual good understanding and the common advancement of the welfare of the inhabitants; besides to assist in advising the same upon all affairs relating to the welfare of their colonies, the preservation of peace with the Indians and neighboring people, the maintenance of the Freedom and privileges, and the redress of all abuses, besides the maintenance of the statutes and the laws; bearing in mind, always, that throughout the whole of that land the Amsterdam measure, ell, and weight shall be used.

"Seventhly, It must be especially attended to that the population and cultivation of the country should be strengthened. It would be serviceable thereto to facilitate, as much as possible, the emigration of the colonists and freemen who intend to proceed thither to settle there, and to cause them to establish themselves, first of all, on the island of Manhattans; allowing them as much land as they were able to cultivate, whether in planting of tobacco, for which that island being very fertile is considered well adapted; or of grain or other crops, from which they may expect to derive the largest profit.

"And for the advancement of the reclaiming of the country, it would be wise to allow, at the request of the Patroons, colonists, and other farmers, the introduction from Brazil there, of as many negroes as they would be willing to pay for at a fair price; which negroes would do their masters more service, and at less cost, than farm-servants, which must be hired here with a great deal of money and much promises to be sent thither.

"Eighthly, To increase the population still more, we would advise, that it would be best to reserve the Indian trade exclusively to the Patroons, colonists, and free farmers residing there, without permitting any licensed traders to trade in any manner with the said Indians; but to be satisfied to exchange their cargoes with the free inhabitants for peltries, tobacco, wheat, and other produce of the country. But it should be absolutely forbidden, that either the freemen should sell to the Indians, or the licensed traders to the freemen, any arms or munitions of war, on pain of a heavy punishment to be inflicted therefor, lest the Indians, being strengthened thereby, may hereafter be encouraged to do us more injury than they can now, in their impotency, inflict. But it shall be obligatory on the freemen to be provided, each with a good musket and side-arms for self-defence, as already mentioned in the 5th point. An inspection thereof shall be had by the Director every six months.

"And in order to encourage the good people of New Netherland the more, the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen should, under favor, consider if it would not be advantageous and beneficial to the conquered province, to allow the Patroons and colonists, there

1644 resident, to export their produce to the Brazils, under proper Dec. recognitions and tolls, as there are there flour, oatmeal, peas, 15 beans, pipe-staves, planks, square timber, and other wood fit for ship and house-building. Also to encourage the fisheries there around, that they and no other persons should be permitted to salt and preserve the fish and caviare which can be caught there, to sell the same at the Recife [Pernambuco], and that it should also be allowed, that the New Netherlands should take salt on the Brazil coast around Siara, or in the West Indies, for the purpose of salting wet and dry fish; and to erect salt-pans in New Netherland to refine the same, and to render it fit to use as fine salt with fish and meat. And, arriving at Brazil, that they shall be bound to deliver all into the company's store, and on payment of the proper duties and tolls, whether in money or specie, to dispose of the same without exporting any money thence, but to take as a return cargo, staves, sugar, confectionary, ginger, tobacco, cotton, and other country produce, with proper entries thereof, both as to quantity and quality; and therewith to sail straight to New Netherland, without touching at any port, while on the way, to barter or to sell any part thereof, under any pretext whatsoever. Wherefore they should receive on the part of the company a supercargo, to make a report of the whole to the company, and to return in the next ship from New Netherland to the Brazil. And as all further smuggling must be prevented, the skippers must be obligated (on pain of loss of ship and goods) after being visited at the Recife [Nearly south of Pernambuco city, between the river Bibiribe and the sea, a small tongue of land extended, on which stood a village named Recife: there all goods were shipped and unshipped. De Laet, Verhaal van West Indien, 191-], to touch at Paraíba, to be there visited again on the part of the company.

"Which trade being thus adjusted, it shall not be necessary for the company to be burdened with any equipages, or purchases of cargoes, and thereby be relieved from numerous servants required therefor. The garrison being established to board themselves, they will be amply provided therein, and with other necessities, by the freemen and inhabitants there.

"But in order to furnish the expenses which the company have to defray for the support of that garrison and other servants, it will be necessary that the receipts of the recognitions, tolls, and other duties, as well on the exported as on the imported goods, already established and hereafter to be imposed, should be sharply attended to; wherefrom we think that the expenses to be met by the company can be amply received, with the hope that the population increasing, greater and more ample profits can be derived therefrom."—O'Callaghan, Hist. of New Neth., Appendix, 418 et seq.

May The development of the slave trade of the W. I. Co. dates — from 1640, when Portugal revolted and the Spanish colonies in So. America could no longer obtain slaves from the Portuguese possessions in Africa. During Stuyvesant's administration of the island of Curaçao, 1643-45, this island became the center of the clandestine slave trade with the Spanish colonies. See "Be-

May Apparently, the granting of ground-briefs was sometimes made 16 a special order of business at meetings of the director-general and council; or possibly the grants made at different meetings were held for issuance or record awaiting the convenience of the secretary, which would account for the fact that often several were issued or recorded under the same date.—See Introduction to Dutch Grants, Vol. II, pp. 355 et seq.

 16 namely, that the same with 86 souls, 200,000 lb. of stockishout [red wood, or St. Martha wood], and 14,000 beaver skins, about four weeks ago perished near Wales, England. Only 21 persons were saved and came ashore on pieces of the ship. Director Kieft, the minister, the fiscal and other officers are among the dead. The ship be-

 New Netherland. From the persons saved, who arrived here, we can not learn that anything special happened in New Netherland."—

See 1623, and Dec. 28, 1630, where the "Arms of an Earl," July here referred to as having been granted to the province, are 26 described. See also Frontispiece I, Vol. IV. As pointed out by Dr. Wieder, in a letter to the author dated Aug. 17, 1921, Holland in the Middle Ages was a "Graeffschap," or the dominion of a count, whose arms it bore, and continued to bear after it had become a province in the Dutch Union. It seems clear that the states-general, in order to bestow upon the colonists going to New Netherland privileges equal to those enjoyed by citizens of the home provinces, made New Netherland a province, and bestowed upon it the arms of a count, similar in character to those enjoyed by the seven provinces forming the "Union."

The following is a report of a court meeting held at Fort June Orange (The court was established by Stuyvesant Apr. 10, 1652):
 "Tuesday, June 23, 1654

"Present:

"Omnes dempto Sander Leendertsen

"Last Sunday a letter was received by this court from the Honorable General, of the 17th of this month, wherein he advises the court of the bad news received from the north and that on that account, for the better defense of the Manathans, they were not only busy repairing the old works, but also obliged to begin some new ones. Complaining of the scarcity of money in the treasury, he requests that the most prosperous of the burghers here lend a helping hand and that this court would be pleased to negotiate a loan of money, on condition that it be returned within a year, either in duties, or otherwise, for which his honor and the honorable councilors offer their persons and property as security.

"After careful consideration of the matter, this court has decided to summon the most prosperous and loyal citizens and to communicate the matter to them, with the recommendation that they assist the Honorable General in this great emergency;
 who, having been summoned one by one and appeared in court, have signed for the following amounts, which they have agreed to furnish promptly for the purpose and on the conditions herein-before written, and which it is decided to send at once by the sloop of Jacob Symontz Klomp, in company of two other sloops, which are lying ready to sail for the Manathans. They have contributed and signed as follows: [A long list of names follows, with 1654 —Minutes of the Court of Fort Orange and Beverwyck, 1652-1656, June Jn.23 161-63, translated and edited by A. J. F. van Laer, Albany, 1920. 25 Sept. 22 Stuyvesant writes to the Amsterdam chamber asking for instructions regarding disposition of the 23 Jews who arrived early in Sept. (q. v.).—See Oppenheim's Early Hist. of the Jews in N. Y. (1909), 4-5. See, further, April 26, 1655.

Mar. 18 The words "int'voorjaar," used by Megapolensis in his letter of this date, and translated in Eedes. Rec. I: 335, as "in the spring" should be rendered "the early part of the year;" for the letter was written before the spring.

22 The "Burghers Court Martial" or "Burgher Court Martial," a term more frequently found in the records relating to New Orange (see Dec. 22/Jan. 1, and Oct. 15/25, 1674), appears to have comprised the captains or chief officers of the night watch, which, like our police of today, was semi-military in both its organization and character.—Recs. N. Am., VII: 132, 133, 134. The "Burgher Council of War" (ibid., VII: 137, 138) appears to have been another name for the same body; this, however, is not to be confused with the "Honble Council of War" (ibid., VI: 397; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 574), which was a body that acted for the states-general, in 1673, in re-establishing the Dutch régime in the province.

Apr. 15 The first recorded lease of a house in New York City to a Jew, David deFerera, bears this date. The second was to Joseph d'Acosta, on Dec. 6 of this year. For references to these and other residences occupied by Jews in New Amsterdam, see Oppenheim, op. cit., 67-68; see also pp. 6 and 89.

26 The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant regarding the Jews in reply to his letter of Sept. 22, 1654, notifying him that by order of Feb. 15 (q. v.) they had given permission to the Jews to settle in New Netherland, provided they consent to take care of their own poor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 315; Oppenheim, op. cit., 8-11.

1656

Feb. 15 Michiel Jansa. arrived in New Netherland about Aug. 4, 1638. —See Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 818, where this and other information regarding him are given.

June 25 The first marked case of anti-Semitism, and illustrating the unfriendly feeling of the city magistrates towards the Jews, as intimated in the first letter sent by Stuyvesant to his superiors in Amsterdam on the arrival of the first contingent of the race in 1654, appears in the proceeding against David deFerera, a Jew, by the Schout Nicasiaus deSille, on a charge of contempt of justice. For an apparently trivial offence by one who did not understand the Dutch language and was ignorant of the laws affecting the subject, the schout demanded as punishment against the Jew a public scourging at the stake, banishment from the province, a fine, and confiscation of the debt due the defendant, besides provisional imprisonment. DeFerera, in 1655, had sold goods to Adrien Keyser of the value of 5 beavers, and as collateral for the payment had received a chest of clothes. On Keyser's failure to pay, and after suit, the collateral was authorized to be sold in February, 1656. Another creditor of Keyser then offered to pay DeFerera the beavers, and these were ordered by the court to be left with the schout for delivery against the collateral. DeFerera, though not requested to do so by the schout or his bailiff, thereupon, in the absence of the schout, brought the chest of clothes to the bailiff's residence. The latter being at DeJonghe's house, DeFerera went thither without the goods, informed the bailiff of the deposit, and demanded the beavers. The bailiff promised them in a day or two. This did not satisfy DeFerera, who then went back to the bailiff's house and took back his collateral, although the bailiff, who had been informed of his intention so to do, protested against this action and warned him not to take the chest away. The bailiff later admitted he had not seen the chest. He charged that DeFerera had used hasty words to him in Hebrew. The court then, on the bailiff's complaint, ordered the chest to be returned. Thereupon the schout had DeFerera haled to court on the charge of contempt of justice, and had him provisionally imprisoned. Various proceedings were had before the local magistrates, resulting, after much legal argument, in the imposition of a fine of 80 Carolus guilders and costs, with imprisonment without bail until paid, the beavers to be returned to DeFerera. Unable to pay the fine, which he said would ruin him, DeFerera, through his friend Joseph d'Acosta, a shareholder of the Dutch West India Company, who acted as his interpreter, agreed to an arbitration suggested by Director General Stuyvesant, who had been appealed to and who had obtained an admission from the bailiff that he had not requested the delivery of the collateral. Stuyvesant just previous to this had received a letter from his superiors dated June 14, regarding his kinder treatment of the Jews. The arbitration resulted in a reduction of the fine to a bearable amount, 120 guilders and costs of 50 guilders, which were paid. DeFerera was released after being imprisoned about a month without bail liberty. The proceedings in this case take up many pages of the Dutch records. For a full account, with documents, see Oppenheim, op. cit. 4, 53-57 and 77-86.

G. Beernink, in De Geschiedschrijver en Rechtsgeleerde Dr. Arend van Slichtenhorst en zijn vader Jan van Slichtenhorst, Stichter van Albany, Hoofdstad van den Staat New-York (Gedr. Werken, No. 12), 1916, prints on pp. 272-79 Van Slichtenhorst's account of receipts and disbursements of the colony of Rensselaerswyck for 1648, 1649, 1650, in which, under the year 1648, occur items of Evert Duyckinck and Roelandt Savery for glass. On p. 167 of the text, Beernink reads:

"Evert Dukink toch leverde in dat zelfde jaar een nieuw glas, had er zeven versted en had van Labatie zes stuks 'fin glas' betrokken. Hij eindigde zijne rekening met de aanbieding wapen of merken in glazen (ruiten) te branden"—(translated): Evert Dukink, namely, in the same year (1648), furnished a new glass; he repaired seven and procured from Labatie six pieces of "fine glass." He closed his account with the offer to burn coats of arms or other marks (designs) in glass (leaded glass windows).

Beernink must have found this account among the vouchers accompanying the account of the colony submitted to the Court of Gelderland in connection with the litigation between Van Slichtenhorst and the heirs of the patroon.

1657

Although no reference has been found to a church building or other local earlier than 1671, when Pluvier's house was acquired by the Lutheran congregation, it is altogether likely that Lutheran services were held even during the Dutch régime. They must have been regularly held after Dec. 6, 1664 (q. v.), when Nicolls granted them liberty to send for a minister, probably in the house of some member of the congregation.

1658

At the end of this month, Stuyvesant, at Wildwyck (Esopus, or Kingston), directed the establishment of the village.—Dutch Records of Kingston, Part I, trans. by Oppenheim for N. Y. State Hist. Ass. (1912), 1-2.

1659

E. W. Moes, Iconographia Batava, Amsterdam, 1897-1905, II: 417, lists a miniature portrait of Jacob Steendam, the poet, by J. M. Quinkhard, in the Panopticon Batavum, in the Rijksmuseum at Amsterdam. It is not clear whether this is the same portrait as that of which Murphy gives a lithographic copy by E. Spanier, The Hague, Innes, in New Am. and Its People, has a reproduction of the Murphy portrait "from an original print in the Lenox Library."

This was apparently Gerard Roseboom's Recueil Van verscheide Aptr. Keuren, en Costumen. Midtsagde Maniere van Procederen binnen 25 Stad Amsterdam. Den tweeden Druck, nu merckelijck vermeerderd en verbeterd. t'Amsterdam, MDCLVI.

Edward Man, from Plymouth, was in 1652 a merchant at Amsterdam, on the Rokin, and thereafter a director of the W. I. Co.; he married Sept. 28, 1625, at Amsterdam, Abigail Loten.—Johan E. Elias, De Vreedschap van Amsterdam, II: 630; see also De Laet, Historie Ofsse Iaelijck Verhad, list of directors of Amsterdam chamber of W. I. Co.

1660

The attempted correction in the Chronology—in the sixth paragraph under 1660, p. 201—of the statement in Vol. II, p. 213, regarding the number of bridges shown in the Castello Plan, should be ignored, as evidently a temporary aberration on the part of the author.

1662

Asser Levy, the first Jewish owner of real estate in this city, takes deed from Barent Gerritsen, husband of the widow of Jan Nagel, for property on Hoogh (Stone) St. For description, see 1662 Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 691. For further deed to Levy, see ibid.

 June (1865), 701. He acquired other real estate in New York and 8 Albany, the date of his first Albany deed being July 15, 1661, which was prior to the date of his first New York deed.—See Publications

 mentioned in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 447-50; Oppenheim, Early

June It is not unlikely that Couturier, the painter, was in reality a 12 dyer, like Gerard de Forest, who, on Dec. 5, 1622, obtained for two years the exclusive privilege to dye "alle bourratten, Leyts Turx, großfreynen en damasten."—N. W. Posthumus, Bronnen

Mar. A belated attempt is being made to trace the present whereabouts 20 of this important New York document.

Aug. The "Reply of the West India Company to the Answer of the 27 Hon'ble Peter Stuyvesant . . ." covers, with its appendices, 17 printed pages in the N. Y. Col. Docs. (II: 489-510), the original Sept. being in the Royal Archives at The Hague. It is addressed "To 6 the Honorable Mighty Lords, their High Mightinesses' Deputies for the Affairs of the West India Company," and bears date of 1666.
 The aim of the "Reply" is to show "the bad foundation and paltry excuses" contained in Stuyvesant's answers to charges against him for "the scandalous surrender" of New Netherland, and to enable their "Honorable Mightinesses" to dispose of Stuyvesant as they think fit, or drop their prosecution against him. It states, among other things (p. 499), that Stuyvesant preferred
 "to incur excessive expenses of late years for the embellishment of the city, by the construction and erection of very costly stone buildings (steene werken) rather than bring the fort into a state of defence . . ."

30 Between Sept. 30, 1664, and Jan. 9, 1671, Johannes de Decker was in Holland, and made efforts to collect what was due him from the West India Company, as is shown by the following entries in "Resolutie Vande Camer Amsterdam No 25 vanden 5<sup>en</sup>; Marty 1668 tot den 10<sup>en</sup>; Septemb<sup>r</sup>: 1671," in Records of the old West India Co. No. 15, Algemeen Rijksarchief at The Hague:

1668 Joan de Deckere, former councillor in New Netherland, May serves notice that he intends to recover what is due him 28 out of the property which the company has in New Netherland.
 The company demands a copy of the notice, and replies that it will know how to protect its rights. (fol. 22)

1669 J. de Deckere, former councillor in New Netherland, Apr. presents a remonstrance setting forth his innocence in the 29 matter of the surrender of New Netherland to the English, and asking for the payment of his monthly wages. The remonstrance is referred to Messrs Pergens, Bontemantel, and Cloeck, who with the assistance of the advocate are to examine the matter and to report thereon. (fol. 98vo)

1670 The committee to whom was referred the matter of Apr. Jan de Decker, formerly councillor of New Netherland, 21 reports that said de Decker was not only employed in the surrender of New Netherland, but himself concluded and signed the agreement, and that his writings contain no satisfactory evidence of his innocence. Payment of his monthly wages is refused for the present, and the committee is requested to look further into his accounts. (fol. 174)

In the next volume of "Resolutions of the chamber of Amsterdam," Sept. 10, 1671-June 15, 1674, in Records of old W. I. Co.
 No. 16, appear the following entries:

1671 Joan de Deckere, formerly councillor in New Netherland, July requests that his claims against the company be submitted 21 to impartial arbitrators. Referred to the committee on law suits. (fol. 74)

1673 Joan de Deckere makes the same request as above.
 Mar. Request shall be considered at its appropriate time. (fol.
 141)

1673 The committee appointed to settle the matter of Joan Aug. de Deckere reports that in lieu of payment of his claims 7 they have offered to employ him provisionally as a notary in the service of the company until an opportunity pre-

1673 sends itself to advance him further in the company's Aug. service. Whereupon De Deckere requested to receive in addition 7 tion a bag of 200 ducations, which the committee, in view of the present difficulties and the scarcity of money, could not take upon themselves to grant, but promised to report the matter to the assembly. Resolved that in full discharge of his claims the chamber shall pay him fl. 1500, in five instalments of fl. 300 each, without binding itself to employ him in any capacity, and on condition that payment shall cease, or be reduced, if he be employed meanwhile. De Deckere agrees to make known his reply next Thursday. (fol. 176)

1673 Joan de Deckere accepts the terms offered by the com-
 Aug. pany, on condition that if New Netherland be at any time 10 restored to the state and to the company, then his former claims shall remain entire. Granted, provided that in such case the amounts already paid by the company shall be deducted. (fol. 177)

1665

Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, writing to Gov. Nicolls, says
 Mar. that he hopes a copy of the Connecticut laws will "be there before 8 the day of meeting" (at Hempstead—see March 1). When "the perfecting of the body of laws" for the province of New York has been accomplished, he desires "to have the favour of a view of them, for a directory to the better cōpleting of those of this Colony."

About this time, Luycas Dircksen, a discharged soldier, kept a tavern, known as the "Sign of the Fort Orange," at the present No. 16 Stone St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. He first received a license as tavern-keeper on Feb. 16, 1654 (Rec. N. Am., I: 163), but two years later had received leave to settle at the South (Delaware) River (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 160).

Cornelys Steenwick and Oloffte Stevens receive a patent by way of confirmation for "A certain Parcel of land lying upon this Island of Manhattans near the fresh water heretofore knowne by the name of the Pennebackers or the Bowery No. 5, stretching by the land belonging to Cornelys Claesen Swits and so along by the Cartway to Hans Carstedens Plantation and then straight into the woods till you come to the Parting of Leendert Arendens Land where three ways meet at ye Cart Path within the fence. Containing in all by estimation about 91 Acres and 125 Rods, for which said parcel of land Garrett Jansen van Oldenbergh had formerly a Patent or ground-brief from the Dutch Governour William Kieft, hearing date the 17th day of february, 1646, whose interest therein was upon the 18th day of June, 1653, transported over unto Thomas Hall of this City. And whereas there are two other Lots of land adjoining to the said bowery beyond the fresh water aforementioned which heretofore were in the tenure or occupation ye one of Garret Jansen van Oldenbergh and the other of Cornelys Jacobsen Stille. Containing in length on the west side 25 Rods; on the east, 21 Rods and 8 feet. In breadth on the north side, 13 Rods and on the south, 7 rods, 3 feet, for which said lots of land said Thomas Hall had heretofore a Patent or ground-briefe from the late Dutch Governour Petrus Stuyvesant, bearing date the 29th day of November, 1652. Now, the said Thomas Hall, having, on the 30th day of October, 1662, transported and conveyed over his right, title and interest to the parcel of land and bowery before mentioned as well as to the 2 Lotts adjoining and the houses and tenements thereupon with the meadows thereunto belonging, unto Mr. Cornelys Steenwick, one of the Aldermen, &c. who hath likewise taken in Mr. Oloffte Stevens van Cortlandt another of . . .
 to be copartner with him in the premises," etc.—confirms.—Liber Patents, IV: 17 (Albany). The original grant and subsequent confirmations, etc., are in the author's collection.

In a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, Gov. Nicolls expresses disappointment that "a more cheerful conjunction of May Mutual defence" on the part of "all his Maties Loyall Subjects" 2 is not in evidence. "Dutch & french preparations against his Maties Plantations" suggest great danger. He says he does not doubt "by God's assistance to defend this place or be buried in the Ruines of itt if the Common Enemy makes his first descent upon Vs but I foresee that the fire will not stop here but may singe the Coats of our Neighbours . . . whatever happens I shall not want Testimonies that Liberavi animam both publicly and privately."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 2, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

- 1666 Capt. John Baker, commander at Albany, writes to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, that a boat has arrived from New York "with a great many Dutch Letters which came in a Dutch Ship arived at New Yorke, Soe that the Dutch here was very high amongst themselves, Reporting how the English fleet Should be Beaten, and other Bayse Reports to tedious to truble Yo<sup>r</sup> Honour withall, In Soe Much that the Common Crier w<sup>ch</sup> Vse to Say at the End of his Speatch vpon the Streets, God Blesses the Kinge Sayd God Blesses the Prince of Orange and left Out the Kinge: They are very envious Towards us, but we beare all things Patiently, and Shews ourselues Siuill vnto them, Though they do not deserve it."—Winthrop Papers, X: 130, in Mass. Hist. Soc.
- Sept. The archives of the Virginia Company, covering the years 1605-1616, are supposed to have been consumed in the great fire of London, which started on this day, and destroyed the greater part of the city, including 13,200 houses.—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: ix; London's Flames Reviv'd (London, 1689).
- 1667
- July An ante-nuptial agreement between Cornelis "Steenwijck" and Margrietje Riemers is signed in the presence of the following witnesses, namely, Martin Krugier, Jacob Motte, Oloffte Stevensse Cortlaadt, and Johannes de Peijster; attested by Matheus de Vos, notary public. Dated July 5, 1667, Old Style, "in N-Yorck Citte opt'eijlandt Manhattans." Steenwijck is called in this instrument "alderman of the aforesaid city."
- The manuscript occupies 7 pp., folio, entirely in the handwriting of Matheus de Vos, the notary public before whom the agreement was made. It is his attested transcript for record filing, dated April 2, 1667/8, and his attest says: "this agrees with the original minute of the protocol [i. e. public register] committed to my custody." This instrument was held at auction in 1921, and is now owned by Mr. Victor Hugo Paltsis.
- Cornelis Steenwijck, under the Dutch authority in New Netherland, held various offices, as schepen or burgomaster of New Amsterdam, orphan-master, etc., and in Colve's régime he was "first councillor." During the first English occupation, he married Madam de Riemer; he was mayor of the city of New York from 1668 to 1670, when Francis Lovelace was gouverneur. Steenwijck was a man of means, lent money to the government, and at his death bequeathed to the Dutch Church of the city the Manor of Fordham (which he had bought from John Archer, the original lord of the manor), for the support of the ministry. The original deed for this estate, signed in a tremulous hand by Steenwijck, and in a bold hand by his wife, is in the author's collection. Steenwijck's widow, the Margaret de Riemer of the above-mentioned ante-nuptial agreement, was married to the well-known Dominie Henricus Selyns.
- 16 Sheriff Allard Anthony "demands" that the court of mayor and aldermen impose a fine of 100 guilders ($40) on Thomas Tailer for beating Laurens Silla "till the blood came." "Ten groats [eighty cents] with costs" was the small penalty fixed by the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 87. The common practice in New Amsterdam was to grant one-third of an imposed fine to the informer, one-third to the schout, and one-third to the city; this practice was carried over to the English city. The schout or sheriff was in the habit of recommending "a fine of goodly proportions which the court invariably diminished," not often, however, to such an extent as in the case cited above.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. As an 18th Cent. Municipality, 194
- Oct. A patent, by way of confirmation, is granted to Claes Jans Ramaaker, on a transport to him by Rachell van Tienhoven, dated Nov. 10, 1662. Description: Without the Land Port, having to the south land of the widow of Pieter Rodolphus, deceased; to the west, the highway; to the north the house and lot of "the Blew Bores"; containing in breadth alongst said highway, 6 rods, 8 ft; on the east side, 6 rods, 9 ft, 3 in.; on the south side, 12 1/2 rods; on the north side, 12 1/2 rods.—Libor Patents, II: 115 (Albany). "Blew Bores" was a raiment, Gerrit Hendricksen, probably so distinguished for his raiment.—See Innes, New Am. and Its People, preface, p. vii. Valentine is evidently in error in stating (Man. Com. Coun., 1865, p. 532) that "the 'Blue Boar,' erected about the year 1670, on the east side of Broadway, near the present corner of Liberty street," was "the first suburban tavern." Hendricksen was designated, even in conveyances, as "de blaue boer" or the blue farmer.

- Cosimo de' Medici visits Amsterdam, and probably orders copies made from the original Manatus and Castello drawings, etc. See Vol. II, p. 175. For an account of his travels, see Magalotti's Travels of Cosmo the Third, grand duke of Tuscany, through Eng. during the reign of King Charles II (1669) (London, 1821).
- The first New York City seal under the English régime is reproduced on Frontispiece I, Vol. V. See also Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y., Pl. II, and pp. 30-36; Wilde, Early Ancestry of N. Y., 42-43.

- During this month, the first settlement in the colony of South Carolina was made, on the Ashley River, a few miles inland from the present city of Charleston.—Salley, Nar. of Early Carolina, 119-20, 166.
- The Hudson Bay Company, organized chiefly for importing furs and skins obtained by barter with the North American Indians, receives its charter from Charles II. The king incorporates his cousin, Prince Rupert, and a number of other nobles, as "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsoo's Bay," makes them absolute proprietors and lords of the region, gives them a monopoly of the fur trade, and empowers them to make laws and ordinances regarding their territory.—Winsor, op. cit., VIII: 4-6, and authorities there cited; Trall, Social England, IV: 274.

- Gov. Lovelace informs Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, of "the sudd losse of the Duchesse of Yorke who after a violent feavor which sead her and made a faind retrace assaulted her at last with irresistible force and snatcht her out of this world."—Winthrop Papers, XIV, in Mass. Hist. Soc.
- 1672
- The "High Mighty Lords of the States General of Zealand" pass secret resolution for sending out a Dutch squadron to America, upon which follows the preparation of two secret "instructions" in nineteen and eight articles, respectively, issued by the council of the states general of Zealand, on Nov. 21, (q. v.). In a cipher code provided for the squadron, running from 99 to 249, Virginia is 162, and New Netherland 163. These and other manuscripts relating to the expedition under Evertsen and Benckes are in the Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.
- On this day certain secret instructions, consisting of nineteen articles, were signed by a committee of the council of Zealand, for sending out a squadron designed for operations mainly against the island of St. Helena. New Netherland was not mentioned in this instrument, but on the same day a second set, consisting of eight secret articles of instructions, was drawn up by the committee, in which New Netherland was mentioned in article six, which provided that, after the operations at St. Helena and the capture of Bermuda, a detour should be made by the squadron along the coast of Virginia, New Netherland, and as far as Newfoundland, in order to either destroy or capture everything there. These instructions were given to Captains Evertsen and Benckes.—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library. For subsequent events, see July 30/Aug. 9, and Aug. 14/24, 1673.

- The records of conveyance in New York, as contained in the earliest book of New York deeds, begin with this date, and are continued to Oct. 19, 1675. The volume in which these deeds are recorded is not found in the register's office of this county, having been temporarily deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—See Collections (1913), 3-62.
- Joliet sailed down the river as far as the Arkansas which he reached in the middle of July. After ascending the river, he entered the Illinois, gave Mont Joliet its name, and then returned to Quebec. He arrived there in the middle of August, 1674, and reported to Frontenac. The map showing Joliet's discoveries was probably drawn there from his notes and sketches by J. B. L. Franquelin, the well-known royal hydrographer; it was called Nouvelle découverte de plusieurs nations dans la Nouvelle France en l'année 1673 et 1674, and was doubtless the earliest map of the Mississippi 1673 based on actual knowledge. Marquette, also, made a map; there are some differences between his and Joliet's.—See Winsor, op. cit., IV: 178, 207-20, 315, and authorities there cited. See also The Lavery Collection, p. 176 et seq., where Franquelin's various maps of America are described; also Vol. I, Pl. 22-b.

July — A list of ships captured and burned by the Dutch squadron in the James River of Virginia shows seven captured, with 5,750 head of cattle (exhausten), and five burned, with 3,050 head of cattle. In addition to these, a sloop from New York, containing provisions, was captured.—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Aug. 7-17 On the recapture of New York by the Dutch, the inhabitants of the English towns of Long Island are greatly disturbed regarding their safety and the preservation of their jurisdiction under the colony of Connecticut. On Aug. 7, the five towns of Seatalcott, Southampton, Easthampton, Southhold, and Huntington, appeal to the Connecticut government for immediate succor and advice in the extremity in which they find themselves by reason of the demand of the Dutch that they surrender and take the oath of allegiance to Dutch authority within six or seven days. The Connecticut government gives them little encouragement to hold out against the Dutch demand, but sends two messengers to New York to learn the general "intent concerning the five eastern Townes on Long Island," and messengers from these towns meet with those from Hartford at New York. Virtually forsaken by the two Hartford messengers, the Long Island towns, upon the advice of Capt. Silvester, conform to the Dutch jurisdiction. An interesting exposition of the matter is included in the declaration of the town of Southampton, Aug. 29, 1673, in the Winthrop MSS., document 20, Conn. State Library. It states, that "there Came to New yorke 23 shippes whereof were seven men of warr with a fireship. The fort & City wch was our head quarters was taken as Aforesayd and surrendered without Capitulation or articles. Our Gou<sup>er</sup> Lelouace Although vpon Long Island sent us no word of Command or advice, what we should doe or how we should Act."—Winthrop MSS., docs. 14-26 (summarized), in Conn. State Lib.

8-18 The Dutch council of war declares: "Whereas it has come to our knowledge, that Mr. Thomas de Laual hath, contrary to the Capitulation for the surrender of the country, appropriated to himself a lot of Negroes and other of the Incorporated West India Company's effects, also the revenue from the tapsters' excise on wine and beer, without paying the debts which according to the Capitulation were to be discharged therefor; We have, therefore, deemed it necessary also to attach his property real and personal which can be found here, until we shall receive satisfaction in the premises or reasons he adduced why those debts have not been paid. And all and every who may have on hand any property belonging to the aforesaid de Laual, or know where any of it is concealed, are required to make the same known to us, on pain and fine as abovementioned, and each and every are hereby warned and admonished against damages."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 469. Thomas Delavall was the city's second mayor (see June 13, 1666).

Oct 15-25 A letter is sent by the states general of the United Netherlands to Councillor Justus de Huybert, pensionary of the states general in the province of Zeeland, at Middelburg, which states that the pensionaries of Holland and West Friesland, at an assembly of the states general, had communicated a missive from Secretary de Wild, written from Amsterdam on the preceding day, concerning the recapture of New Netherlands, whereupon the matter was deliberated and secret resolutions were passed, enclosed to him, from which it appears that the general board of admiralty at Amsterdam had received confirmation of the recapture of New Netherlands, but that misfortune had so willed it that all the letters were gone, through the capture of the ship which had been despatched to Holland by Captains Binckes and Evertsen, to carry the tidings, which letters, in accordance with previous instructions, had been thrown overboard by the skipper, on account of which they, the delegates, were totally at sea (gansch blind); moreover, the skipper exhibited so little curiosity as to be unable to convey any information to them. Under these circumstances, they resolved to have some deputies from their number sent to confer with representatives of the Amsterdam body, to discuss and settle upon what would be necessary to hold and secure the colony of New Netherlands.—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

28- Nv. 7 A letter written to Justus Huybert from Amsterdam states that there arrived on this day with the post out of England a missive from Capt. Binckes, addressed to the board of admiralty at Amsterdam, written by Binckes in Virginia, bringing some news, including a true confirmation of the tidings of the recapture of New Netherlands.—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Gov. Colve and the council, in a letter to the governor and council of Massachusetts, relative to four confiscated chests belonging to New Englanders, complain about the spies that are sent to New Amsterdam. They ask the English to send in future honest persons and no spies in intercolonial matters.—Winthrop Papers, original manuscripts in Mass. Hist. Soc., XV: 125.

A letter written by Commander Evertsen on board his flagship, the "Swanburgh," lying before Cadiz, gives an account of the capture of New York from the English. This letter was at one time No. XII of Evertsen Papers, now in the N. Y. Pub. Library, but this particular letter was retained by the family of Dr. George Henry Moore, when his manuscripts were sold at auction in 1893. See also The Collector, V: 20.

A communication from the governor and council of Massachusetts to the governor and council of Connecticut announces the decision of the Massachusetts "General Court" to equip two vessels as men-of-war "to secure the passage through the Sound & to repress the present Insolency of the Dutch."—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 29. On March 30, another letter gave the information that the vessels were "fitted & furnished with Ammunition and provisions," and "now ready to saile & Cruise vp & downe the Sound on the Service of the Colonjes."—Ibid., in Mass. Hist. Soc. These vessels were never dispatched (see Apr. 17-27).

Another official communication from Massachusetts to Connecticut (see Mar. 14) announces that the two vessels, equipped for service on the Sound, were detained for some days for "want of wind & extremity of the rayney Seasons." Now the intelligence of "the vadoubted probability of peace betwene England & Holland" (see Mar. 31/Apr. 10) has led the council "to put a stop to the going forth of the Vessels, untill they heare further from you<sup>r</sup> selves, or otherwise from England."—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 30, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

The Duke of York issues a warrant to Gov. Andros "To inquire for two seals (heretofore appointed) for the Provost and Corporation of New York, and to use them for public Acts."—Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 1669-1674, p. 604, item no. 1346. The city seal referred to is the one which was sent over from England in 1669 (see Oct. 5, 1669).

This is the earliest mention of a coach in the city of New York (see Chron.). Houghton is therefore in error (Coaches of Colonial N. Y., 1890, p. 8) in ascribing the first appearance of a coach on the streets of this city to 1686 (more than a decade later), and its ownership to Col. William Smith, who arrived that year.

The inventory of books, etc., found in the city hall at this time contained the names of the following volumes:
"1. Book in folio entituled—Placards, Ordinances and Octroys of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Great and Mighty Lords the States of Holland and Westriesland.

"1. Ditto. Placards, Ordinances of the Lords States General.
"1. Ditto. Handbook of Imperial and Civil Laws.
"1. Ditto. Bye laws of Amsterdam.
"3. Ditto in quarto; Consultations and Opinions 1 2 and 3<sup>d</sup> parts.

"1 Ditto. Dutch Practice and Laws.
"1 Ditto. Wisbuste Admiralty Laws."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 139. These volumes, which served to guide the city court of New Amsterdam and New Orange in its legal procedure, are no longer in the possession of the city, and their whereabouts, if extant, is unknown.

The court of mayor and aldermen issues a warrant to the sheriff to attach the "lands, houses and estate" of the late governor, Francis Lovelace. The return of Thomas Gibbes, sheriff, was made on Nov. 14 and 16. The original document is almost illegible, but it shows that Gibbes had attached the great house near the state house, the garden house in Broadway, and two parcels of land adjoining the land of Derrick Seckars.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 14, 15 (Albany). See Aug. 6.

Gov. Andros, in a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, expresses the hope that certain towns at the eastern end of Long Island will not be upheld by Connecticut in their resistance to the authority of the Duke of York. He wishes to believe that the

— From this time we find mention of the presence in the city of Ahasuerus Hendricks, silversmith. Besides carrying on his trade, he was prominent in civil life. For a short history of his career and a description of a beaker made by him, see Met. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xviii, 32.

Jan. 21 Capt. John Manning, in an address to Andros in defence of his surrender to the Dutch (see July 30/Aug. 9, 1673), relates that he had a private audience with the king on Jan. 11, 1674; that, on being blamed by the king "for sending 3 persons aboard ye Enemies Shippes," he replied "that it was in hopes to have Stopt the 2<sup>d</sup> Shippes one Tide and in that time expected ye Govern<sup>r</sup> or more assistance wth in ye floort." In reply to several questions asked by the king, Manning answered that the fort had four bastions, each bastion defended by ten guns, and "to ye Best of his memory" the length of "ye Curtaines" was "70 paces or upward." He gave the number of the garrison as "70 or 80," whereupon the king turned to the Duke of York and said: "Brother the ground could not be maintained wth so few Men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 53-54. See Jan. 29, Addenda.

29 Capt. Manning petitions Andros and "the rest of his Maties officers now assembled wth him in Court Marshal" for "Mercy and Clemency." He pleads "the weakness of Strength," the apprehension regarding enemies within the city, the powerful enemy without, the fact of his "being wholly left without advice or Council and haueing but eighteen howers before the Enemy came to attack us," also the "great discouragement and dismayng Capt Carr gaue to our Men when he came from aboard the shippes he saying how greate their strength was & that we was not able to withstand them, and his not Returning when he went to make Conditions All which audaine surprisal occasioned strange amaisements disorders and Confusion Amongst the men as to our Insufficiency for defence."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 54. Under the same date appears a list of "Persons surnamed to Appeare before ye Govern<sup>r</sup> about ye Examination of Capt<sup>r</sup> Ino Manning,"—Ibid., III: 55. For the charges against Manning, see Feb. 2, Addenda.

Feb. 2 "Articles" (or complaints) of this date against Capt. Manning show:

"1. First, That on or about the 28th day of July 1673 the 2<sup>d</sup> Cap<sup>t</sup> John Manning having notice of a Fleete of Enemyes ships coming into the Bay, Hee did not endeavour as hee ought, nor put the Garrison in such a fitting posture of Defence as hee might, and slighted such as proferr<sup>d</sup> their service.

"2. That on or about the 30th day of July the 2<sup>d</sup> Fleete of Enemyes being under Staten Island at Anchor, Hee the 2<sup>d</sup> Cap<sup>t</sup> John Manning treacherously sent on board to treat with them, to the encouragement of the said Enemy, and discouragement of the Garrison.

"3. That upon the same 30th day of July hee suffered the 2<sup>d</sup> Enemyes with their Fleet to come & moare their ships under the Fort without firing at them which hee forbid upon paine of death.

"4. That some time after the Enemyes fleet being so moared, Hee suffered them to send their boates on shoare loaden with men and to land them without opposicon.

"5. That a while after having sent out several times to treat with the Enemye, hee strooke his Maties Flage before the Enemye (that had Landed) were in sight of the Fort, though the fort ware in a condicon and all the Garrison desirous to fight.

"6. That hee treacherously caused the Gate to be opened and cowardly and basely Let in the Enemye and yielded them his Maties Fort without articles, unless to himselfe."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 55-56. For Manning's answer to these charges, see Ibid., III: 57-58. See also the "Exact Acco<sup>t</sup> of all the Proceedings of the Military Officers of Fort James from ye 28th 29th & 30th of July, 1673,"—Ibid., III: 59-62. The last named document gives all the circumstances in detail connected with the surrender of the fort. Added to these records are "Divers Orders Issued by Capt. Manning" at that time.—Ibid., III: 63-65. For the decision of the court martial, see Feb. 5, Addenda.

The court-martial finds Capt. Manning guilty of neglect of duty and cowardice, but it acquits him of the charge of treachery. He is sentenced "to be carried back to prison, and from thence brought out to the publick place before the City Hall, there to have his sword broken over his head, and from that time hee rendered incapable of wearing a sword or serving His Majesty in any publick employ or place of benefitt and trust within this Government."—Brodhead, op. cit., II: 276.

There were three Oyster Islands.—See Oct. 1, 1691, and Col. Apr. 20
Laws N. Y., I: 267. One was Bedlow's Island.—See Aug. 10, 1670. Another was Ellis Island.—See Dec. 6, 1661, and Stevens' British Headquarters Map of 1782 (Pl. 50, Vol. I). The third of the three Oyster Islands (all of which are shown along the "Oyster Bank" on Pl. 27-A-B, Vol. I) is named Oyster Island on maps of a quarter century ago, but is now a submerged rock, and is shown on the Coast & Geodetic Survey chart, No. 541, as "Rk. awash."

It is recorded in the Minutes that "ye Elders and Deacons Feb. 10 within this Government formerly have beene excused from the City Watch" (see Jan. 11, 1676).—M. C. C., I: 72. A petition for such exemption is recorded in the Mayers Court Minutes of Jan. 14.

From this time on, Jacob Boelen, silversmith, worked in New York. For a sketch of his life and work see Met. Museum of Art Cat. of an Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xxiii-xxiv, 16, 18. A bowl made by him is shown in ibid., opp. p. 18.

There is a copy of this beautiful map in the Lib. of Congress. Although date and authorship have never been positively fixed, it probably belongs to this year.—See The Lowery Collection, 176 et seq., where this and other American maps by Franquein are described. See also June 7-17, 1673.

Some time after this date (see Chronology), and prior to June 18 1686, Peter Jansen Mesier obtained a lot west of Broadway, where he erected a wind-mill. In 1686, according to a deed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., the lot of one Lloyd is described as bounded on the north by a lane leading to Mesier's wind-mill. Mesier sold his mill to Jannetje, wife of Gysbert van Imbergh, in 1719. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I), and the "Old Wind-mill Lane" is especially well shown on Lyne's Survey (Pl. 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cordlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1749-50, property on Broadway was described as situate on the corner of "a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Mesier."—O'Callaghan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"A Mapp of Rariton River" was probably prepared in conjunction with the building of the town of Perth Amboy, N. J., and was perhaps intended (but not used) as an illustration for an English book bearing the date of the preceding year entitled: Proposals By The Proprietors Of East-Jersey in America, For the Building of a Town On Ambo-Point, And for the Disposition of Lands in that Province And Also For Encouragement of Artificers and Labourers that shall Transport themselves thither out of England, Scotland, and Ireland. London, Printed for Benjamin Clark in George-Yard in Lombard-street, Bookseller, MDCLXXXII.—See Catalogue No. 356 (Jan., 1921) of Bernard Quaritch, London, for reproduction of title-page of a copy of this important work. There is one other known copy, that in the John Carter Brown Library. See also, in same Catalogue, reproduction of A Brief Account O, the Province Of East-Jersey in America. Published [sic] by the present Proprietors, etc., issued by Clark of London, in 1683; and Whitehead, East Jersey under the Proprietary Governments (1675), where the "Mapp" is reproduced.

Apr. of New Netherland, makes a reply to inquiries instituted in Holland 13*23 at the behest of Nicholas Bayard, of New York, for the behoof of William Penn, in the interest of determining the territorial jurisdiction of Penn. An extract of this letter, written from Amsterdam, is sent enclosed in Bayard's letter of Dec. 23, 1683 (q. v. in Addenda), and is as follows: "Ye<sup>o</sup> will find in the Register

Sept. 24 Dongan issues the following order to the officers of the military companies: "You are hereby in his Royall Highnesses name required and ordered to use ye<sup>o</sup> utmost endeavor and care that at the day of Election none appeare but freeholders."—*Wm.
Smith Papers (MS.)*, folio 212.

Oct. 2 Gov. Dongan and the council issue an order decreeing "that Plantations, untill the Customhouse officer hath been on board, and brought the Commander on Shore and presented him to the Governor."—Wm. Smith Papers (MS.), folio 212.

Dec. 23 Nicholas Bayard, in a letter of this date, gives the result of inquiries he has made in New York among old residents as to the origin of the settlements in New Netherland. This inquiry was instituted for the behoof of William Penn, with the purpose of determining his territorial jurisdiction. Bayard says he found, concerning these old persons, that "ye most having been private persons & without publike Employ, can likewise give noe Account w<sup>o</sup> right ye<sup>o</sup> Dutch formerly had in yo<sup>o</sup>: parts of Delaware oneley ye<sup>o</sup> they had possession & builjilt fortts there Long before ye<sup>o</sup> Year van Ruijven, former provincial secretary of New Netherland, written from Amsterdam, April 13/23, 1683 (q. v. supra), relative to his inquiries in Holland in the same matter.—Wm. Penn MSS., vol. on three lower counties, 1629-1774, pp. 1-21, in Hist. Soc. of Pa.

— Apparently the location of the first Lutheran church (Pluvier's house), near the wall, was never changed, the impression that its location was moved from outside to inside the wall doubtless being due to the fact that the wall itself, which in all probability originally ran south of Pluvier's house, was rebuilt, probably in 1658 or 9 (q. v. under May 25, 1658), north of his house, in the position shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Pl. 82, Vol. II). See also Oct.

—From the first two pages (unnumbered) of the first volume of the court of general sessions, whose vellum cover bears the inscription General Sessions of the Peace, held for the City and County of New York, begun the fifth day of february Anno, 1683/4.

City ordinances tried to prevent middlemen from raising prices and monopolizing profits, forbidding any one to buy privately provisions that were being brought in to market, to buy in the market with intent to sell there at retail again, or to purchase in bulk from the farmer before his crops were gathered.
These offences, called "forestalling," "regrating," and "engrossing," had been penalized in England at least as early as the days of the Tudors. Like many other minor ordinances issued in New York, these about New York show, as clearly as do the major ordinances of its governors, the Duke's Laws, and the enactments of the first assembly, that while the governors themselves were untrained in civil administration some of their English advisers were thoroughly conversant with the laws and customs of the mother-country, and exercised good judgment in deciding when it might be well to introduce them and when it would be better to preserve the old Dutch ways and rules.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 337.

At a council held at Fort James, on Nov. 28, 1683, an agreement was concluded between Gov. Dongan and Gov. Treat to settle the boundary line between New York and Connecticut.— Pub. Recs. of Conn., III: 30-32. The surveyors appointed to run the line now make a report of their work.—Ibid., III: 337-38.
On Feb. 18, 1685, Dongan wrote to Werdent: "I am going tomorrow to Connecticut with the gentlemen who adjusted the limits to have them signed by that Governor and myself, if you please to send the Articles of Agreement which I sent to be approved of by the King and Duke, it will be very convenient."— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 355-56. The surveyors' report was ratified by Dongan and Treat on Feb. 23, 1685.—Pub. Recs. of Conn., III: 338-39. The agreement between the colonies was re-affirmed in a representation from the lords of trade to the king on March 13, 1700, which he approved the following day. On March 28, 1700, it was confirmed at the court at Kensington. Its terms are entered in full in N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 625-30; Bowen, Boundary Disputes of Conn. (1882), 71 et seq. For earlier references to the dispute, see N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 688, and Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 43.

The salary of the "Towne Clerk" or the "Clerke of this City" is fixed at £10 per year.—M. C. C., I: 158. One of the few other salaried municipal officials, the marshal, received £7:10 annually.— Ibid., I: 354. The clerk's salary was doubled Oct. 12, 1695, because of his "Diligence," and the "Small Encouragement he has by the multitude of business which he does ex officio."—Ibid., I: 385. See Appendix IV, in Peterson & Edwards, *N. Y. As an 18th Cent.
Municipality*, for an account rendered by Wm. Sharpas after this increase had been granted.

English Smith, the marshal in 1695, complained to the common council that "he found it Impossible to Live by A Dependance on ye<sup>o</sup> Present Salary," and his compensation was increased to £10 per year.—M. C. C., I: 390.

Such compensation as the mayor received came from fees from two chief sources, viz. issuing licenses to freemen and tavern-keepers, and sealing weights and measures. The treasurer received a commission on moneys collected and expended.—See Oct. 19, 1685.

- In this year, Etienne (Stephen) de Lancy, a native of Caen in Normandy, arrived in New York; he was the founder of a family which later became prominent in the city and province.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 332.
- Apr. 23 William Dyre, and Mary, his wife, convey to Thomas Lloyd a lot outside the north gate of New York City, on the west side of the road or highway, beginning at the corner of the way or passage "leading to the mill of Peter Jansen Messier;" thence south along said road to the churchyard or burial-place; as the fence of said Dyre now stands, 468 ft.; thence west on a direct line as the fence of said churchyard or burial-place stands to the Hudson River, 636 feet, and so along the water side, 468 ft.; bounded on the right side by the land of P. J. Messier, and said way or passage that leads to his mill, to said road or highway where it first began, 636 ft., all English measure.—Liber Deeds, XIII: 202-10.
- In 1719, Peter Jansen Messier decided this mill, which he had erected west of Broadway prior to April 23, 1686 (q. v.), to Jannetje, wife of Gysbert van Imbergh.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I); the road to the mill, or "Old Wind-mill Lane," is shown and named on Lynch's survey (Pl. 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cortlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1749-50, property on Broadway was described as situated on the corner of "a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Messier."—O'Callaghan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. City of N. Y.*, II: 313.
- June 10 This new commission to Dongan names him, not again as "Lieutenant and Governor" for an absentee proprietor (the Duke of York), but as "Captain General and Governor in Chief" of a royal province. This title was continued throughout colonial times.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 311.

- Andros, the new governor of New England, arrives in Boston, and enters upon his government.—Barry, Hist. of Mass. Bay (1855), 486. "The new order of things was set in train in New York sooner than in New England [see Sept. 14], for Sir Edmund Andros did not reach Boston until near the end of December when Dudley's government had stood for six months. With him came Captain Francis Nicholson, as lieutenant-governor, and two companies of regular troops, the first ever sent to New England and chiefly Catholic Irishmen. - Dongan writes to the king: "Since Judge Palmer went away [on or about Sept. 8—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 475-77], I received a letter from the Earl of Tyr Conell, wherein he lets me know that it will be requisite for your Majesty's service that I go home." He calls the king's attention to reports he has already sent to the lords of the treasury, explaining: "I am much in debt with the people here, and your Majesty to me, and no ways left for paying it if Connecticut be not joynted to this Government, . . . Yet I had not owed so much to the people here, if Mr Santen the late Collector had not Embezched three thousand pounds of the Revenue" (see Feb. 22 and 23). He asks that £3,500 be delivered to Benjamin Bathurst, "to be remitted thither, which I believe will satisfy all y<sup>e</sup> Debts I have bin forced to contract here."—Ibid., III: 492. Richard Talbot, Earl of Tyrconnel, was Dongan's uncle.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 323.
- In June, the king had directed Andros to bring Connecticut and Rhode Island within the territory and dominion of New England, but Andros had not done so when Dongan sent his letter of Oct. 24 to the king.—Ibid., II: 324.
- "Governor Andros was now completing the consolidation of the king's great New England province. Visiting Hartford, he took over the government of Connecticut on November 1, and its charter, says the famous story, was hidden away in a hollow oak tree, to be brought forth again on a more fortunate day."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 325. See further, Nov. 27.

- Dongan, writing from Albany to the "Lord President" of the privy council (the Earl of Sunderland), says, among other things, regarding the revenue necessary to protect the frontiers against the French: "It is this Government must be y<sup>e</sup> Bullwark to Boston, which is not at the fourth part y<sup>e</sup> charge New Yorke is, and hea ten times the Revenue. Connecticut is added [to the Massachusetts government] by y<sup>e</sup> fraud of y<sup>e</sup> Governo<sup>r</sup> & y<sup>e</sup> Clerke unknowne to y<sup>e</sup> rest of y<sup>e</sup> generall Court, and for one that wishes it as it is, there is a hundred in that Colony that Desyres it were annexed to y<sup>e</sup> Governm<sup>t</sup> of N. - Winsor's statement (Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 409) that Andros having issued a proclamation here on Aug. 24 (q. v.), New York thereby was "formally recognized as the metropolis and the seat of government in the Dominion of New England," is misleading. On leaving New York (see Oct. 4), Andros ordered the records of New York province transferred to Boston.—See below;

1688 see also Jan. 7, 1690. Mrs. Van Rensselaer's observations clearly Aug. define the relation borne by this province to the government of New England: 11

"New York was now also to use the flag recently bestowed upon New England. The English flag bore at this time only the cross of St. George, the diagonal St. Andrew's cross of Scotland being added when the legislative union of the two kingdoms was effected in 1707; and the colonial ensign was a square flag with a St. George's cross, red on a white ground, in the centre of the cross a royal crown and the cipher 'J. R.' Another order, which not only affected sentiment but also presaged much practical inconvenience, provided that the public papers of all the colonies now united should be removed to Boston and that all deeds and wills should there be registered.

"On August 15 Sir Edmund took over the government of East Jersey, authorizing the governor, Andrew Hamilton, to act as his deputy, and on the 18th the government of West Jersey. Thus the name New England was extended from the St. Croix River at the northeast to Delaware Bay at the southwest. In no part of this wide Dominion had the people any secured political rights or liberties except the right, always understood in regard to the colonies, to be governed by laws not repugnant to those of England, and the liberty, specially bestowed by their Catholic king upon all excepting Catholics, to worship God in Jesus Christ as their consciences might counsel. The New Englanders were, indeed, permitted to elect their local officials in town-meeting, but merely by grace of the governor-general and his council; and upon these officials it depended whether or not the cities and towns of New York should retain their charters.

"The pride of New York was deeply outraged by these changes, its political aspirations were blighted, its material prosperity was thought to be seriously threatened. Sadly Colonel Dongan, the city magistrates, and the people must have regretted their loud and frequent lamentations over the weakness of the province, their reiterated outcries that it would perish were its borders not enlarged; for they can hardly have understood the ideas and aims of James Stuart well enough to feel that the result would have been the same had they never spoken; and, indeed, there is evidence that their pleadings actually hastened although they did not determine the course of the king.

"Some years later the city magistrates, addressing the governor of the time, spoke of . . . the unhappy annexation to New England whereby our traffic not only dropped but all that was dear and valuable among us wholly destroyed." And the conservative party in New York laid all the troubles of the so-called 'Leisler Rebellion,' which began in 1689 and lasted for two years, to the charge of this 'miserable union,' this 'cursed' and 'abhorred' connection, saying that it had enabled the people of the eastern colonies to poison with seditious and anti-anarchical doctrines their neighbors of New York who until then had been quietly loyal. Such words showed little appreciation of what had been the real temper of New York in 1689, but their very exaggeration gives a measure of the anger and dismay that had prevailed in 1688. Exaggerated were also the laments uttered at this time—laments that New York had been 'swallowed up' by the unhappy annexation, that its 'absorption' into New England had brought it into an 'unmerited state of degradation.' It was necessary to select a capital for the great Dominion, but otherwise no part of it was exalted over any other part. Wherever the governor-general might choose to meet with a quorum of the councillors chosen from all parts, there legislation for all parts could go on. Nor were old names or old boundary lines of geographical and other kinds wiped out. Each colony, as appears from a letter written by Dongan to Andros, was to bear its own charges out of its own revenues. Each retained its own judiciary, a fortunate fact for men like Graham and Palmer who found office and profit both in New York and in Massachusetts. On the other hand, while New York was to have its own military establishment—by the king's order, two regular companies of foot—it appears, somewhat ambiguously, that their pay, to be 'as in England,' was to come from the revenues of 'New England.' In short, each colony, so far as can be read in initial arrangements necessarily incomplete, remained as before a unit in respect at least to its individual civil affairs. Nevertheless, in a broad sense New York was now identified with New England, a name and a region that its people had detested since their early Dutch days. It was under a government in which the voices of the aliens on the council, the voices of rivals who had often been covetous aggressors and sometimes avowed enemies, greatly outnumbered Aug. its own. The city on Manhattan was no longer in the old way a 11 capital city; and it can scarcely have had foresight enough to be comforted by the thought that, should the union endure, geographical facts would probably bring about the removal of the capital of the Dominion itself to Manhattan."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 347-49.

Gov. Lovelace writes to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, that Feb. a letter from England, dated Jan. 3, brings the information that 24 Staten Island "is declared positive under his R. H. government."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 167, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

During his administration in New England, Gov. Andros put Apr. into execution a number of measures that were obnoxious to the 18 colonists. Although proclaiming religious freedom, he restrained the liberty of the press, levied enormous taxes, and compelled land-owners to procure new titles to their properties, for which exorbitant charges were made. By his aggressions on the territory of the Penobscot Indians, he brought on the Indian War of 1688. The people of Boston, unable to endure the severity of his administration, revolted and, on April 18, 1689, Andros was deposed, and later sent to England. In 1691, Edward Rawson and Samuel Sewall published The Revolution in New England Justified, And the People there Vindicated From the Aspersions cast upon them by Mr. John Palmer, In his Pretended Answer to the Declaration, Published by the Inhabitants of Boston, and the Country adjacent, on the day when they secured their late Oppressors, who acted by an Illegal and Arbitrary Commission from the Late King James. Printed for Joseph Brunning at Boston in New England, 1691.—See Evans, Am. Bibliog., item 575.

A handbill, printed in Boston by Samuel Green in 1689, bears May the heading: "An Account Of the Proceedings at New-York, 31 1689." It consists of "A Declaration of the Inhabitants and Souldiers, belonging unto the several Companies of the Trained-Bands of New-York, the last of May, 1689," followed by "The Testimony of Hendrick Cuyler."

The "Declaration" is as follows: "We Declare, That notwithstanding our several Pressures and Grievances these many years under a wicked Arbitrary Power, exercised by our late Popish Governour Dongan, and several of his wicked Creatures and Pensionaries, especially now under Lieutenant Governour Nicholson: We were resolved to expect with patience our Redemption from England, expecting to have part of that blessed and glorious Deliverance procured under God, by his Royal Highness, William Henry, Prince of Orange; but when we challenged our Liberty, Property, and the Laws, we were cajolled and terrified out of our Reason; but at last some being threatened by the said Lieutenant Governour Nicholson, and with a Pistol presented against the Corporal, and said to the Lieutenant Cuyler, that he would set the City on fire, for doing our Loyal Duty: We have thought fit, for our Conservation, and fear, to be lyable to answer for the Life of every Protestant that might have perished, and every House burnt or destroyed, if we had remained longer in Security: And also seeing daily Arrive from several Ports, Officers and Souldiers, who were entertained by the said Lieutenant Governour Nicholson in the Fort, besides his several Souldiers, of which there was a Number of Papists, contrary to the Law of England; by which New-comers, some of the Burgers being threatened of some Design against them in few days, we thought Delay dangerous, so we have unanimously resolved to live no longer in such a Danger, but to secure the Fort better, which we have under God, with success, without Resistance and Blood-shed, effected: And we Declare to be entirely and openly opposite to Papists and their Religion; and therefore expecting Orders from England, we shall Keep and Guard surely and faithfully the said Fort, in the behalf of the Power that now Governeth in England, to surrender to the Person, of the Protestant Religion, that shall be Nominated, or Sent by the Power above said.

"These are our most sincere Intentions, that we are glad to manifest, as well to the Power above said, that God hath pleased 1689 to Submit us to, as to other Persons, to avoid their Reproaches, that they could otherwise unjustly lay upon the above said Inhabitants.

"New-York, the last of May, 1689.

The "Testimony of Hendrick Cuyler," which follows this, is as follows: "Hendrick Cuyler, Lieutenant to the Company of Captain Abrah. de Peister, Aged about Fifty Two Years; Deposeeth, That on the Thirtieth Day of May last past, he commanding half a Company of the Trained bands, in the Fort of New-York, gave Order to one of his Corporals, to place a Sentinel at a certain Sally-port in the said Fort; but that the said Corporal returning, Declared to him the Deponent, That the Corporal of the Kings Souldiers in pay in the said Fort, would not suffer him to place a Sentinel there: And that afterwards, the Lieutenant Governour Captain Nicholson the then Commander in Chief, returning to the Fort, sent for him the said Deponent to come to him in his Chamber in the said Fort, which he the said Deponent did, and desired his Corporal Hendrick Jacobs to go along with him, because he the said Corporal could speak better English; and that as soon as the said Deponent was come up into the said Chamber, he called for his said Corporal, who followed him to come into the Chamber, which he did, and that as soon as the said Lieutenant Governour saw the said Corporal, he rose up in a passion, and said to the Corporal, Tou Rashal, what do you here? With that the said Corporal returned Answer, That he came to be Interpreter to him the said Deponent: Whereupon he the said Lieutenant Governour, took down a Pistol that hung by the wall, and threatened to shoot him the said Corporal, and drove him out of the Room; and that afterwards the said Deponent remaining still in the said Room alone with the said Lieutenant Governour, the said Lieutenant Governour told him the said Deponent, That there were so many Rogues in the Town, that he was not sure of his Life, nor to walk the Streets; and that the said Lieutenant Governour further said, That before it should longer go after this manner, he would set the Town on Fire: And further he saith not.

1690

Jan. 25 There is a hiatus in the Minutes of the Common Council, as recorded in the volumes in the custody of the city clerk, from this date to March 24, 1691. In the appendix of Vol. VIII in the printed series, minutes of two meetings, on March 22 and Apr. 26, 1690, are printed, which the editors say were discovered among some detached papers (M. C. C., VIII: 143-44). In connection with researches undertaken for this work, the minutes of another meeting have been found. See Aug. 9.

Apr. 24 The following memorandum is made "for my L<sup>d</sup> Presid<sup>t</sup>" of the committee of trade and plantations: "The Records belonging to the Province of New York having been removed to Boston upon uniting the Colonies of New England to that Province the Right Hon<sup>ble</sup> the Lords of the Committee for trade & Plantations desire My Lord President to Move His Ma<sup>ty</sup> that Orders may be Given for remitting those Records to New York upon the present altera<sup>t</sup>ions of those Governm<sup>ts</sup>."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1081. No. 124).

This conference of colonial governors at New York, respecting the safety of the colonies, may be considered the first American congress. They decided to attempt the conquest of Canada, by a force descending Lake Champlain, and another sailing from Boston for Quebec. Cf. July 30, 1684.

The following "Council Chamber" memorandum is made in London: "My Lord President is desired to represent to His Ma<sup>ty</sup>: from the Lords of the Committee for Trade and Plantations the condition of the Province of New York as it is at present under no legal or Settled Government being in the hands of one Leisler a Walloun, who has set himself at the head of the Rable.—And that the French, by the latest Informations have made an Incursion into that Province and burnt one of the Forts, So that unless the Arch-Angell, the Convoiy that has been appointed or some other be not Ordered to go immediately thither with Colonel Slaughter, the Stores and the two Foot Companies, That Province will in all probability be lost, and the neighbouring Plantations fall into the like Confusion, or under the Power of the French."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1113, pp. 255-256).

Records of a common council meeting of this date have recently been discovered among detached papers in the custody of the city clerk. Former regulations concerning carmen and relating to the sale of liquor to Indians or slaves are reiterated to a large extent. The number of carmen is fixed at 24, and a tan-pit belonging to "a Certain Person Called J<sup>no</sup> Vroom" is ordered to be removed. The activities of the body at this particular meeting are not so very important, but the discovery of this and the other detached papers previously mentioned (see Jan. 25) lead to the conclusion that the common council continued to be active throughout the Leisler régime, even though the military power predominated.

Until the first of the two known copies of The Present State of New-English Affairs (see 1689, Oct. —) came to light, Public Occurrences, the first issue of which appeared on this day, was regarded as the earliest news publication of the English colonies in the Western Hemisphere. This issue of Public Occurrences was not only the first but the only issue which appeared. It was the first attempt to start a newspaper in the colonies, for undoubtedly the printer intended to continue it regularly; but it fell under the ban of the government, and was immediately stopped.—Diary of Samuel Sewall, I: 332-33. The only known copy of this publication is in the Public Record Office, London.—Weeks & Bacon, Hist. Digest of Prov. Press, 24-25.

In a Dutch letter to Rev. Godefriedus Dellius, written from New York by N. Bayard and Brandt Schuyler, they say: "Many poor people, mostly English who came here urged by their needs for a cold winter, are woefully pressed, and the goods are again drawn out of the stores. . . . how the winter will end, if no governor comes, God knows."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 129, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

1691

The entries in Ledger No. 1 of the dept. of finance of the city of New York run from 1691 to 1699, inclusive; those in Ledger No. 2, from Nov., 1700 to May, 1760; and those in Ledger No. 3, from June, 1760 to Oct., 1772. The original volumes have been temporarily deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Ledger No. 1 is printed in the society's Collections for 1909.

In a letter to Maj. Gen. Winthrop, of Connecticut, Robert Livingston writes that Gov. Slaughter "is arrived Last Thursday [see Mar. 19] & hes y<sup>e</sup> fort & Laysler and Council is in Yrons."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 156, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

The first session of the general assembly under Gov. Slaughter begins, and this is the first date of record found in the Assemb. Jour.

Between this day and the end of this year, 18 provincial laws were enacted; some of the more important are mentioned under their several dates in the Chronology. During 1692, 12 laws were added; and in 1693, to the time of the arrival of William Bradford,

1691 the printer, whose appointment was made on April 10 (q. v.), Apr. 3 more laws were added (passed on April 10), there being only one 9 other passed that year, in September. The laws are arranged chronologically, and numbered consecutively by chapters.—*Col.
Laws N. Y.*, I: 223-325.

" The legislative council of the province also meets on this day,
" at fort William Henry," for its first session, with Gov. Slaughter presiding; its transactions, from this day forward, are recorded in its Journal.

The legislative council is often referred to in the records as the provincial council, or simply as the council; it was the higher of the two legislative branches of the government, the other, or popular, branch of the law-making department being known as the assembly, the general assembly, the provincial assembly, or the house of representatives.

The term legislature, meaning as it does to-day the two cooperating law-making bodies, the upper and the lower house, was unknown in the records of this province before Oct. 21, 1736 (see under Oct. 19, 1736 in the Chronology); although the term has been freely used in the Chronology, even before this date, as an equivalent of provincial legislature.

The council met in two or three short sessions yearly.

When in executive session, or when summoned by the governor between sessions for advice or action, the council was also known as the executive council, or as the governor's council, and in this capacity was the direct descendant of the "Director General and Council" of the early Dutch period.—See Fowler's Bradford (cited below), xxvii.

O'Callaghan, in his "Historical Introduction" to the only printed edition of the Jour. Leg. Coun. (Albany, 1861), reviewing the governmental systems of the province which existed at different times from the beginnings of the Dutch colony to the coming of Gov. Slaughter in 1691, says:

"The Legislature thus constituted [under Slaughter's commission], consisted in theory of three Branches, viz: Governor, Legislative Council and Assembly; but in fact, of only two, for the Governor presided at the sittings of the Council, voted whenever he pleased as a member of that body, and in case of a tie, gave the casting vote as presiding officer [see the current transactions recorded in the Jour. Leg. Coun.]. . . . This state of things continued for nearly half a century without remark or comment."
The change came in Cosby's time (see Feb. 6, and Oct. 19, 1736), whereby the governor was no longer permitted to sit and vote as a member of the legislative council, although retaining the "negative vote" (veto power).

The minutes of the council, acting as an advisory body to assist the governor in his executive capacity, have never been printed in full, but have been digested in the Cal. Conn. Min. (1902), which frequently has been cited in the Chronology. Mr. Van Laer explains, in his preface to this Calendar, that in certain of the original manuscript volumes the legislative and executive minutes are separate. At the time of the Capitol fire in 1911, these volumes were preserved in the N. Y. State Library, and, since the fire, all that remain have been preserved in the State Education Building.

Regarding Bradford's relations with the Quakers in Philadelphia, we know that he was amicably released from his contract with them on April 29, 1692. The record reads:

"Monthly Meeting 2 Month, 29, 1692.

"William Bradford proposing to this Meeting that if Friends saw it fitting he desired to be discharged from the engagement between Friends and him concerning the Press. Friends having considered the matter are very willing the said Bradford should be free so far as regards this Meeting. And the Meeting appoints Samuel Carpenter, John De La Vale, Robert Ewer and Alexander Beardsley to collect what is subscribed and due for the time past within the limits of this Meeting and pay the same to William Bradford and bring an account thereof to the next Monthly Meeting."—From John William Wallace's Address delivered at the Celebration by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., May 29, 1863, of the 200th birthday of Mr. William Bradford. . . . (Albany, 1863), 63.

Although the Quakers, after committing Bradford and McComb to jail on Aug. 25, 1692, "took away a good quantity of W. Bradford's Letters [type], tending to the disabling of him to work for his Wife and Children; and upon pretence of another Warrant granted without any Conviction, signed by Samuell Jennings & Robert Ewer Justices, John White, the Sheriff, took Goods out of the Shop of Will. Bradford half as much more as the said Warrant was for," and although Bradford, during the trial on Dec. 10, 1692,
"told the Court, That seeing he had been so long detained Prisoner, and his Utensils with which he should work having been so long detained, he hoped now to have his Utensils returned, & to be discharged from his Imprisonment," and the court refused to grant either request (New England's Spirit of Persecution, New York, 1693), we know that Bradford's press continued work while he was under arrest. Hildeburn lists five works as printed by him in Philadelphia, in 1693;—Hildeburn, Issues of the Penn. Press, 1685-1784.

Samuel Jennings, one of the justices who signed the warrant for the arrest of Bradford and McComb, makes the following statement in regard to their imprisonment:

"I shall give my Reader one Instance by which he may judge of the hard usage that John McComb and William Bradford met with during their Confinement, which they represent as very Close and Cruel (though, saith the Libeller p. 11 of that Book of the Tryal, &c.) to give everyone their due, while the Goaler was so kind as to let him, viz. J. M. go home an Hour or two sometimes in an Evening after it was dark, &c. This Decret is too great to pass unproved, had he or his Companions only the favour of a few Hours liberty in an Evening after it was dark. I have heard John White say, and believe it to be true, that he offered them upon their first coming in, if they would promise to come to him upon notice given them, they might go about their Business till then, which they would not accept at that time, (so doubt for this reason, that they might have it to say that they were in Prison) but soon after their Stomachs fell, and they accepted his offer, and I believe were never by him restrained more, and to my certain Knowledge they had their Liberty most of the time they bespeak themselves to be under such hard usage."—From preface of Samuel Jennings's The State of the Case Briefly but Impartially given betwixt the People called Quakers. . . . And George Keith. . . .
(London, 1694).

No reference to Jennings's statements is found in a book written by Keith entitled Some Brief Remarks upon a late Book, entitled, George Keith once more brought to the Test, &c. having the Name of Caleb Pusey at the end of the Preface, and C. P. at the end of the Book, which Bradford printed in 1704, controverting Pusey's work of 1703. Only two copies of this book of Keith are known, one in the John Carter Brown Library and one in the Library of Congress; the only known copy of Pusey's book is in the Friends Library of Philadelphia.

Regarding the confinement and release of Bradford and McComb, Kieth says: "As one instance of my falsehood (as C. P. is pleased to charge it) pag. 1. of his Preface, he brings a Certificate from John McComb, in the following words, viz.

"Whereas, G. K. in p. 40. of his Book, entitled, The Spirit of Railing Shimei, &c. [New York, 1703] saith, Upon application made by William Bradford and John McComb, to Governour Fletcher, for enlargement from their Imprisonment, he examined into the cause of their Commitment and finding it was upon a Religious difference, discharged them, &c. I do hereby certify, (being one of the Persons above-named, that G. K.'s relation above said is false; For we the said William Bradford and John McComb, were both set at Liberty, from the said imprisonment, before ever Governour Fletcher, came into his Government of Pensilvania And I do Certify, that I never made Application to him, the said Governour Fletcher, nor any other Person under him, for my Liberty. Witness my hand,

"John McComb.

"When the Book of C. P. (with this printed Certificate) came to my hands, I was then in East-Jersey and bound for New-York, and when I came there I shewed the said Certificate to W. Bradford (the other Person concerned) who admired not a little at the falseness of it, and said, he believed that some designing Person had drawn J. McComb to sign that Certificate unawares, (as he says) he has known the Qrs. some times have drawn up Certificates and offered them to persons to sign, and who sometimes by that means have certified false things, as J. M. has in this case; and the said W. B. offered to give his Certificate to the contrary of what J. M. has certified, a Copy of which Certificate follows at the end of this Book. Also I writ to Mr. Talbot, who was about that time at Philadelphia, to go to J. McComb and enquire of him the case of the matter, & take his answer before Witnesses, persons of Credit, which accordingly he did, and is as followeth,

"Mr. Evans, Mr. J. Carpenter, Mr. N. Pease, and my self, went to John McComb, who as to the particular of his being set at liberty, said, It was before Coll. Fletcher came into the Province. But the Question being put, Who cleared him? he answered, John White, the Sheriff, bid him go home, & come again when he call'd for him; and upon the death of John White [cf. Bradford's statement, infra] he look't upon him self discharged, tho' never acquitted by the course of Law, but only enlarged upon Paroll."

Bradford's affidavit, which is printed at the end of the book, is very explicit on the subject of his confinement during the period when he was under arrest. It reads:

"Whereas in a late Book of Caleb Pusey's it is certified that William Bradford & John McComb were both discharged from their Imprisonment before Coll. Fletcher came to Philadelphia with the King and Queens Commission and took the Government out of the Quakers hands.

"These are to Certifie all whom it may concern, That John McComb and my self being imprisoned by the Quakers, we made application several times to the Quaker Magistrates for our enlargement but could not obtain it. Wherefore upon Governour Fletcher's coming to that Province, George Keith made application to him for our enlargement, and I my self made application by my Petition to said Governour Fletcher, (to which J. McComb was privy) whereupon the Governour appointed a Committee of the Council to examine into the cause of our Imprisonment, who made Report, That it was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and was not concerning the Government. Then I was sent for before the Governour and Council, and the Governour asked me several Questions concerning our Imprisonment. To which having answered, I was ordered to with-draw. In a little time I was called in again, and Governour Fletcher told me, That he found our Imprisonment was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and therefore had ordered that I and my fellow Prisoner should be discharged. For which I return'd him Thanks. I also requested the favour that he would please to order my Printing Tools to be restored to me, which had been taken away from me. Whereupon the Governour sent for John White [vide supra], the Sheriff, and ordered him to Return my said Tools, which were lodg'd in Samuell Jening's House. From this time we were discharged from our Imprisonment, and not before. To the Truth of this I can depose upon Oath if required. Witness my hand this 27th of March, 1704.

"William Bradford."

As the above facts are supplied by the principal parties in interest and by other competent contemporary witnesses, it is only possible to reconcile the contradictions by assuming that one side or the other is guilty of prevarication. In this connection it seems hardly likely that Bradford, while occupying a conspicuous public office, would have dared to publish a statement over his own signature to the effect that he was actually imprisoned up to the time of his formal release on or immediately after April 28, if he had come to New York and taken up his work as government printer on April 10. It seems as though it should be possible to clear up this mystery by a thorough examination of contemporary records and authorities.

The question of priority of publication among the twenty-five known imprints from Bradford's press which Mr. Eames lists as belonging to this first year of printing in New York City is difficult to determine, and has been much mooted. There are soon to be published, in the Bulletin of the N. Y. Pub. Library, the results of searching studies, made by Mr. Eames, regarding the internal evidence contained in the known Bradford publications of 1693, with the aid of all available external evidence on the subject, to determine, as nearly as possible, the order of printing, etc. The reader is referred to this article as containing the latest and most authoritative statement of the known facts regarding the introduction of printing in New York.

The inducements which brought Bradford to New York, as indicated by the resolution adopted by the provincial council on March 23 (q. v.), were that, "for printing of Our Acts of Assembly & public papers," he should be allowed, as government printer, a salary of £40 per annum, " & have the benefite of his printing besides what serve the publick." According to this resolution, the public documents were to be his first and chief concern.

Of the extant Bradford imprints, the following acts, etc. must have been ready to print when he came to New York:

An Act for Restraining and Punishing Privateers and Pyrates, passed Sept. 10, 1692 (printed in two issues, 3 pp. each, no colophon);

An Act for Granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound upon all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province, passed Nov. 12, 1692 (4 pp., no colophon);

An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, passed April 10, 1693 (two issues, 6 pp. each, with complete colophon—see Pl. 21);

Fletcher's proclamation of April 29, 1693, against Sabbath-breaking (broadside; only known copy in Lib. of Congress, the gift of Mr. Stuyvesant Fish);

Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohaques Country . . . A Journal kept by Coll. Nicholas Bayard and Lieut. Coll. Charles Lodwick (the only known copy of which was discovered by Miss Hasse in the Public Record Office, London) (14 pp.); and the Address of the Freeholders of Philadelphia (3 pp.).

It appears likely that one of the six pieces mentioned above has the distinction of being the first product of a printing-press in this city; although as more than thirty acts had been passed before Bradford's arrival, it is of course possible that one of these, now lost, may have been printed earlier. Of the Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French we know that the only recorded copy reached London late in September, for it is endorsed "Recd 26 Sept 1693 from Coll Fletcher," and, as other items which bear the same endorsement left America the last of July, it may be fairly assumed that this document was printed during that month.

Inasmuch as A Journal kept by coll. Stephen Courtland and Coll. Nich. Bayard (Pl. 21), the only known copy of which was discovered by Mr. Eames, in 1902, in the catalogue of Bibliothèque Nationale, records events which transpired in Albany in June and the early part of July, 1693, which dates also appear on the title-page, it can not have been ready for printing until long after Bradford's arrival.

1693 — The complete list of Bradford's known imprints for the year 1693, as prepared by Mr. Eames, and arranged alphabetically, is as follows:

An Account of several Passages and Letters between his Excellency Benjamin Fletcher. . . . And The present Administrators, of the Laws in the Colony of Connecticut. . . . (8 pp.)

An Exhortation & Caution to Friends Concerning buying or keeping of Negroes. (6 pp.) This is sometimes called "the first protest against slavery printed in America."

Fletcher, Proclamation, 29 April 1693, on the sabbath. (Broad-side.) Mr. Eames places this item among the 1693 imprints principally on the assumption that Bradford moved to New York on April 10, although it is of course possible, indeed probable, that it was printed there even if he did not arrive before May or June.

Fletcher, Proclamation, 27 July, 1693, on the assembly. (Broad-side, in Pub. Record Office, endorsed "Rec'd 26 Sept. 1693 from Col. Fletcher."

Fletcher, Proclamation, 25 Aug. 1693, on the erection of fire beacons to give warning of invasions by the French. (Broad-side.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 8 Nov. 1693, to the people of Connecticut, urging them to "yield and render an intire Obedience unto their Majesties most Gracious Commission." (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 13 Nov. 1693, relative to deserters from the army and navy, and travellers and others without passes. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Atenalle Officieren, 8 June 1693, announcing that license has been given to collect money to redeem the slaves in Salec. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officers, 8 June 1693, on captives. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officers, 8 June 1693. (Differs from preceding.)

A Journal kept by coll. Stephen Courtland and coll. Nich. Bayard, . . . appointed by the council to attend His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher, captain general and governor in chief of the province of New York . . . to Albany, in treating with the Indians of the Two Nations and River-Indians of that province, in the months of June and July, 1693. . . . (15 pp.)

Mr. Lancaster's Queries to the Quakers. (Fragment, 3 pp.)

A Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohaques Country. . . . (14 pp.)

New England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted to Pennsylvania. (38 pp.) See 1692.

New York, An Act for restraining . . . Pirates. (In two issues, 3 pp. each.)

New York, An Act for granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound upon all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province. . . . (4 pp.)

New York, An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, and their Officers. . . . (In two issues, 6 pp. each.)

New York, A Catalogue of Fees Established by the Governour and Council. (11 pp.) This was printed after Sept. 20, 1693, for it was sent by the assembly to the governour and council, for their action, on that day (see Moore's Introd. of Printing into N. Y.)

New York City, Humble Address of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen and Commonality. (Broadside.)

Pennsylvania, An Act for granting One Penny per Pound. (4 pp.)

Philadelphia, The Address of some of the Peaceable and well Affected Free-holders and Inhabitants. . . . (3 pp.)

Philly, A Paraphrastical Exposition on a Letter from a Gentleman in Philadelphia, to his friend in Boston. . . . (8 pp.)

Primer and Catechism for Children. (Fragment, 8 pp.)

— In this year, Benjamin Harris, of Boston, printed a catalogue of the library of the Rev. Samuel Lee, which was offered for sale. Evans refers to this (No. 645) as "Perhaps the earliest work of its kind printed in the Colonies." For the earliest known book-sale catalogue printed in New York, see 1755.

Sept. 22 — The Ministry Act was the direct outcome of secret instructions given to Fletcher at Kensington, March 7, 1692. The part of these instructions relating to religion directed, among other things, that the Book of Common Prayer be read; that the Sacrament be administered "according to the Rites of the Church of England;" that the "Churches already built there [the crown possessions in America] be well and orderly kept, and more built as the Colony shall by Gods blessing be improved and that besides a competent Maintenance to be assigned to the Minister of each Orthodox Church a convenient house be built at the Comon Charge for each Minister and a competent proportion of land assigned him for a Glebe and exercise of his industry; also that "noe Minister be preferred by you to any ecclesiastical Benefice in that our Province, without a certificate from the Right Reverend the Bishop of London, of his being conformable to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England. . . ." While these provisions clearly meant making the Church of England the established church in this province, the in-stinctuous nevertheless permitted "a liberty of Conscience to all persons (except Papists)."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 521-23

Fletcher made the establishment of the ministry his first duty by recommending it in his opening address to the provincial legislature (see Sept. 26, 1692); but so reluctant were the dissenters, who composed the larger part of the assembly, to support the proposed measure that Fletcher was compelled again and again to reiterate his recommendation which soon grew into a demand for their entire compliance.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1045, 1048, 1054, 1073, 1075.

The curious situation developed under the Ministry Act that the members of all denominations in the city—Dutch Reformed, Lutherans, Jews, Papists, Presbyterians, Methodists, etc.—in the colonial period, contributed to the salary of the Episcopal ministry. For names of contributors, see the volumes of Assessment Rolls of New York, in 1910 in the comptroller's office.

The English governours claimed that the act established the Anglican church, but its language was so indefinite that its meaning and application were disputed down to the Revolution.—Eccles. Recs., VI: 4231-34; VII: 13-14. See Apr. 5, 1774, infra. Dr. George H. Moore writes of it: "There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Assembly to provide for the maintenance of the Dissenting Clergy. Such had been the manifest tendency of the previous legislation on the subject. All the Assembly but one were Dissenters and the Church of England was hardly known in the Province. . . . The Act was very loosely worded, which as things stood then when it was made could not be avoided. The Dissenters could claim the benefit of it as well as Churchmen, and unless wrested from its true bearing it admitted a construction in their favor. Indeed they had good reason to claim that it was intended for them, and that they only had a right to it. In fact, it was arbitrarily and illegally wrested from its true bearing, and made to answer the purpose of the English Church party, which was a very small minority of the people who were affected by the operation of the law."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 321-33.

The house of representatives addresses the governour, asking for leave to print its votes "this Sessions." The next day, on proroguing the assembly, the governour, in his address to the joint session of the council and assembly, made the following reply: "You now desire llycense to print the Votes. M<sup>r</sup> Speaker knows at the opening of the sessions, if I may call it ooe, I told him they might be printed de die in diem; but it never was asked before."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 76. For the title-page of Bradford's first printing of the Assem. Jour., see July 4. According to Hildeburn, in Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 581, this is "The earliest publication of the proceedings of an American legislature." This first issue, or collection of daily issues, includes transactions from June 20 to July 4, inclusive, each day's transactions or Votes being, apparently, printed separately and bound with title-page; for, while all are pagged consecutively, each bears Bradford's imprint. See also Miss Hasse's check-list of publications of the New York assembly, etc., in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 55.

The earliest extant volume of New York City tax rolls begins with this date. It is at present in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Society, and is labelled Tax Lists 1695 to 1699. The handwriting is that of William Sharps, the city clerk. Throughout the volume the property holders are listed by wards, and against the name of each person is placed the valuation and the assessment. Appended to the list in each ward are the names of the assessors who did the work. The volume opens with an assessment of "one farthing  $\frac{3}{4}$  pound" levied on "the Estates Real And personal of all the Free-holders Inhabitants & Residents" of the city to relieve the poor "for six Months," etc.; this assessment was pursuant to an act of the legislature passed on July 3 (q. v.). It was desired to raise £50, and the lists total £531:15:104.

1695 Subsequent lists in the volume are pursuant to other acts of Dec. the legislature, such as "An Act for the Raising One Thousand — Pounds to be employed by an Agent for the Representation of the — State of the Province" (see Oct. 22); assessments are levied to meet the city's quota for such provincial expenditures. The contents of the volume are printed, with many inaccuracies, in N. Y.
Hist. Soc. Collections (1910 and 1911). A second volume of tax rolls covers the years 1699-1703 (see A. Nov. 29, 1699).

Jan. These minutes were until recently contained in a package of 27 papers preserved in the vault of Trinity Corporation, together with the original letters patent of incorporation, the charter, the original lease of the King's Farm for seven years (dated Aug. 19, 1697), the original grant from Queen Anne (dated Nov. 23, 1705), etc.

Feb. Miles Foster, who has been chosen collector of the East Ward, 9 is declared by the mayor's court "incapable to serve" because he is a Quaker.—M. C. M. (MS.) VII.

May Rev. Charles E. Corwin, son of the late Dr. E. T. Corwin who 11 edited the Eccles. Recs. of the State of N. Y., makes the following observation, in answer to inquiry, respecting this charter: "The Reformed Church in America as a Denomination never had a colonial charter. It was incorporated by the State of New York in 1819. Several individual Dutch Reformed churches of colonial times had individual royal charters. Of these the first was that of the Collegiate Dutch Church of New York. This was first asked for in 1688 and finally granted in 1696, May 11th. This original charter is in the vault of the Collegiate Church, 113 Fulton St., New York City. [See Pl. 24, Vol. IV.] Other Dutch Church colonial charters: Kingston, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1719; Schenectady, Aug. 23, 1734; five combined Dutch churches of Somerset, N. J., June 7, 1753.
Many other churches sought but failed. Episcopal Churches had no difficulty."

Apr. As Kidd's royal commission of Jan. 26, 1696, authorized him 30 to capture certain pirates and their goods, and required him to keep a journal of his proceedings "in relation to the Execution of our Royal Pleasure in the said Premises," and as the ship "Adventure Galley" has been "with our Knowledge, and Royal Encouragement, fitted out to Sea for the Purposes aforesaid, at the great and sole charges of our right trusty . . . Richard Earl of Bellamont
. . . and our trusty and well-beloved Edmund Harrison Merchant, Samuel Newton Gentleman, William Rowley Gentleman, George Watson Gentleman, and Thomas Renolls of St.
Martins," William III now grants to the above adventurers "all and whatsoever Ships, Vessels, Goods, and Merchandizes, and Treasure and other Things whatsoever, which since the Thirtieth Day of April, Anno Domini, 1690, have been . . . or which shall be taken or seized upon . . . which do or shall belong to
. . . Pirates, Free-booters, and Sea Rovers, by the said Captain William Kidd."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 229-38. On the same day, the grantees agreed "to well and truly account for and deliver to the use of His Majesty one full clear tenth part of any vessels, merchandise, moneys, goods, and wares that might be captured by Kidd." Dalton explains that £6,000 had been needed for the venture, and that Col. Livingston and Kidd had each contributed £600, the rest having been advanced by four leading men in the king's ministry: Somers, the lord chancellor; the Earl of Oxford, the first lord of the admiralty; and the two secretaries of state, the Earl of Romney and the Duke of Shrewsbury. Not one of the persons mentioned in the grant had advanced any of his own money.—Ibid., 30-32.

May The original charter, on four sheets (24 x 28½ ins.) of vellum 6 (Dix, writing in 1898, refers to three, and to an attached seal "composed of a reddish wax and covered with yellowish paper") was restored in 1920 by Mr. Kalaba of Stikeman & Co. The seal, which was then lacking, was replaced by that theretofore attached to the Queen Anne grant of Nov. 23, 1705 (q. v.). But, as this seal bears the insignia of George II, it is clear that, at some prior time, it itself had been substituted on the Queen Anne grant for the original seal of Queen Anne, for a reproduction of which see *Doc.
Hist. N. Y.* (4to ed.), Vol. IV, Pl. 5, where the dates are erroneously engraved "1710-1718," instead of 1705-1710, although correctly given in the text.

The duplicate copy of the original charter destroyed in the State Library fire of 1911 had an impression of the original William and Mary seal attached, for a reproduction and description of which see Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), Vol. IV, Pl. 4, and p. 2.

Capt. Kidd, before he left London, had testified in a suit June brought by Robert Livingston against Gov. Fletcher. He swore, — on Aug. 28, 1695, that, "at the election of Assemblies for the Town of New York, about 3 months since, he saw Soldiers and Seamen with Clubs &c in the field, and many went off the field least they should be prest, and he heard there were freedoms given to several persons over night before the Election And the Depo-nent and others Masters of Ships were spoke to by the Sheriff to bring their Seamen on shore to Vote."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 128, 144. On Sept. 14, 1695, Kidd testified in regard to the same matter that "John Tutall the sherriff of New York spoke to him to ge his people from on board his vessell they being Inhabitants of New York to vote at the election about three months since, for such persons as the Governor desired should be elected, but y<sup>e</sup> Deponent cannot say it was by order from the Governor."—Ibid., IV: 129.

Garrett Onclebagh, admitted as a freeman of New York in this year, was one of the early American silversmiths. Besides carrying on his trade, he held civil offices for several years. For incidents Bellomont writes from Boston to Capt. Kidd: "Mr. Emmot June came to me last Tuesday night telling me he came from you: but 19 was shy of telling where he parted with you. Nor did I press him to it. He told me you came by Oyster Bay in Nassau Island and sent for him to New York. He proposed to me that I would grant you a pardon. I answered that I had never granted one yet, and that I had set myself a rule never to grant a pardon to anybody without the King's express leave or command. He told me you declared and protested your innocence and that if your men could be persuaded to follow your example, you would make no manner of scruple of coming into this port, or any other within His Majesty's Dominions. That you owned there were two ships taken, but that your men did it violently and against your will, and had used you barbarously, in imprisoning you and treating you ill the most part of your voyage, and often attempting to murder you.

Mr. Emmot delivered to me the two French passes taken on board the two ships your men rifled, which passes I have in my custody, and I am apt to believe they will be a good article to justify you, if the late peace were not by the treaty between England and 1699 France to operate in that part of the world at the time the hostility June was committed, as I am almost confident it was not to do. Mr.

19 Emmot told me that you showed a great sense of honour and justice in professing with many asseverations your settled and serious design all along to do honour to your Commission and never to do the least thing contrary to your duty and allegiance to the King. And this I have to say in your defence, that several persons in New York, who I can bring to evidence it, did tell me that by several advices from Madagascar, and that part of the world, they were informed of your men's revolting from you in one place, and I am pretty sure they said Madagascar, and that others compelled you much against your will to take and rife two ships.

"I have advised with His Majesty's Council, and shewed them this letter, and they are of opinion that if you can be so clear as you (or Mr. Emmot for you) have said, that you may safely come hither, and be equipped and fitted out to go and fetch the other ship, and I make no manner of doubt but to obtain the King's pardon for you, and for those few men you have left who I understand have been faithful to you, and refused as well as you to dishonour the Commission you have from England.

"I assure you on my Word and Honour I will perform nicely what I have promised, though this I declare beforehand that whatever goods and treasure you may bring hither, I will not meddle with the least bit of them: but they shall be left with such persons as the Council shall advise until I receive orders from England how they shall be disposed of."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 95-98. For Kidd's answer, see June 24 (infra).

24 Capt. Kidd, "From Block Island on Board the Sloop Anthony," sends the following in reply to Bellomont's letter of June 19 (supra): "I am honoured with your Lordship's letter of the 19th instant by Mr. Campbell, which came to my hands this day. . . .
I cannot but blame myself for not writing to your Lordship before this time, knowing it was my duty: but the clamours and false stories that have been reported of me, made me fearful of visiting or coming into any harbour, till I could hear from your Lordship.

"I note the contents of your Lordship's letter, as to what Mr.
Emmot and Mr. Campbell informed your Lordship of my proceedings I do affirm to be true, and a great deal more might be said of the abuses of my men, and the hardships I have undergone to preserve the ship and what goods my men had left. Ninety-five men went away from me in one day and went on board the Moca
Frigate, Captain Robert Culliford, Commander, who went away to the Red Sea; and committed several acts of piracy, as I am informed; and am afraid (the men formerly belonging to my Galley) that the report is gone home against me to the East India Company, that I have been the actor. A sheet of paper will not contain what may be said of the care I took to preserve the owners' interest, and to come home to clear my own innocence. I do further declare and protest that I never did in the least act contrary to the King's Commission, nor to the reputation of my honourable owners, and doubt not but that I shall be able to make my innocence appear; or else I had no need to come to these parts of the world; if it were not for that and my owners' interest. There are Five or Six Passengers that came from Madagascar to assist me in bringing the ship home, and about ten of my own men, that came with me would not venture to go into Boston, till Mr. Campbell had engaged Body for Body for them that they should not be molested while I stayed at Boston, or till I return with the ship. I doubt not but your Lordship will write to England in my favour and for these few men who are left.

"I wish your Lordship would persuade Mr. Campbell to go home to England with your Lordship's letters, who will be able to give account of our affairs and diligently follow the same that there may be a speedy answer from England. I desired Mr. Campbell to buy 1000 weight of Rigging for fitting of the ship to bring her to Boston, that I may not be delayed when I come there.

"Upon receiving of your Lordship's letter, I am making the best of my way to Boston."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 98-101.

July While Dalton's book was in preparation, the records were 6 critically re-examined by the late Frederick Lewis Gay and Mr.
John H. Edmonds in Boston, and by Mr. Joseph P. Gilder in New York. Since Mr. Gay's death, Mr. Edmonds has embodied the results of his investigations and Mr. Gay's in a paper entitled
"Lord Bellomont and the Pirates," read before the Old South

Association on July 13, 1921. Mr. Gilder's very thorough review July of the documents has resulted in a book, not yet published, but 6 epitomized in a lecture entitled "Captain Kidd, the Man and the Myth," delivered before the Century Club, New York, in Dec., 1921. The investigations of both Mr. Edmonds and Mr. Gilder supplement those of Dalton in exonerating Kidd from the charge of piracy. Mr. Gilder makes very clear the political situation in England which led to the tragedy of Capt. Kidd's conviction and execution as a pirate and murderer.

7 Capt. Kidd draws up an account of his voyage, in the "Adventure Galley," from London to the East Indies, and presents it to the council at Boston. In this he declares "That the said Adventure Galley was launched in Castle's Yard at Deptford, about the Fourth of December 1695; and about the latter end of February the said Galley came to in the Buoy in the Nor; and about the 1st Day of March following, his Men were pressed for him for the Fleet; which caused him to stay there for Nineteen Days; and then sailed for the Donnes . . . and sailed thence for Plymouth; and on the Twenty-third Day of . . . April he sailed on his intended Voyage; and, some time in the month of May, met with a small French Vessel . . . which he took and made Prize of, and carried the same into New York, about the Fourth Day of July, when she was condemned as lawful Prize . . .

"That about the Sixth Day of September 1696, the said Captain Kidd sailed for the Maderas . . . and thence to Bonavista . . . ; and sailed thence to St. Jago . . . ; and thence sailed for the Cape of Good Hope; and in the Latitude of Thirty-two, on the Twelfth Day of December 1696, met with Four English Men of War . . . and sailed a week in their Company; and then parted, and sailed to Telece, a Port in the Island of Madagascar . . .
And, about the latter end of February, sailed for the Island of Johanna, . . . where he found Four East India Merchantsmen outward bound . . . And from thence, about the Twenty-second of March, sailed for Mehila, an Island Ten Leagues distant from Johanna, where he arrived the next Morning, and there careened the said Galley; and about Fifty men died there in a Week's Time.

"That on the 25th Day of April 1697, set sail for the Coast of India, and came upon the Coast of Mallabar, the Beginning of the Ninth of September; and went into Carraw upon that Coast . . .
And the Gentlemen of the English factory gave the Narrator an account, that the Portuguese were fitting out Two Men of War to take him; and advised him to put out to Sea, and to take Care of himself from them, and immediately to set sail thereupon; . . .
about the 12th of the said month of September; and the next morning, about Break of Day saw the said Two Men of War standing for the said Galley; and spoke with him and asked him, whence he was? Who replied from London; and they returned answer, From God; and so parted wishing each other a good Voyage; And making still along the Coast, the Commodore of the said Man of War kept dogging the said Galley all the Night, waiting an Opportunity to board her; and in the Morning, without speaking a Word, Fixed Six great Guns at the Galley, some whereof went through her, and wounded Four of his Men; and thereupon he fired upon him again;
and the Fight continued all Day; and the narrator had Eleven Men wounded: . . . the said Fight was sharp, and the said Portuguese left the said Galley with such Satisfaction, that the Narrator believes no Portuguese will ever attack the King's Colours again, in that Part of the World especially. And afterwards continued upon the same Coast, cruising upon the coast of Cameroone, for Pirates that frequent that Coast, . . .

"And that about the 18th or 19th Day of . . . November, met with a Moors Ship of about 200 Tons, coming from Surratt, bound to the Coast of Mallabar, . . . which said Ship the Narrator haled, and commanded on board; and with him came Eight or Nine Moors, and . . . Three Dutchmen, who declared it was a Moors Ship; and demanding their pass from Surratt, which they shewed; and the same was a French Pass, which he believes was shewn by a Mistake; for the Pilot woud Sacrament she was a Prize, and staid on board the Galley; and would not return on board the Moors Ship; and went in the Galley to the Port of St. Marie.

"And that, about the First Day of February following, upon the same Coast, upon French Colours with a Design to decoy, met with a Bengall Merchantman belonging to Surratt, of a Burden of 4 or 500 Tons, 10 Guns; and he commanded the Master on board; and a Frenchman, . . . Gunner of the said Ship, came on board as Master; and when he came on board, the Narrator caused the 1699

July

English Colours to be hoisted; and the said Master was surprised, and said, You are all English; and asking, which was the Captain? Whom when he saw, said, Here is a good Prize, and delivered him the French Pass.

"And that, with the said Two Prizes, sailed for the Port of St. Marie's in Madagascar; and, sailing thither, the said Galley was so leaky, that they feared she would have sunk every Hour, and it required Eight men every Two Glasses to keep her free; and was forced to wald her round with Cables to keep her together; and with much ado carried her into the said Port of St. Marie's, where she arrived about the First of April, 1698; And about the 6th day of May, the lesser Prize was haled into the careening Island or Key, the other not being arrived; and ransacked and sunk by the mutinous men; who threatened the Narrator, and the men that would not join with them to burn and sink the other, that they might not go home and tell the news.

"And that, when he arrived in the said Port, there was a Pirate Ship, called the Moca Frigate, at an Anchor, Robert Culliford, Commander thereof; who with his Men, left the same at his coming in, and ran into the Woods; and the Narrator proposed to his Men to take the same, having sufficient Power and Authority so to do; but the Mutinous Crew told him, If he offered the same, they would rather fire Two Guns into him, than one into the other; and thereupon Ninety-seven deserted, and went into the Moca Frigate, and sent into the Woods for the said Pirates, and brought the said Culliford, and his Men, on board again; and all the time she staid in the said Port, which was the Space of Four or Five Days, the said Deserters, sometimes in great Numbers, came on board the said Galley and Adventure Prize, and carried away great Guns, Powder, Shot, small Arms, Sails, Anchors, Cables, Surgons, Chests, and what else they pleased; and threatened several times to murder the Narrator, as he was informed, and advised to take care of himself, which they designed in the Night to effect; but was prevented by him locking himself in his Cabin at Night, and securing himself with barricading the same with Bales of Goods; and, having about Forty small Arms, besides Pistols, ready charged, kept them out; Their Wickedness was so great, after they had plundered and ransacked sufficiently, went Four Miles off to one Edward Welche's House, where his the Narrator's Chest was lodged, and broke it open; and took out Ten Ounces of Gold, 40 Pound of Plate, 370 Pieces of Eight, the Narrator's Journal, and a great many Papers that belonged to him, and the People of New York that fitted them out.

"That about the 15th June, the Moca Frigate went away, being manned with about 150 Men, and Forty Guns, bound out to take all Nations; Then it was that the Narrator was left with only Thirteen men; so that the Moors [and] he had to pump and keep the Adventure Galley above Water, being carried away, she sunk in the Harbour; and the Narrator, with the said Thirteen men, went on board the Adventure Prize; where he was forced to stay Five Months for a Fair Wind; In the meantime, some Passengers presented, that were bound for these Parts; which he took on board, to help to bring the said Adventure Prize home.

"That, about the beginning of April, 1699, the Narrator arrived at Anguilla in the West Indies, and sent his Boat on Shore, where his Men had the News That he and his People were proclaimed Pirates, which put them into such Consternation, That they sought all Opportunity to run the Ship on Shore upon some Reef or Shoal, fearing the Narrator should carry them into some English Port.

"From Anguilla they came to St. Thomas; where his Brother-in-law Samuel Bradley was put on shore, being sick; and Five more went away, and deserted him: Where he heard the same News, That the Narrator, and his Company, were proclaimed Pirates, which incensed the People more and more.

"From St. Thomas set sail for Moona, an Island between Hispaniola and Porto Rico; where they met with a Sloop called the St. Anthony, bound for Antega from Curaso, . . . The men on board then swore, they would bring the Ship no further. The Narrator then sent the said Sloop St. Anthony for Curaso, for Canvas to make Sails for the Prize, she not being able to proceed; and she returned in Ten Days; and after the Canvas came, he could not persuade the Men to carry her for New England; but Six of them went and carried their Chests and Things on board of Two Dutch Sloops; bound for Curaso; and would not so much as heel the Vessel, or do anything, the Remainder of the men not being able to bring the Adventure Prize to Boston, the Narrator secured her in a good Harbor in some Part of Hispaniola and left in the Possession of Mr. Henry Boulton of Antega, Merchant, the Maker, Three of the old Men, and Fifteen or Sixteen of the men that belonged to the said Sloop St. Anthony, and a Brigantine belonging to one Mr. Burt of Curaso.

"That the Narrator bought the said Sloop St. Anthony of Mr. Boulton, for the Owner's Account; and after, he had given Directions to the said Boulton to be careful of the said Ship and Lading, and persuaded him to stay Three Months till he returned; and then made the best of his Way to New York; where he heard the Earl of Bellamont was, who was principally concerned in the Adventure Galley; and hearing his Lordship was at Boston, came thither; and has now been 45 Days from the said Ship."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 255-71. See July 26 (infra). For Kidd's trial, see A. May 10, 1701.

In a letter to the council of trade and plantations, Bellomont 26 says:

"I shall confine myself to an account of my proceedings with Capt. Kidd. On June 13th Mr. Emot, a lawyer of New York, came late at night to me and told me he came from Capt. Kidd who was on the coast, with a sloop, but would not tell me where; that Kidd had brought 60 lbs. weight of gold, about one hundred weight of silver and 17 hales of East Indian goods . . . that Kidd had left behind him a great ship near the coast of Hispaniola, that nobody but himself could find out, on board whereof there were in bale goods, salt-petre and other things to the value of at least £300,000; that if I would give him a pardon, he would bring in the sloop and goods hither, and would go and fetch the great ship's goods afterwards. Mr. Emot delivered me that night two French passes which Kidd took on board the two Moors' ships, which were taken by him in the seas of India, or as he alleges by his men against his will. One of the passes wants a date in the original as in the copy I send. On Thursday, June 15, I sent Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster of this town [Boston], Kidd's countryman and acquaintance, along with Mr. Emot, to invite Kidd to come into this Port. Mr. Campbell returned June 19 and gave in a Memorial to myself and Council, containing what had passed between him and Kidd. On June 19 [p. v.] as I sat in Council I wrote a letter to Capt. Kidd and shewed it to the Council, and they approving of it, I dispatched Mr. Campbell again to Kidd with my letter. The promise I make Capt. Kidd in my letter of a kind reception and procuring the king's pardon is conditional, that is, provided he were as innocent as he pretended to be, but I quickly found sufficient cause to suspect him very guilty, by the many lies and contradictions he told me. I was so much upon my guard with Kidd that, he arriving here on Saturday the 8th of this month, I would not see him but before witesses; nor have I ever seen him since but in Council twice or thrice that we examined him, and the day he was taken up by the Constable, it happened to be by the door of my lodging and he rushed in and came running to me, the Constable after him. I had him not seized till Thursday, July 6th, for I had a mind to discover where he left the great ship, and I thought myself secure enough from his running away, because I took care not to give him the least umbrage of my design of seizing him . . . He being examined twice or thrice by me and the Council and also some of his men, I observed he seemed much disturbed, and the last time we examined him I fancied he looked as if he were upon the wing and resolved to run away, and the gentlemen of the Council had some of them the same thought with mine, so that I took their consent in seizing and committing him, but the officers appointed to seize his men were so careless as to let 3 or 4 of his men escape, which troubled me the more because they were old New York pirates. The next thing the Council and I did was to appoint a Committee of trusty persons to search for the goods and treasures brought by Kidd and to secure what they could find till the King's pleasure should be known as to the disposition thereof. . . . They searched Kidd's lodging and found hid and made up in two seabeds a bag of gold dust and ingots of the value of about £1000, and a bag of silver, part money and part pieces and piggs of silver, value as set down in the inventory . . . I have sent strict orders to my L. G. at New York to make diligent search for the goods and treasure sent by Kidd to N. York in three sloops . . . and I believe I have directed him where to find a purchase in a house in N. York . . . If I could have but a good able Judge and Attorney General at York, a man-of-war there and another here and the Companies recruited and

1699 well paid, I will rout pirates and piracy entirely out of all this July north part of America . . . I am forced to allow the sheriff 40s.
26 per week for keeping Kidd safe. Otherwise I should be in some doubt about him. He has without doubt a great deal of gold, which is apt to tempt men that have not principles of honour. I have, therefore, to try the power of iron against gold, put him into irons that weigh 16 lbs. . . . There never was a greater liar or thief in the world than this Kidd. Notwithstanding he assured the Council and me every time we examined him that the great ship and her cargo waited his return to bring her hither, you will see by two informations of masters of ships from Curaçao that the cargo has been sold there. . . . To-morrow I send the sloop Kidd came in with letters to the L. G. of Antego, the Governors of St. Thomas' Island and Curaçao to seize and receive what effects they can that was late in the possession of Kidd and on board the Quidah Merchant . . . The sending of this sloop will cost but about £300, if she be out 3 months. . . . Since my commitment of Kidd I hear that upon his approach to this port, his heart misgave him, and he proposed to his men the putting to sea again and going to Caledonia, the new Scotch settlement, but they refused. I desire
I may have orders what to do with Kidd and all his and Bradish's crew, for as the law stands in this country, if a pirate were convict, yet he cannot suffer death . . . You will observe by some of the informations I now send, that Kidd did not only rob the two Moors' ships, but also a Portuguese ship, which he denied absolutely to the Council and me. I send papers relating to him.—Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I. (1699), 366-70. Bellomont was ordered to send Kidd and the other pirates to England (see Feb. 10, 1700).

Nov. The Chronology includes a legislative act of May 16, 1699 29 (q. v.), authorizing the city government to raise money by taxation for erecting "a new city hall" and for other purposes. It also includes a resolution of the common council of Nov. 2 (q. v.) fixing the amount to be so raised. Pursuant to this act, "Assessments of the Estates Real & Personall of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants Freeholders & Governors" were levied for each quarter of the year 1700, the assessments for the first quarter being made Nov. 29, 1699. These assessments, in the handwriting of the city clerk, William Sharpas, occupy the first part of the earliest volume save one (see A. Dec.
1695) of the city tax rolls. This is a vellum-bound book, now in the custody of the bureau of municipal investigation and statistics of the department of finance. The names of property owners are listed by wards, and, against each name, the assessed valuation of the person's holdings and the amount of his tax. The amounts to be raised during each of the four quarters varied; so did the rate.
For the first quarter £400 was the amount to be raised, and the rate was "Seven farthings and Four White Wampum [this appears to be the latest recorded use of wampum as a money value] in the pound." Frederick Phillips appears as the largest tax payer; his assessment for the first quarter was £16:5s, on a valuation of £2,000.
The remainder of the volume contains assessment rolls to raise the city's quota "for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians" (see Dec. 28, 1700); other rolls for raising £450 "for the Maintenance of the Minister and poor" from the second Tuesday in January, 1701; still other rolls, prepared on Jan.
1, 1703 (q. v.), to raise the city's quota for maintaining soldiers at Albany.—Assessments 1699 to 1703 (MS.), in room 703, Munici-

Dec. Elizabeth Lloyd sells to Miles Forster land lying "without 27 the fortifications . . . and Adjoining Easterly on the Land of John Van Gee [Jan Vigne or Ving] Northerly by a peece of Land belonging to William Morris in the New Street leading from the Stocado gate to the Lane called Green or Maiden Lane."—From the original bill of sale, in box No. 1, N. Y. MSS., N. Y. Hist. Soc.
The "New Street" was Kip (now Nassau St.).—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006. It is shown, as here described, on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I). The bill of sale was for a tract of land on the east side of Nassau St., between Cedar and Liberty Sts., later occupied by the Middle Reformed Dutch Church (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935), which was conveyed afterwards to the U. S. Government for use as a post-office. The ground is at present occupied by the Mutual Life Insurance Co. building. The deed from Lloyd to Forster bears the same date as the bill of sale, and is recorded in Liber Deeds, XXIII: 265.

1700

It has proved impossible to complete, in time for inclusion in this volume, the promised sketch showing the development of the East River water front from the earliest times to 1730. It is hoped, however, that this can be included in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

In the second line of the item in the text referring to this subject, under 1700 (see p. 421), the date "1748-9" should read 1648-9.

In a letter to Secretary Vernoo, Bellomont makes the following interesting statement in regard to his correspondence with Capt.
Kidd. "As to Kidd's pretence of urging to his owners the necessity of allowing the seamen pay, I can safely take my oath there was no such thing, but so far the contrary, as that as often as I saw him he told me he knew the pyratts hants so well, that he could saÿ directly to 'em; but his articles with me which I send you . . . will shew his mind in that matter; for when we don't hear a man treat of a bargain, his hand and seal is the best evidence of his assent and consent to a bargain. As to my letter I writ to Kidd by Burgesse, and w<sup>ch</sup> Capt Lowth intercepted, I own I writ to him to come to N. Yorke, and if it be rightly considered, I did therein what became me. Upon my first coming hither I had reason to suspect he was turn'd rogue or pyrate, for contrary to his articles w<sup>ch</sup> me, he came hither to N. Yorke and here staid abt 3 moneths, and M<sup>r</sup> Livingston whom I found here before me told me he had some reasons to suspect he would turn pyrate. Two of his reasons were, a bargain whisper'd about, that Fletcher had covenanted wth Kidd to receive £10000 if he made a good voyage; the other was the dissolute life Kidd had liv'd during the 3 moneths he staid here. But when I writ that letter to Kidd by Burgesse, I had no account he was certainly turn'd pyrate, and then I could not be blam'd to have a just indignation against him, and to try all means to get him into my hands, and 'tis plain menacing him had not been the way to invite him hither, but rather wheedling, and that way I took, and after that manner I got him at last into Boston when I secur'd him; and a copy of that letter I then writ to him, I sent you wth the first news of my seizing him. If I was faulty in the letter I writ by Burgesse, I was no less so to that I writ by

The city's assessment rolls are prepared for the purpose of raising £285:10, the local quota toward £1,000 voted (Nov. 2) by the provincial legislature "for the better securing the five Nations of Indians in their fidelity to his Majesty and . . . for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians." The assessment is "one penny halfe penny halfe farthing per pound." The names of property owners are listed by wards, and against the name of each person appears the valuation of his property and the amount of his assessment.—Assessments 1699 to 1703 (MS.), in room 703, Municipal Bldg. See Nov. 29, 1699, Addenda.

The trial of Capt. William Kidd begins, at the Old Bailey. May According to the custom of the time, he is forced to conduct his 10 own defence, and is allowed no help in cross-examining witnesses.
His counsel is permitted to address the court only on questions of law. Although he was arrested for piracy, a charge of murdering his gunner, William Moore, is brought against him, without warning, and he is allowed no time to prepare his defence. Two of the men who deserted him at Madagascar (see July 7, 1699, Addenda) testify against him, and three sailors who were arrested with him give evidence in his favour. Kidd is prevented by Lord Chief Baron Ward from discrediting one of the mutineers as a witness, and from calling evidence to his own good character. The Lord Chief Baron sums up against him, and in about an hour, the jury pronounces him guilty.—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 141-66; 334-35.

On the following day, his two counsel failed to appear, and the French passes and other papers which would have proved his innocence, and which the house of commons had ordered to be delivered to him, were not produced. The two mutineers again testified against him, but the sailors who remained faithful to him were not permitted to be witnesses for him because they were included in the indictment. Kidd, of course, was no match for the experienced lawyers who were determined to convict him, nor for the Lord Chief Baron, who, in his summing up, insinuated that the French passes did not exist. After the jury had brought in a verdict of guilty, and the judge had sentenced him to be hanged, Kidd declared: "My lord, it is a very hard sentence. For my part, I am 1701 the innocent person of them all, only I have been sworn against May by perjured persons."—Dalton, op. cit., 169-92. Kidd was hanged 11 on May 23 (q. v.).

1702

Mar. On Atwood's arriving in England, charges of corruption were 30 brought against him for his conduct in the Bayard case and otherwise. In 1921, Maggs Bros., London, advertised for sale (see their catalogue No. 401) a collection of seventeen original documents bearing upon Atwood's case. These included Atwood's petition to the queen, asking for restitution to his offices of chief-justice of the supreme court, member of the council, and judge of the court of admiralty of New York Province (see Aug. 4, 1701); a similar petition from several members of the Leisler party in New York, including Jacob Leisler (2d) and Abraham Gouverneur; the English solicitor-general's opinion on Atwood's petition; and two petitions to the queen against Atwood's reinstatement, signed by British merchants trading to New York, and by freeholders and merchants of New York City. Atwood never returned.

Apr. Hannah, the wife of John Hutchins, declares, in a petition to 20 the governor, that her husband is to be tried on a charge "of which he is altogether innocent," and that she has seen the "panel" of the jury which is to try him, and finds that all are of "Dutch Extraction," persons unacquainted with the English language, and also "Strangers" to her husband's "life and Conversation."
She asks that the jury may consist of "Englishmen or at least [of persons] of English Extraction," men who may "properly be said to be of his neighbourhood."—Col. MSS., XLV: 96b (Albany).
Hutchins was a tavern-keeper and an anti-Leislerian (see Feb. 4);
cf. Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., Ch. III.

Nov. The provincial legislature passes an act to levy and collect 7 £1,800 "for the raising paying and maintaining one hundred and fifty fuzileers with their proper Officers to be Employ'd as Scouts Sixty two days for the Defence of the frontiers." The quota for the city and county of New York is fixed at £405.—Col. Laws
N. Y., I: 493-97. Assessment rolls in the city were ready on Jan.
1, 1703 (q. v.).

1703

Jan. Assessment rolls are made ready by the board of overseers to 1 provide the quota of the city and county of New York (£405 out of £1,800 for the province) "for maintaining 150 soldiers at Albany and 30 Scouts" (see Nov. 7, 1702, Addenda). The names of property owners are listed by wards, and against each name appears the valuation of his property and the amount of his assessment.—

See Nov. 29, 1699, Addenda.

1704

Apr. The legislature passes "An Ordinance for the further establish-3 ing the Supream Court of Judicature, &c." This provides that the court shall sit in New York City or another designated place the first Tuesday in June, the first Tuesday in September, the second Tuesday in October, and the second Tuesday in March, and that each session shall last for five days.—From original act printed by Bradford, in Emmet Collection, No. 5672.

June Verleth's or Verleth's Hill, named after Nicolas Verleth, was 12 the western part of Tuya St. (Exchange Pl.), from Broad St. to Broadway, which is to this day a very sharp ascent. It is shown as Flatten Barrack St. on Lyne's Survey of 1730 (Pl. 27, Vol. I), the name being a corruption of the Dutch Verlettenbergh. See April 27, 1767; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 999; Pl. 174: 21-23.

24 An account of the custom revenues and expenses of the province of New York from March 25, 1704, to this date, under the administration of Thomas Byerley, the collector and receiver-general, is prepared, showing a credit balance of £357:13:84. This is attested by Cornbury.—See original MS., folio, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

1706

May Cornbury writes to the inhabitants of Bergen, seeking the 16 privilege of cutting down trees "upon bergen point" for stockadoes, and seeking "that some of your people may help with their Carts to bring them to the water side, for which they shall be paid."—

Gov. Lovelace writes from Perth Amboy, N. J., to Lord Sunderland, secretary of state: "I trouble your Lordsp. at this time with the account of my Lord Corabury's misfortune who hath been arrested for several large sums of money at the suit of several persons here. It was some time after I landed in Long Island before I could get to New York, in which time my Lord might have taken care of himself. Several common civilities passed between us which made people jealous that I would protect his Lo<sup>d</sup> agst his Creditors which I could not in Justice do, and my poor Lord is now confined to his house . . ." The rest of the letter concerns Mompesson, and his appointment as chief-justice.
—From the original, advertised in Oct., 1920, by Maggs Bros., London.

Apr. Gov. Lovelace, in his first address to the assembly, says: "The 7 large Supplies of Soldiers and Stores of War for your Support and Defence, together with those necessary Presents for your Indian Neighbours, which her Majesty hath now sent you, . . . are evident Proofs of her particular Care of you. . . .

"I cannot in the least doubt (Gentlemen) but that you'll raise the same Revenue, for the same Term of Years, for the Support of the Government, as was raised by Act of Assembly in the eleventh Year of the Reign of the late King William, of glorious Memory. . . .

"I must in particular, desire you to provide for the necessary Repairs of the Fortifications of the Province. The Barracks are so small and so much out of repair, that I have been necessitated to billet the Recruits, that came over with me, upon this City, which I am sensible, hath been a Burthen to the Inhabitants; but I hope you will soon ease them of that Burthen.

"The fitting out a good Sloop, to attend her Majesty's Men of War in their Cruizings on this Coast, I take to be so necessary, for preserving your Navigation, that I expect you will find out a proper Method to defray that Charge. I am willing my Salary should be Taxed, that I may pay my Quota to so useful a Service."

A closely written journal of 7½ pages kept by Col. Samuel Vetch in connection with the projected expedition against Canada, commences March 11, 1709, the day of his departure from England with Col. Nicholson. It goes into minute details of their doings, including interviews with various assemblies of the American provinces. After negotiations in New England, they came into New York on May 18. On the 19th, Col. Vetch recorded: "the Lieut.
Governour Coll Ingoldsbie summoned a Council at Fort Ann; where we presented to them Her Majesties original instructions relating to the Expedition copies of which we had transmitted them before; after they had been read over in council and we had acquainted them with several things to be done not express in the same. . . ." From this point he continues his account of the transactions. The original document was in the possession of Maggs Bros., London, in October, 1920, and appears in their catalogue of that date.

By the terms of the first New York paper currency act, the June bills of credit were to be for a total face value of £5,000. The form of 8 the bills, as described in the act, is shown in the reproduction given on p. 973. The bills were to be for the following denominations:

400 were to be for	£5: 0:0	each
600 " " " "	0:40:00	"
600 " " " "	0:12:00	"
1,000 " " " "	0:10:00	"
2,800 " " " "	0: 5:0	"

Total £5,000: 0:0

—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 666.

It should be observed that the act of May 24, 1709, for raising £6,000 by taxation, to aid the Canada expedition, named Capt.
Robt. Walters, Capt. Lawrence Reade, Capt. John de Peyster, and Capt. Robt. Luring commissioners to manage the expedition.
—Ibid., I: 654.

Until 1922, when two of these bills (one for 5-shillings and one for 10-shillings, now in the author's collection) were offered for sale at The Anderson Art Galleries, examples of the bills of this first issue were not generally known to exist. The 5-shilling bill is here reproduced. More recently, Mr. Victor Paltits has acquired two examples of the same issue, showing variations in wording, indi-

1709 cating that Bradford printed two varieties bearing the same date.
 June In the case of the 5-shillings bill, the later variety seems to have 8 begun with the number 3345; and in the case of the 10-shillings bill, the change occurs presumably between numbers 3360 and 3365.

16 Ingoldesby writes from Perth Amboy to Lord Sunderland, secretary of state, acquainting him of the death of Lord Lovelace, and informing him that he has taken upon himself the charge of the administration of the government of New York and New Jersey. He asks for a continuance in the position. He also reports the suspension of Lewis Morris.—From catalogue No. 401 of Maggs Bros., London.

29 Col. Vetch writes from New York to the Earl of Sunderland, secretary of state: "I have presumed . . . to lay before you a short view of the miserable circumstances of the provinces of New York and Jerseys as we found there upon our arrival after the death of my Lo. Lovelace, in neither of which there was so much as one shilling of publick money. The misapplication of the publick money by the Governours that preceded my Lo. Lovelace having discouraged quite the Assembly for setting any more retinue [revenue?]. The province of New York about sixteen thousand pounds indebted, for payment of which the Assembly have all along forebore raising of money for fear of its not being applied to the proper use.

"This deplorable condition of the aforesaid province with regard'd to the publick stock, as well as their publick divisions and parties which are very violent, makes me presume most humbly to offer my advice to your Lop. [Lordship] as a very probable way of remedying all these evils. Coll. Francis Nicholson shows great abilities and experience in the matters of government . . .

whose Justice generosity and impartiality hath rendered him so universally beloved . . . makes him both better apprised of the circumstances and capable of applying a more sudden remedy to all their grievances than any Governour could be sent over from England."—From the original letter, advertised in Oct., 1920, by Maggs Bros., London. Nicholson was not appointed governour of New York; although, at various periods before and after this date, he held the governourships of Maryland, Virginia, Acadia, and Carolina.

In a memorial to Queen Anne, Lieut.-Gov. Ingoldesby, Col. Nicholson, and Col. Vetch draw attention to the fact that the magazines of New York, the Jerseys, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania do not contain sufficient arms for the troops of these colonies going on the expedition to Canada, and begging permission to buy sufficient to make up the required quantity, that the men may not complain that they are worse provided than those of Boston and Rhode Island, who have had arms sent over to them from England; also that the Indians of Connecticut and the Jerseys, who are ready to join in the expedition, may have presents sent to them as have the River Indians and the Indians of the Five Nations.—From the original document, advertised in Oct., 1920, by Maggs Bros., London.

Col. Francis Nicholson writes from New York to the Earl of Sunderland regarding preparations for the Canada expedition: ". . . Some of the Long Indian Indians are come to me already and I am in hopes there will be more. By the acct. that the Indian Spyes give who are returned from Canada [his enclosure] your Lordp. may likewise see in what condition they were in Canada. If the Indian acct. may be relied upon, I find that one of the great difficulties I shall meet with is the Transportation of the men, Provisions and Ammunition, and I suppose we shall meet with the like difficulties of carrying 3 or four small brass Guns . . . This day Governr. Ingoldesby and myself designs for to meet the Indians at Albany whither all the forces are gone up and most of the Arms and ammunition."—From the original letter, advertised in Oct., 1920, by Maggs Bros., London.

The governour's council decides "that the Lieut. Governour cannot grant any order or warrant for impressing any Mariner or other person who serves on board or is retained to serve on Board any Privateer or Trading Ship or Vessel that it employed in this Province or any Mariner or other person on shore in any Port thereof unless such Mariner shall have deserted from some Ship of Warr belonging to Her Majesty since the 14th. February 1707."—From a certified official copy of the council's report, advertised in Oct., 1920, by Maggs Bros., London.

A letter introducing the Indian chiefs on their visit to England in this year was written by Col. Samuel Vetch to Lord Sunderland on Feb. 10. He said: "This comes to introduce the hearer Col. Schuyler and the Indian Chiefs to kiss your Lordps hands. . . . He hath been the main (if not only) instrument of preserving the five Nations of Indians in alliance with the crown of Brittan from a total detection to the French. . . .

"I doubt not of your Lordps justice in procuring her Majestys orders for paying him what he can make appear to be justly due to him, the expense of conveying the Indians by land after their arrival in Brittan and providing them in fitt cloathing to appear before her Majesty. . . . I have ordered my friend Mr. James Douglas to provide lodging and accommodations for them until such time as they have waited on your Lordp: when I doubt not of your Lordps giving him directions about their entertainments: and at what rate her Majesty will have them treated, which will not be very expensive only it will be requisite her Majesty allow them a Coach to transport them to see the Town and Variatys; and to attend her Majesty when she shall please to allow them to wait upon her. If the expedition goes on against Canada Colonel Schuyler and their sudden return will be absolutely necessary for engaging the Five Nations to joyné unanimously in the same, for which end it will be necessary to give those Chiefs good presents of cloaths & Arms, and send over a gen<sup>l</sup> present to the Five Nations as is usual. And Col. Schuyler and Capt. Schuyler who officiates as Interpreter to the Indians, being both men of great use and service to the Crown will I hope by your Lordps advice both receive from her Majesty suitable reward for their services." After their visit, the Indian kings wrote on May 22, "from aboard

- 1710 her Majes Ship Dragon," to Lord Sunderland, expressing great satisfaction regarding their reception "both from Our Great Queen and Her Ministry," and thanking the secretary of state for "forwarding what hath been promised to us in behalfe of the Five Nations (viz.:) that the Fort may be built and that the men designed to remaine there may be commanded by Officers who can speak our Lingua. In our opinion none would be so proper for one thereof as Capt. Abraham Schuyler."—Magg's Bros. catalogue, No. 401, items 232 and 233. This latter letter, which is reproduced in the catalogue, is signed by the totems of the four chiefs.

- Sept. Gov. Hunter writes to Gov. Dudley, of Massachusetts, that the transports with provisions from New York have started.—Col. MSS., LVI: 108 (Albany). In A Letter to a Noble Lord Concerning the Late Expedition to Canada (London, 1712), Dummer gives the date of sailing (probably from Sandy Hook) as Sept. 18. See Oct. 1.
- 18 Gov. Hunter writes to Gen. Nicholson, enclosing the letters just received from Gen. Hill (see Aug. 22). He says: "My heart is soe full of y<sup>e</sup> Inclosed that I know not what to Write, If y<sup>e</sup> Orders are to Returne as I believe they are, I believe the best way with y<sup>e</sup> Iodians will be to Own the truth of y<sup>e</sup> matter . . . and to send them home as soon as may be with as much satisfaction as it is possible to Contrive on soe sad an occasion."—Col. MSS., LVI: 94b (Albany). See Oct. 9.
- Oct. Gov. Hunter writes to Gen. Hill that he has received by an express from Gen. Nicholson "the Resolutions of their Council of Warr" to retreat to Albany (see Oct. 9). He says the miscarriage of the expedition has "Struck me Senseless," and that he is now "in great pain for y<sup>e</sup> feverish and the Transports (see Sept. 17) with her which besides one thousand Barrels of pork have a vast quantity of all other provision for you on board of them." He hopes the fleet will fall in with them at the mouth of the St. Lawrence.—Col. MSS., LVI: 109 (Albany). The transports were wrecked on Cape Breton, and wholly lost, with all the officers, except two, and one hundred seamen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 284.
- 9 Gen. Nicholson, having retreated with his force to Albany (see Oct. 1), is met there by Gov. Hunter, and a conference is held with the Indians. A speaker for the red men says: "We see god is against us and . . . we Cant go forward to Reduce Canada having Returned twice;" the hope is expressed that Albany and Schenectady "may be fortified with all Speed," so that the enemy may not "take the Towns with fifty men." Gov. Hunter assures them of increased protection on the frontier, and adds: "I know not what Resolution the great Queen shall take for the Renewing of this Expedition but hope that you will be in Readyness if it shall be again intended." The Indians are given "a Belt of wampum and one Barrel Beer."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 278-79.
- Nov. An "Adresse to her Majesty Concerning the late Expedition 9 [to Canada—see July 30] and to pray her Majesty to revive it" is prepared, with signatures of both the council and assembly members subscribed. Gov. Hunter forwards it to the queen.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 325-26; Assemb. Jour., I: 303, 305; letter of Gov. Hunter to Gen. Nicholson in Col. MSS., LVI: 155b (Albany).

- May 1 In an address to the general assembly, Gov. Hunter says: "I can never persuade My selfe that you have any real pleasure in hearing the dayly Cries and Complaints of the Officers of y<sup>e</sup> Government & others who have Just demands upon it. Whilst the remedy is soe much in yo<sup>r</sup> power, and yet it seems strange that during the space of Two Yeares that I have had the Honour to be at the head of it in a very Active time and Consequently of great Expenses, there has not been one farthing given towards its Support, for what Bills have been offer'd for that purpose have either been so deficient or Clog'd with Such Clauses and Circumstances as made it Impossible for the Council to pass them without an apparent breach of her Majestys Instructions. . . . And when they have as it was their duty amended them you have as often Resolved not to admitt of Such Amendm<sup>ts</sup> upon a very ill grounded pretence that the Council had noe right to amend Money Bills I have Sufficient warrant to affirme that pretence to be ill grounded from this paragraph in the Lords Commissioners of Trades Letter to me of 13th of November Last In these words 'As to the Assemblys pretence that the Council Cannot Amend a Money Bill, it is Groundless and will not be allowed of here. The Council having an Equall Right with them in Granting of money there being nothing in her Majestys Commission to you under the Great Seal of the Kingdom to the Contrary, By Vertue of which Commission they only Sit as an Assembly and therefore you will do well to Acquaint them herewith that they noe Longer Insist upon what is Soe ill-grounded.'"—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 332.
- Nathanial Britton, James Garrison, John Dove, and John Bellue petition the council for "a license to keep a ferry on Staten island." On Nov. 22, a committee of the council reported in favour of granting the petition for a term of 30 years; confirmed, Nov. 27.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 411. See April 2.
- 1713
- The first public ferry between New York and Staten Island Apr. 2 is established by the governor and council through a patent, for 21 years, to John Dove and John Bellue (see Nov. 6, 1712), permitting them to keep a ferry at a place called the Sand Bay, Staten Island, and to run from thence to New York, Long Island, and other adjacent places. At the same time the council confirms a report on the rates of ferriage.—Cal. Coun. Min., 251; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 413; Cal. Land Papers, 104.
- In the case of Dom. Regina vs. Phillip Dennis, the prisoner Oct. 17 having been "found guilty to the value of Ten pounds" upon an indictment (for what is not stated), "The Court gives judgement That ye Prisoner be whipt at ye Carts Tailing with Thirty Nine Lashes upon his bare backe at ye places following vizt

June 25 "An Act for running and ascertaining the lines of Partition and Division between this Colony, and the Colony of Connecticut" bears this date.—Laws of New-York (Gaine), chap. 383. This was afterwards confirmed by the king.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 707. The later developments of the subject, to complete the partition line, show articles of agreement, dated April 29, 1725, between commissioners representing the two provinces (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 492); a consideration of the subject by the assembly in 1729 (Assemb. Jour., I: 605); and an indenture between the two provinces, with description of monuments, dated June 3, 1731 (Cal. Conn. Min., 312). See also Bowen, Boundary Disputes of Conn. (1882), 73-74.

July 23 Jacob Ten Eyck, "aged about fifteen years, son of Coenraat Ten Eyck," becomes a registered apprentice to Charles le Roux, the goldsmith. In this lad's case, the apprentice's agreement shows considerable variation from the usual form, inasmuch as the father undertakes to provide "aparrul Lodging and washing in Summer time," and to pay the boy's expenses "to go to the winter Evening School."—Liber 29 of Conveyances (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc., printed in Collections (1909), 114.

Oct. 13 Lieut. Col. James Weems and Maj. Lancaster Symes, commanding "His Majesties two Independent Companies Posted in fort George," in a memorial to Pres. Schuyler and the council, set forth the wretched living conditions of the soldiers. They are "quite Destitute," they say, "of Bedding and Hardley any Covering by which they are forced to Lye in their red Coats and other Cloaths on the bear boards or a little Straw which wears the Cloathing out Long before others Come Over, all w<sup>ch</sup> has Obliged many of the Men to quit the Garrison and Lye abroad in such poor Places as they Can procure and pay for, out of their Slender Pay, . . . and many that fall Sick must Lye wth those that are well There being no provision for them Unless the Cap<sup>t</sup> provides for them Amongst the Inhabitants out of his own pay, which is without President in Any other part of His Majesties Dominions Elsewhere." Such relief is sought "as may prevent their Ruin before the Winter Comes on."—Cal. MSS., LXII: 9 (Albany). No action of the council is recorded.

Aug. 18 Wm. Smith (the elder) writes from New Haven to Rev. Stephen Williams at Springfield: "The Religious Affair at New York is advancing I trust thro' Divine Goodness toward a peaceful Settlement, tho it has not hitherto failed of the utmost Efforts of its adversaries to overturn it.

"The people there have bought a piece of Ground & Materials for Building which by this time I suppose they have entred upon."—From original letter in Emmet Collection, No. 94. This is evidently a reference to the first Presbyterian Church, on Wall St., which was begun in 1719 (q. v.) and completed in 1722.

— In this year, the earliest engraved plan of Boston was published. It was drawn by Capt. John Bonner and "Engraved and Printed by Fra. Dewing." The only copy of the earliest issue of this important plan, which corresponds to the Bradford Map of New York, is in the author's collection.—See Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, II.

— Probably in this year was drawn, by William Burgis, A View of the Great Town of Boston, taken from a Standing on Noddles-Island . . . This view is often referred to by the name of its publisher, William Price. See Pl. 25, Vol. I. The only known copy of this print, in the first state, is in the author's collection.

— In this, the year of Lord Cornbury's death, was painted, it is said, his portrait in low-necked evening dress (see Man. Conn. Conn., 1869, p. 762), which was asserted in 1867, hung in the portrait-gallery at Kensington, Eng.—Hist. Mag., 2d ser. (1867), II: 169. In a brief summary of original references regarding this peculiar foible of Cornbury, Broadhead states that, in 1868, the painting was in the possession of J. S. Packington, M. P.—Ibid. (1868), III: 71-72. See Feb. 9, 1708.

1724

Ag. 31 The king issues "Additional Instructions" to Burnet. These merely repeat the former order: "do not pass or give your Consent, on any pretence whatsoever, to any Act or Acts Laying a Duty on European Goods imported in English Vessels, upon the Importation thereof into Our Province under Your Government, on Pain of Our highest Displeasure." The order is signed "GR."—From the original manuscript in the "Collection of autograph letters, etc. 1674 to 1872," preserved in the Columbia Univ. Library.

— In this year, William Burgis engraved a view of Harvard College, showing Massachusetts, Stoughton, and Harvard Halls. This is the first engraved view of the college.—See Wm. Loring Andrews, A Prospect of the Colleges in Cambridge in New England (1897); and Green, Ten Fac-simile Reproductions Relating to Old Boston and Neighborhood (1901), 37. Only four copies of this view are known; one of these, owned by the college, being very imperfect. The best preserved copy known is owned by the author; this, however, lacks the title. The Mass. Hist. Soc. owns the other two impressions, one in the first and one in the second state. The earliest known view of Harvard College is the tiny sketch found on the Franquelin Map (MS.) of 1607 (see Pl. 22-b, Vol. I).

"This Numb. 32, concludes the first year of our New-York Gazette. All Persons that take the same are desired to Pay in what is Due, in order to enable the Undertakers to continue the Publication of said Gazette, or else it must drop."—N. Y. Gaz., Oct. 24-31, 1726.

July 6 The exact location of the powder-house appears on an undated sketch or survey of the "Bounds of M<sup>r</sup> Barclay & L. Lispenard on the Kips & Corporation," which is preserved with the Banker Collection, N. Y. Pub. Library.—See plate description, Vol. I, p. 35-86, for list of the more important Banker surveys.

Nov. 7 In a deed of sale of the land occupied by Bradford's printing-establishment, the "Sign of the Bible," where the New-York Gazette was printed, at what is now Hanover Sq. (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963), the property is described as a "corner house fronting Southly to the Market, or Old Slip, called heretofore by the name of Burger's Path, bound west by Smith Street, which said corner house is now in the possession of William Bradford, Prieter."—From the original document, sold at The Anderson Galleries, March 14, 1921.

Mar. 11 A proclamation is issued by the governor providing that, "because of the infection of the air and contagion of the measles now very much spread in and about the city of New York, which may be by the resort of many of our good subjects from the several parts of our said Province to our Supreme Court be the means of spreading the same more generally and with greater speed through our said province," all cases and proceedings before the court are adjourned to April 22, 1729.—Min. of Supreme Court of Judicature, 1727-1732 (MS.), 109.

Apr. 23 The ministers, elders, and deacons of the Dutch Church petition Gov. Montgomerie for permission to take up a collection for finishing the church which they are building on Nassau St. between Cedar and Liberty Sts. This was granted on April 25. The original petition, which is in the author's collection, is reproduced as Pl. 29, Vol. IV.

June 9 "The Rev. Mr. William Vesey, Rector of Trinity Church in New York, produced in Court a Commission from Right Rev. Father in God Edmond the Lord Bishop of London authorising and appointing him the said William Vesey Commissary of and over the Province of New York and New Jersey, which was read, and thereupon the said William Vesey took the usual oaths appointed by law and subscribed the Test and also subscribed to the Articles of Religion of the Church of England agreed upon in the Convention held in the year One thousand five hundred and sixty two and voluntarily made oath that he will to the utmost of his understanding del uprightly and justly in his office of Commissary aforesaid without respect or favour of reward."—Min. of Supreme Court of Judicature, 1727-1732 (MS.), 126.

In its petition to Gov. Montgomerie for a new charter, the Mc.23

1730 common council states "That the City of New York is an antient Mar. City and the Citizens thereof have antiently held and used and 23 still do hold and use divers and sundry rights, liberties, privileges
... as well as the great improvement of his Majesties Reveaue and the sensible encrease of navigation, trade and commerce as to the advancement of the said City . . .

"That the said Corporation and Citizens have ever been strenuous assertors of the Protestant Religion, . . . and have ever demonstrated their sincere loyalty and affection to the Crown of Great Brittain by an unfeigned readyness and alacrity in paying all due regard to the support of the honour and dignity of his Majesties Government, and in the chearfull payment of those duties and taxes for that purpose levied and raised . . .

After this preamble, the petition continues with the following requests:

1. That the lands and properties held by the city be confirmed to it, and that the limits of the city be extended 400 ft. beyond low water mark from "Bestavers Killitie" around the lower part of Manhattan to "Curlaers hook."

2. That the corporation have sole charge of the ferries around the island and receive all the profits therefrom.

3. That it have the grant of all markets, docks, slips, and wharves.

4. That it have power to appoint surveyors, measurers, porters, and other local officers.

5. That the mayor be authorized to appoint a deputy mayor.

6. That the mayor and recorder, or either of them, with the major part of the aldermen and assistants, may hold "comon Councils" and make or repeal ordinances.

7. That the city be divided into seven wards and that each ward have the usual officers.

8. That the mayor, recorder, and aldermen be justices of the peace and have power to "hear and determine all pleas of flourty shillings and under."

9. That the mayor, recorder, or deputy mayor, with any three or more aldermen have authority to admit freemen and to administer the proper oaths.

10. That if election day or the day for administering oaths should fall on a Sunday, the ceremony be postponed until the next day.

11. That the corporation have power to erect public buildings.

12. That it be authorized to sue for "dues and lawfull demands."

13. That the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, or any three or more of them, have power to hold general quarter sessions of the peace.

14. That the corporation receive a confirmation of all the lands and properties it holds on Nassau Island.

15. That the mayor, recorder, sheriff, coroner, and (after the death of William Sharpas) town clerk be "elective."

16. That no attorneys be permitted to practice in the mayor's court except such as have been appointed by the mayor, recorder, and aldermen and approved by the governor.

17. That William Sharpas be appointed "Town Clerk" for life.

18. That the governour grant the corporation "such other powers, liberties, franchises, rights, free customs, jurisdictions, privileges, immunities and things as may be needfull for the good rule and Government thereof."—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 593-95, citing Land Papers, X: 130.

June Upon reading the petition of Abraham Lodge, praying that the chief-justice would recommend him to the governour as a person qualified to practice law, the supreme court orders "that none of the Judges of this Court do at any time hereafter recommend any person to his Excellency the present Governour or to the Governour or Commander-in-Chief for the time being, in order to the obtaining a License to Practice as an attorney at law unless it shall appear that the person who shall sue for such License had served for the Terme of seven Years with some Attorney of this Court or had served an Apprenticeship to some attorney of his Majesty's Courts of Kings Bench or Common Pleas in the Kingdom of Great Britain."—Min. of Supreme Court of Judicature, 1727-1732, p. 214-15. On Oct. 17, Lodge "produced in Court his Excellency's License authorising him to practice as an Attorney at Law, which was read and accordingly the said Abraham Lodge was admitted and sworn, took the oaths appointed by law and subscribed the Test."—Ibid., sub dato. A newspaper advertisement reads: "Just arrived from Great Britain, and are to be Sold on board the Ship Alice and Elizabeth, Capt. Paine Commander, several likely Welch and English Servant Men, most of them Tradesmen. Whoever inclines to purchase any of them may agree with said Commander, or Mr. Thomas Noble, Merchant, at Mr Hazard's, in New-York; where also is to be Sold several Negro Girls and a Negro Boy, and likewise good Cheshire Cheese."—N. Y. Gaz., Sept. 4-11, 1732. In the case of the white servants, this means, of course, the sale of their time and services, under indenture of apprenticeship, to pay for their passage to America.—See, for example, April 20, 1752. The negroes, on the other hand, were doubtless to be sold into slavery.

The legislature passes an act to "Preserve the Breed of English Pheasants in this Colony." The preamble states that "the Late Governour did place about half a Dozen couple of English Pheasants on Nutton Island, and first Pinion'd them to the End they might Remain there to propagate their Species, With a view that their Encrease would Spread from thence & Stock the Country with their Kind." The law provides that any person found killing the pheasants shall be fined ten shillings.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 825-27.

Gov. Cosby writes to the lords of trade: "I have very long declined laying before your Lordships the behaviour of a certain Member of his Majesty's Council, here, while I had the least hopes of his return to his duty, upon this prospect I have been [sic] born with many inconveniences his dangerous conduct still growing upon my patience til his Majestys Service and the safety of this Province demanded that I should explain this man to your Honble Board.

"Mr James Alexander is the person whom I have too much occasion to mention, at my first arrival I found that the late President Van Dam had employ'd him in the payment of the forces, and for that reason I show'd him all the Civility in my power, but no sooner did Van Dam and the late chief Justice Morris (the later especially) begin to treat my Administration with rudeness and ill manners, then I found Alexander to be at the head of a scheme to give all imaginable uneasiness to the Govern't by infusing into ad making the worst impressions on the minds of the people, A Press supported by him and his party began to swarm with the most virulent libels, Scurrilous and abusive pamphlets publish'd against the Ministry, and other persons of Great honour and quality in England were reviv'd and reprinted here, with such alterations as served to incense and enrage the people against the Governour, the Council, the Assembly and all Magistrates in general, no man in his Majesty's Service tho' many had been ten and twenty years, in the same employments was spar'd. . . .

"Cabals were form'd against the Government and a meeting of their factious men is still held several nights in the week at a private lodging which I have discover'd Alexander always p'sent and Morris, till he lately fled privately for England, in great fear as tis publicly reported lest the printer of their Seditious libel should discover him, for these reasons it is, that I have not lately requir'd Alexander's presence in Council. . . .

"My Lord at this distance from England I am not able to trace the facts, but I am assured that this Alexander (some years since a teacher of navigation on board one of his Majesty's Shippes) was turn'd away and dismissed from the Service for disaffection to the protestant Succession, and refusing the Oath's to the Govern'm't, . . . and now while I am writing, after the Council had ordered certain Seditious libels, tending to open rebellion, to be burnt by the hands of the common Hangman, that the printer of them be committed to the Common Goal, and prosecuted by the Attorney Gen'l and a proclamation issued by their unanimous advice . . . with a reward of fifty pounds for the discovery of the Author of them, this man James Alexander has appear'd as the printers Council and Attorney for several successive days before the Chief Justice James De-Lancy Esq; . . . for these reasons I intreat your Lordps to intercede with his Majesty that a Member of Council, whose beehaviour has declar'd him to be in an intrest

1734 opposite to that of the Crown, who is dayly inciting the unthinking Dec. 6 people, to sedition, riot and insurrection by blackening and aspersing his fellow Members of that board, and all others whose loyalty and integrity have recommended them to my predecessors and myself, may be removed from a seat to which he is the greatest disgrace and dishonour, and I hope yr Lordships will be so good to move his Majesty in ord<sup>r</sup> that a Commission be granted for John Moor to succeed James Alexander as Councillor in the Province of New York."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 20-22. See Aug. 28, 1735.

July The mayoral seal made by Charles le Roux is reproduced instead of 1735.

— In this year was published the great view known as the East Prospect of the City of Philadelphia, drawn under the direction of Nicholas Scull and engraved by G. Vanderghucht. This view measures nearly seven feet in length. One of these views is in the author's collection.
Aug. The sketch of the King's College seal, drawn by Dr. Johnson 9 on the back of a letter of this date from his son (q. v.), is reproduced herewith:

*Esse ad ecclesiam hanc admodum bene dispositam habet prospicere in dicta Civitate. Hinc deo bene dicitur non esse profectum hinc deo bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur Et bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur
Et bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur bene dicitur*

1755

Sept. Shortly after this date, Samuel Blodget issued his Prospective 8 Plan of the Battle near Lake George, on the Eighth Day of September, 1755. With an Explanation thereof. This birds-eye view was engraved on copper by Thomas Johnson, and printed in Boston by Richard Draper in this year. This is believed to be the first American-engraved "historical print."—See "Blodget's Plan of the Battle on the Shores of Lake George, 1755," in Green's Ten Facsimile Reproductions Relating to New England (1902), 33.

Ja. 15 Oliver de Lancy, Beverly Robinson, and James Parker convey to Samuel Francis the house at the south-east corner of Broad and Pearl Sts., for a consideration of £2,000.—Liber Deeds, XXVI: 62.

Francis immediately mortgaged the property to Andrew Gautier.
—Liber Mortgages, I: 258-59. The house had been known as the De Lancy Mansion, having been erected in 1719 (q. v., Apr. 14) by Etienne de Lancy, and occupied by him until his death in 1741.
Col. Joseph Robinson made it his residence for several years, after which the firm of De Lancy, Robinson & Co. occupied it as a store-room until it was bought by Francis. The firm dissolved partnership at about this time.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1765. See Coldeu writes from Fort George to Attorney-General Kempe: May 3 "The Sheriff has taken into his Custody several of the French Kings subjects who were found at large in this city & seized their Papers. The General will order an officer who understands french well to attend you at the sheriffs house to morrow morning at nine of the Clock before noon where I must desire your being present at examining the papers which may be of great consequence to his Majesty's service."—From original in Emmet Collection, No. 885a.

Joseph Reade, administrator of the estate of Adolph Philippe, Aug.
19 deceased, signs a detailed inventory and accounting, which includes a list of Philippe's effects found in various rooms of his residence and storehouse. In the second story of the house, for example, is "a Plan of y<sup>e</sup> City of New York." Philippe died on Jan. 19, 1750 (q. v.), and administration on the estate commenced soon after, the first date in the accounting being "Jaouary 24, 1749" (1750).
The accounting was sworn to by "Jos. Reade, Adm<sup>r</sup>" on Jan. 13, 1767. For a brief sketch of Philippe's life, see Man. Com. Coun.

At a council held in Fort George, Coldeu communicates to the Jan.
9 members a letter he has received from Gov. Penn regarding certain Indians who desire to go to Sir Wm. Johnson, and thence to their friends on the Susquehanna. "The Council unanimously advised his Honour not to receive the said Indians within this Government or to suffer them to pass thro' the Province, but to Issue the proper Orders to the Justices and Magistrates of Richmond County to stop and Cause them to Return."—From a copy of the minutes, signed by Banyar, in Emmet Collection, No. 86.

"The Court considering that it has been the usage of most of 26
the civilised nations in Europe to distinguish the different orders of Men in the learned Professions by their Dress—and the Judges in our Mother Couotry having from the most Early days been accustomed to appear at Westminster in Term time, in Robes and Bands and the Council in Bar Gowns and Bands; and that Example being already initiated in several of the British colonies—and the Court conceiving that the practice at home stands upon good reasons and that the Introduction of the like usage in this province would advance the dignity, Authority, Solemnity and decorum of the Court and have many useful Consequences—and the Judges of this Court now Signifying their Intention to appear upon the Bench in October Term ensuing in Robes and Bands: it is therefore herely ordained that no person practicing as Counsel at the bar shall in the said Term and at any future Term appear in this court or in any of the Courts or the Circuits unless he be habited in Bar Gown and Band, commonly used by Baristers at Westminster, under the Penalty of a contempt of this rule."—Min. of the Supreme Court of Judicature (MS.), 1762-1764, p. 357.

John Holt concludes his reflections, begun in the previous issue July 26 of his paper, concerning the new regulations in the post-office.
He says, in part: "In the Business of News-Papers sent by the Post, this new Act will occasion great Revolutions, if not wholly put a Stop to it, unless the Gentlemen concern'd, and all who desire the Continuance of a Business so entertaining and useful to the Public, will contribute their Aid in their several Stations, to its Encouragement: Those who have Papers sent them, by making punctual Payments;—The Riders, by faithfully delivering the Papers on the Road, at the Places, and to the Persons directed; the Persons in whose Care they are left on the Road, in delivering them to the right Owners . . . and all honest Men in general, in exposing the Infamy of those who embezzle or open Papers that don't belong to them. . . . If this infamous Practice is continued, the sending News Papers by the Post must cease.—For whereas the enclosing Papers in seal'd Covers was some Security, as only here and there a harden'd shameless Pilferer would presume to open seal'd Papers that did not belong to them, . . . Now therefore that that Security is taken away, and the Papers may be read without breaking the Covers, it is not likely that many of them will get to the Hands of their Owners, and consequently most People will stop [their subscriptions], and Business cease, unless it is prevented by the extraordinary Care of the Persons thro' whose Hands the Papers pass. . . .—N. Y. Post-Boy, July 26, 1764. See also "John Holt, Printer and Postmaster," by V. H. Paltsits, in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin, Sept., 1920.

1764
July

" . . . No Morris deed can be found, but the probability is that the withdrawal of the Carrol advertisement in the 'Post Boy' in June, 1765, marks the time of the purchase of the property by Roger Morris, and approximately that of the building of the house."—Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 4; Landmark Map Ref. Patrick Henry makes his famous speech in the Virginia house of burgesses against the stamp taxes. A French traveller (see Aug. 27), who chanced to visit the assembly on this date, writes in his journal: "Shortly after I Came in one of the members stood up and said he had read that in former times tarquin and Julus had their Brutus, Charles had his Cromwell, and he Did not Doubt but some good american would stand up, in favour of his Country, but (says he) in a more moderate manner, and was going to Continue, when the speaker of the house rose and Said, he, the last that had stood up had spoke treason, and was sorry to see that not one of the members of the house was loyal Enough to stop him, before he had gone so far. upon which the Same member stood up again (his name is henery) and said that if he had afronted the speaker, or the house, he was ready to ask pardon, and he would shew his loyalty to his majesty King G. the third, at the Expence of the last Drops of his blood, but what he had said must be attributed to the Interest of his Countrys Dying liberty which he had at heart, and the heat of passion might have lead him to have said something more than he intended, but, again, if he had said any thing wrong, he heged the speaker and the houses pardon. some other Members stood up and backed him, on which that afaire was dropped."—From "A French Traveller in the Colonies, 1765," in Am. Hist. Review (Oct., 1921), 745, printed from MS. recently discovered in the archives of the Service Hydrographique de la Marine, in Paris.

There appears in Weyman's Gazette an advertisement of an unusual nature. It issues from "Johnson-Hall," under date of July 4, Sir William Johnson giving public notice "That in Consequence of his Treaty in May last, with the Senecas and Delawares of Susquehanna," he has in his custody 25 white captives, surrendered to him by the Indians, whom he will be glad to deliver "to their Relations on Application." Most of the 25, whom he goes on to describe in the advertisement, have been in Indian captivity eight or nine years, and were so young when captured that their names are unknown. The list includes "A Girl of about 8 Years old, supposed to be taken near Minisink," "Three Boys taken some Years ago of about 8, 10, and 12," and two young women, "supposed to belong to New-Jersey," with "Two Children they had by Indians."—*N. A description of the City at this time appears in the journal of a French traveller, as yet unidentified: "Sandy hook, and the Southernmost point of long Island, form the Entrance of New York Bay. This is Called the Narrows. it is but 2 m. broad and opens the ocean to full view. the passage up to York from sandy hook is safe, and not above 25 miles in length. the Common navigation is between the East and west banks, in two or three and twenty feet water, but it is said that an Eighty gun ship maybe brought through a narrow winding unfrequen'd Channel, between the North End of the East bank and Coney Island. there has been a 70 gun ship up Close to the town. The Island on which the City is built is about 14m. long, and not above one mile broad. the S. W. point projects into a fine spacious bay, 9 miles in length and about 4 in breadth, at the Confluence of hudsons or N. W. river and the straight between long Island and the North Eastern Shore, or East river. on this point is the City, which Consists of about 2700 houses or buildings, it is upwards of a mile in length and about 1/2 that in breadth, it is said to be a very healthy spot. the East and South parts are low and Convenient for wharfs, the north and west parts Elevated and Dry. the Streets are Irregular, but being paved with round pebles, are always Clean. there are Several well built brick houses in the English taste, the others in the Dutch with the gablends towards the Streets and Coverd with tyles [cf. Kalm, Travels, I: 249.]; this City is suplyed with markets in Different parts, abounding with great plenty and variety, they have Beef, pork, veal, mutton, poultry, venison, wild fowl, Especially wild pigeon, fish, oysters, roots, and all Kinds of vegetables and fruits, in their Seasons; this City is the metropolis of the province and by its Comodious situation Commands all the trade of the western part of Connecticut and that of East Jersey; no Season prevents their shipping from going out and Coming into port, there are always pilot boats at the narows ready to Conduct them In on first sight.

"upon the S. W. point of the City stands the fort which is a square with four Bastions mounted with 9 pounders but in very bad order. within the walls is the Governors house where he usually resides, opposite to it are brick Baracks. the Governors house is 3 stories high and fronts to the west.

"Below the walls of this fort or garrison near the water there is a fortification to Defend the grand road, (but Ships Can Ly'e with safety out of its reach) the lower part or foundation of this Battery is built with stone, and the merlons Consist of Cedar Joists filld up with Earth. it mounts 92 24 pounders which are almost level with the water, this forti'on is not of any great service to the harbour, which is in East river and also the principle part of the town which lyes that way. about 6 furlongs from the fort lye noten [Governors] Island behind which, betwixt [it] and long Island, is a passage for prey large vessels, on which not one gun of this forti'on Can be brought to bare. this Island lye about S E from the fort in the middle of East river. it is reserved as a Sort of a Demense for the Governors, they propo'se to Erect a Strong Castle on it, but there is as yet not the least appearance thereof. this according to my Judgement is the p[ro]perest place for a forti'on.

"there are besides this, two other Islands in the Bay opposite the town but out of reach of the guns, they say there is very good fresh water on all those Islands they serve for vessels to ly Curenten by them.

"the City hall is a Strong building two Stories high situated where four Streets meet and fronts to the S. W. on one of the most Spacious Streets in town. here they hold their Council and General Courts.

"the Inhabitants of new York are a mixed people, mostly Decended from the Dutch planters originally, there are still two Churches in which religious worship is performed in that language, but the number that talk it Diminishes Daily. all religions are permitted here Except the roman Catholique.

"the City of York Consists principally of merchants, shop keepers, and tradesmen (as Dns philadelphia) who have the reputation of punctual and fair Dealings. there are Some very rich houses in it. the people are very sciable and kind [to] Strangers.

"felt making is a Considerable Branche in york and it is said their hats are as good as in England.

"the N. E. part of New York Island is Inhabited Chiefly by Dutch farmers who have a Small vilage there Called harlem pleasantly Situated on a flat Cultivated for the City Markets.

"scarce a third part of the province is Cultivated. the Colony of Connecticut which is vastly inferior to this In its Extent, has according to a late Computation, above 133,000 Inhabitants of which a militia of 27000 men, whereas the whole number of Souls Contained in New York province is but 110,000, and the militia 18000.

"the Situation of new york with regard to foreign markets Is to be preferred to any of the Colonies. it lies in the Center of the Continent, has at all times a Short and easy access to the ocean, and has almost the whole trade of Connecticut and New Jersey, two fertile and well Cultivated Colonies. hudsons river which runs up in the Country near lake ontario (and Carries Small vessels as far as albany on Sd. river 150 [m.] from York) Impowers them to Cary on a Considerable trade with the Back Indians, to whom they Send rum, ammunition, blankets, Strouds [blankets], and wampum or Conque shell Bugles. In return for which, they have all Kinds of furs, and peltry; they always have been in good Intelligence with the five nation, now Six Nation Indians, which are the Bravest and most redoutable of all the Indian Nations, that Canada has often Experienced;

"the Importation of Dry goods from England to this province has been Considerable formerly, Insomuch that the merchants were often at a loss how to make returns, or remittances to the 1765 English merchants, but this is not so much the Case now, and Aug. Especially since the Stamp Duties have been talked of. Indeed the 27 Inhabitants of all the Different Colonies are so Exasperated at this present time, at the stationing men of war all along the Coste to prevent their Carrying on any foreign Trade, Especially with the french Islands and now adding the Stamp Duties, that they are resolved to raise every thing within themselves, and Import nothing from England. This resolution tho' of a Short Standing, has affected England to that Degree that Several Corps of tradespeople were risen, and Could not be quelled without a Considerable body of troops that were Dispersed in the Diff't. parts of the City of London for that purpose.

"there had been several persons appointed in the Different Colonies, to be Collectors of Sd. Duties, but they were all glad to resigne to save their lives.

"the Exports of New York to the west Indias are flower, peas, rye meal, bread, Indian Corn, oignons, boards, Staves, lumber, horses, sheep, pickled oysters, beef and pork. of flower, which is the main article, there has been shipped about 90,000 Barrels, pr.
annum. to preserve their Credit in this important branch of their staple, they appoint officers to Inspect and brand every Barrel before it is shipped. the returns are Chiefly sugar, rum, molasses
etc. the spaniards Commonly Contract with this and the Colony of Pensilvania for provisions, and with Virginia for Masts and yards, much to the advantage of Sd. Colonies, the returns being wholly in Cash. their wheat, flower, Indian Corn, and lumber, shipped to libone and the maderas, balance the mader wine Imported which is no small quantity, it being their usual Drink after meals. they Export to Ireland great quantities of flax Seed. they Sent in one year 13,000 hhdns. in return they have Irish linnens.

"there is along hudsons river great stock of timber of all Kinds and good Conveniences for ship building, also Iron mines in plenty and of the best quality out of which they furnish Boston and road Island, for their building. this is a Considerable branch of the trade of this province, the bodies of Iron mines in the Northern parts of it are so many, their quality so good, and their situation so Convenient with regard to wood, water, Carriages, and all other Conveniences, that it is generally thought (with attention) they might rival the Swedes in this article."—From "A French Traveller in the Colonies, 1765," in Am. Hist. Review (Oct., 1921), 81-84, printed from MS. recently discovered in the archives of the Société Hydrographique de la Marine, in Paris.

Oct. Evert Bancker wrote in a letter in Jan. 7, 1765 (probably error 31 for 1766): "The Merchants of this City are come to a Resolution to which above 400 of us have set our hands that unless the Stamp Act is repealed that we will not sell any European goods that are shipp'd after the 1 Jan. 1766."—From A. L. S., advertised for sale by The Anderson Galleries (item No. 33), Oct. 30, 1913, in catalogue of the John Boyd Thacher collection of autographs. This reference is apparently to the resolution of Oct. 31, 1765 (q.v.), and it appears likely that, when Bancker wrote the foregoing letter, additional signatures had increased the total from 200 on Oct. 31, 1765, to 400 on Jan. 7, 1766. Cf. the resolution of Jan. 7, 1766.

Dec. Colden writes to Sir William Johnson: "I received your kind 15 letter of the 9th and 15th of last month at a time I was so much engaged in publick business that it was not in my power to answer it & since I retired I was under a necessity of writing to the Minority on the late transactions before I gave up the Government. You must believe I am very glad to be out of the way of the Malice of wicked men I found Sir Henry was resolved to make himself easy How far he will succeed time must shew. He came away without any Instructions The Kings order in his Privy Council of the 26th of July has renewed all the rage of the Party against me as appeals from a Verdict & Judgement are confirmed Tho' the Stamp Act was made use off to excite the Mob yet the directing it against me arose from the resentment of the men who think their power is abridged by establishing Appeals. You can judge as well as I can what effects these seditious transactions are like to produce in Great Britain. The Dependency or Independency of the Colonies seems now to be brought to the Crisis & it remains with the Parliament to give it the Proper Issue whether the Parliament of Great Britain shall submit to the Colonies or the Colonies to the Parliament."—From original letter in the Emmet Collection, No. 6863, 30 Gov. Moore writes in a letter to a friend: "It would give me great satisfaction to have the power of restoring the Province to its former tranquility, which I am persuaded might easily be done, Dec.

30 if there were no secret Abettors of these disorders, for those who really appear as the principal Actors, are not of consequence enough to be regarded, or able to carry any thing into execution, if they were not assur'd of being well supported."—From original

In a letter to Secretary Conway, Gen. Gage says: "It is to be wished, that the Decency Submission & Moderation recommended to the People of the Colonies, the necessity & propriety of which, every man of sense would acknowledge when recommended to him, had produced better effects. But the maxim laid down amongst them from the beginning was, that the clamor could not be too great, that the Spirit of the People could not be raised to too high a pitch; that by such means only they should obtain redress: these notions were so general, that the few moderate people amongst them were forced to silence, or gave offence by their advice. The wiser & better sort of people have certainly disapproved of the outrages that have been committed, tho' they have approved of clamor & noise. The whole have been united to oppose the execution of the Stamp Act, & to find means to carry on business independent of it; . . . I have kept within my sphere, not to interfere further than by advice, unless application was made to me by the Civil Power for assistance. . . . tho' I could not entertain that confidence in the people of this place [New York], which His Majesty's Council here did, . . . it became me, whatever my private opinion might have been, to acquiesce in their determination. Tho' I asked some, if they could pretend to foresee how the poison would operate which had been infused into the People; It's effects were seen in the tumults which happened in the beginning of November, & a timely aid if it had been demanded would at least have prevented the threats of committing Acts of Rebellion which they were on the point of putting in execution, by an open assault upon the Fort. In such circumstances I thought myself justified in ordering by my own authority such Troops as could be got at, to march into the inhabited Country.
. . . Their aid has not been demanded & I am sorry to say, that I am well assured and satisfied, were there 5000 Troops in the City, that there is no part of the Civil Authority, the Govt excepted who would have asked their assistance, to quell any of the Riots that have happened. With respect to the Magistrates of this City, did their inclination lead them to do their duty, they are entirely under the influence of the People. The Mayor tho' appointed by the Govt & Council, is chose Member of the general Assembly for the City, the rest of the Corporation chose yearly by the People & of course, the whole dependent upon the lower class. The Magistrates & better sort of people have constantly attended when the Rioters assembled, & as far as Entreaties & persuasions would avail, have prevented them doing mischief. But tho' by these opportunities of seeing & knowing the Ringleaders, they might have apprehended them, tho' unlawful meetings & Assemblies have been advertised & held in open day-light on the common within the City & at night in Taverns, where desperate & seditious Resolutions have been past tho' the News-Writers continue spreading Sedition & Rebellion, no one person has been apprehended from the beginning of the disturbances. There is actually within the City above 130 men including Sergeants Corporals, Gunners & of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, besides a company of the Royal American Regiment, & near 300 men more might march into the city if required, in ten days time. This may be judged a sufficient Force if properly employed, & joined by the Magistrates & better sort of people to put an end to the riots: But I apprehend they are afraid of making a division amongst themselves, in the point they all unite in: vizt opposition to the Stamp Act, should they attempt to use force to restore tranquillity; some afraid of the people & perhaps others may fear impeachments & reproaches from the People of having excited them to Insurrections. Riots have not yet subsided. . . ."—Am. & Eng. Archives

N. Y. Pub. Library.

Feb. Gen. Gage writes from New York to Secretary Conway: "The 22 Naval Officer of this Port has within these few days been insulted here for delivering out Stamped Bonds with some Mediterranean Passes, & obliged to make a public acknowledgement of his fault & promise not to do the like again, at noon day, the Merchant who received the Bonds, was forced to perform the same ceremony and notwithstanding it was with difficulty their persons & properties were protected, by the better sort of people. A set of people who have associated themselves in many of the Provinces, under the appellation of the Sons of Liberty, continue their meetings, correspond with each other, & publish their resolves in the Papers without reserve, amongst others they agree to oppose the Stamp Act, even to take the Field, at the risk of their Lives & Fortunes. There seems throughout the Provinces to be a dissolution of all legal authority, that subordination is entirely destroyed & that all coercive powers in Government are annihilated, the people so accustomed to excess & riot without control, that it is to be feared it would not be an easy task to bring them back to their duty, should the wisdom of Parliament even think proper to remove the present cause of clamor, by a repeal of the Stamp Act. There has not however been any requisition made for my assistance but it becomes my duty when I see the King's affairs in such a situation, to do every thing which depends on me for the support of his service, & I must take my own resolution; which is to draw all the Force I can, & as soon as it can be done, into these Provinces. I have opened myself on this head to Sir Henry Moore, who sees affairs in the same light, and he told me tho' he could not procure the advice of his Council to demand in Form the aid of the King's Commander in Chief, he privately asked my assistance."—Am. & Eng. Arch. (1766), vide supra, 68-72.

Aug. 26 Gen. Gage, writing from New York to Secretary Richmond, says: "There has been some disturbance in this place between the People & the Soldiers. The latter were accused of cutting down a pole set up in an open Place near the Barracks; It appears upon enquiry that it was no general act of the soldiery, but there is reason to suspect some of them, as well as some of the People of the Town, were concerned in it. A mob assembled to erect the Pole again, and a Drummer passing, words ensued, they fell upon him & afterwards upon a corporal who came to his assistance & pursued both to the Barrack Gate, from whence twenty or more Soldiers sallied, & drove the mob a considerable distance. Some officers being near got up in time to force the Soldiers back to their Barracks tho' in passing the mob some were beat & the whole grossly abused. The Mob afterwards in presence of the Magistrates surrounded the Barracks and vented so much abuse & provoking language that some of the better sort of people who had assembled there did not think it possible that the Officers could command themselves, or restrain the fury of their men & pressed the Magistrates to support their own dignity & disperse the mob. The soldiers were however kept quiet & no mischief ensued, nor is there any person much hurt except the Corporal. The populace resented highly the check they had received and drew up a paper that the Soldiers might be ordered out of the City; but finding that no person of consequence or reputation would sign it, they fixed up a paper inviting the people to drive them out by Force, but these were immediately pulled down. The meaning of these proceedings is, that the populace are not willing to part with the power and authority they have so long usurped, to which they think the Soldiers may give some obstruction: the better sort tired of the anarchy & confusion which has so long prevailed want to have order restored & the Laws put in Force, which they judge the presence of the soldiers is necessary to bring about. The Magistrates see the necessity of checking the mutinous spirit in the People, but they depend so much upon them for their Elections into the Magistracy or General Assembly that they act with timidity & even suffer themselves to be insulted. It became necessary to take more than usual care of the behaviour of the Soldiers on this occasion, & such a readiness has been shewn to deliver up every soldier guilty of committing disorders, to the Civil Power, or to punish them by Military Law, that the People seem disarmed of all complaints against them."—Am. & Eng. Archives (1766), op. cit., 277-82.

Nov. 28 A petition signed by 227 merchants of New York is addressed to the house of commons, stating:

"That the Commerce of the North American Colonies is so severely clogged and restricted by the Statutes of the 4th and 6th of His present Majesty, as to afford a melancholy presage of its destruction, the fatal effects of which, tho' first felt here, must finally be transferred to Great Britain, and centre with her merchants and manufacturers. An evil so extensive, could not fail of alarming your petitioners, whose Situation exposes them to the first impression of this calamity. They therefore think it their duty to implore this Honorable House, to resume the Consideration of the Plantation Trade. Fully Confiding in the impartiality, justice, and wisdom of the British Parliament, and their equal regard to the Welfare of every part of His Majesty's dominions, for effectual redress. Your petitioners do therefore most humbly represent,

Nov. 28

"That it is the Singular disadvantage of the Northern British Colonies, that while they stand in need of vast quantities of the manufactures of Great Britain, the Country is productive of very little which affords a direct remittance thither in payment. From necessity therefore, the inhabitants have been driven to seek a market for their produce where it could be vendid, and by a course of traffic to acquire either money or such merchandize as would answer the purpose of a remittance. . . . as the nature of our Commerce when free from the late restraints ought to be understood, the Petitioners beg leave to observe, that our produce then sent to our own and the foreign Islands, was chiefly bartered for Sugar, rum, molasses, cotton and indigo.—The Sugar, cotton and indigo served as remittance to Great Britain; but the rum and molasses constituted essential branches of our Commerce. . . .

"Considering the prodigious consumption of West India produce in Great Britain, Ireland, and the continental Colonies, the rapid increase of these Colonies, their inhabitants already exceeding Two Millions, the vast access of subjects by the late conquests, besides the innumerable tribes of Indians in the extensive Countries annexed to the British Crown, the utter incapacity of our own islands to supply so great a demand, will your petitioners presume be out of all question.—On the other hand the lumber produced from clearing this immense territory, and the provision extracted from a fertile soil, which most of the inhabitants are employed in cultivating, must raise a supply for exportation, with which the consumption of our own Islands can bear no sort of proportion. It seems therefore consistent with Sound policy to indulge the Colonies in a free & unrestrained exportation of all the lumber & produce they raise and can spare and an ample importation of rum, and Molasses, to supply the various branches of their trade, to which they appear So necessary. . . .

"Your Petitioners having thus represented the nature of their Commerce, now humbly beg leave to point out the several Grievances which it labors under from the Regulations prescribed by the two before mentioned Acts of Parliament. . . .

"The heavy embarrassments which attend the Article of Sugar is a Capital Subject of Complaint.

"Besides the absolute necessity of a great importation to sustain our Trade, it is a well known truth, that it often happens at the foreign islands, with which we have intercourse, that a sufficient Return Cargo independent of Sugar, cannot be procured, which alone must render Trade precarious and discouraging. But the high duty of 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ % sterling a hundred, is proved by experience to be excessive, and has induced the fair Trader to decline this branch of his business, while it presents an irresistible incentive to Smuggling to people less Scrupulous. . . . The Petitioners therefore most humbly intreat that a moderate duty be laid on foreign Sugars, which they are assured would not only greatly conduce to the prosperity of these Colonies, and their utility to the Mother Country, but increase the Royal Revenue far beyond what can be expected under the present restraints.

"Compelling Merchants to land and Store foreign Sugars in Great Britain before they Can be exported to other parts of Europe is another most Expensive and dilatory restriction, without being of any material advantage to the Revenue of Great Britain. . . .

"Foreign Rum, French excepted, is the next Article which your Petitioners most humbly propose for consideration; the importation thereof on a moderate duty would add Considerably to the Revenue, prevent Smuggling, promote our navigation, increase the vent of our own produce with British Manufactures, and enable us to bring back the full value of our cargoes. . . .

"The exportation of Foreign Logwood to foreign Markets has already been distinguished as one of the principal means by which these Colonies have been enabled to sustain the weight of their debts for British Manufactures; . . . The low price of logwood, its bulk, and the duty with which it is now burthened, must totally destroy this valuable branch of our Commerce and throw it into the hands of foreigners, unfettered with these heavy embarrassments. . . .

. . . your Petitioners conceive the North American Fishery

1766 to be an object of the highest national importance. Nothing is so Nov. essential for the support of Navigation. . . . Your Petitioners 28 therefore humbly presume that it will be cherished by this Honorable House, with every possible mark of indulgence, and every impediment be removed which tends to check its progress.

"Enlarging the jurisdiction of the Admiralty is another part of the Statute of the 4th of His present Majesty, very grievous to the Trade and Navigation of the Colonies, and oppressive to the Subject; the property of the Trader being open to the invasion of every informer, and the means of Justice So remote as to be Scarcely attainable.

"Your Petitioners beg leave to express the warmest sentiments of gratitude, for the advantages intended by Parliament to America in General, in the opening Free Ports at the Islands of Jamaica and Dominica, at the same time they cannot but lament that it is their unhappiness to be in no condition to reap the benefits which it was imagined would flow from so wise a policy. The collecting great quantities of the produce of Martinico, Guadaloupe &c. at the Island of Dominica will be the natural consequence of opening that port, and would prove of real importance to these Colonies were they at liberty to bring them back in return for their Lumber and provisions; but as they are now prohibited from taking any thing except Molasses, and it is justly apprehended there cannot be a sufficient quantity of that commodity to support any considerable Trade, your petitioners think it evident that no substantial advantage can be derived to them under such a restraint. . . .

"Upon the whole, with the greatest anxiety, your petitioners find themselves obliged to inform this Honorable House, that altho' at the last Session the necessity of leaving the Trade of these Colonies seems to have been universally admitted, and the tender regard of Parliament for their happiness highly distinguished, nevertheless experience has evinced, that the commercial regulations then enacted, instead of remedying, have increased the heavy burthen under which it already laboured. As therefore upon due consideration, it will be manifest, that the ability of these colonies to purchase the manufactures of Great Britain, immediately depends upon, and is inseparably connected with, the progress of their Commerce; and as that ability only, by removing the necessity of home manufactures, will leave them at liberty to pursue agriculture in which their true interest consists: Your Petitioners most humbly implore this Honorable House to take the several matters herein suggested, into their wise consideration, and to grant such relief therein, as shall be thought consistent with good policy, and the mutual interests of Great Britain and her Colonies."

Hugh Gainé published the results of the vote for assemblymen, Jan. held between these dates, in a booklet bearing the title: *A Copy of 23 the Poll List, of the Election for Representatives for the City and 27 County of New-York; which election began On Monday the 23d Day of January, and ended on Friday the 27th, of our Lord, MDCCCLXIX.
Alphabetically Made.* Besides this booklet, there are in the N. Y.
Pub. Library similar lists for 1761 and 1768. They list by name practically the entire voting population of New York.

The "Society of Cordwainers, in the City of New-York" Apr.
10 resolves "not to eat any Lamb in their Families, till the first of August next." On the next day, the Sons of Liberty held a meeting at the Province Arms, and unanimously agreed to the same resolution.—N. Y. Jour., April 13, 1769. The object of this resolution was to further home manufactures by increasing the supply of wool.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II, 400.

The facts that no earlier constitution of the Sons of Liberty is July known, that no organization is known having the title "United Sons 7 of Liberty," that the house of M. De la Montagne is mentioned as the meeting-place of the society, that the word "United," wherever used in the broadside, has been deleted in pencil, and that several additions are made in pencil, taken collectively are pretty strong evidence that the broadside here reproduced (Pl. 39) was a proof copy of the proposed constitution, with amendments made at the meeting on Monday evening, July 10.

Hugh Gainé's marriage license bears this date. Issued by the Sept. "Prerogative Office" in New York, it is signed by Philip Living-

Regarding the number 45, David Grim relates the following Feb. incident: "During McDougall's confinement Forty Five Gentlemen 14 Sons of Liberty (Wilks Liberty and Forty five was the go then [?],
They went in a procession, headed by Genl Malcomb, to the Jail, and there congratulated him [McDougall] with a hearty shake by the hand for his good health, and his sufferings for the cause of Liberty After having been regaled, with some of the good thing[s] of this World they returned in peace to their homes and their own business.

"Some short time after Forty Five (Female) Sons of Liberty of this City, also paraded in a procession, two by two, and were led by M<sup>rs</sup> Malcomb, (Genl Malcombs Lady this was the daughter 1770 of Cap Tingley) to the Jail, to which place they were escorted by a Feb. large number of [blank] on their Arrival there. They were hand-14 somly and Politely received, by Mr McDougall, whom they congratulated by a shake of the hand and with a [blank] on his noble and spirited conduct in the cause of Liberty. After having taken some refreshments, and being delivered of their great Anxiety for his Mr McDougalls good health, and with a number of curtesying and Bowing; being highly pleased with their Visit, they parted in peace, and every [one] ganged to their own homes.—David Grim's notes on the city of New York, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

 gress, and that an Assembly of States, it would require the Head of a very able Minister to treat with so respectable a Body."—Writings of Samuel Adams, III: 21. This is the earliest suggestion of a continental congress found.—See July 7, 1773; March 5 and May 15, 1774; Addenda; and May 23, 1774; Chronology.

July In a private letter to Thomas Cushing, of Boston, bearing this 7 date, Franklin, after mentioning the proposal of the Virginia house of burgesses to establish committees of correspondence, adds: "It is natural to suppose, as you do, that, if the oppressions continue, a congress may grow out of that correspondence." In an official letter of the same date, which was to be read to the assembly, Franklin declared: ". . . perhaps it would be best and fairest for the colonies, in a general congress now in peace to be assembled, or by means of the correspondence lately proposed [see April 9, 1773; and March 5, 1774; Addenda], after a full and solemn assertion and declaration of their rights, to engage firmly with each other, that they will never grant aids to the crown in any general war, till those rights are recognised by the King and both Houses of Parliament. . . ."—Works of Franklin (Sparks ed., 1822), 55, 63-64.

1774

Mar. John Hancock, speaking to a crowded audience in Boston, says: 5 "Permit me to suggest a general Congress of deputies from the several Houses of Assembly on the Continent, as the most effectual method of establishing a union for the security of our rights and liberties."—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S. (1854), VI: 508.

Apr. Gov. Wm. Tryon, sitting as chancellor, in the case of Joshua 5 Bloomer, the Episcopal minister at Jamaica, against Robert Hinchman and Philip Edsall, church wardens, on the refusal to pay his salary since his induction in May, 1769, decides, for the first time judicially since the passage of the Ministry Acts of 1693 and 1705, that "the National Church of England is Established within this Colony," and that "the Provision by the Ministry Acts in Question, was intended and can only be applied for the support of the Clergy of that Church."—Chancery Court Minute Book (M.S.), 1770-1776, pp. 151-55, in N. Y. county clerk's office, Manhattan; and Eccles. Rec., VI: 4233-34 (where the decision is given in full as of the year 1770 instead of 1774). See also Sept.
 22, 1693, Addenda.

The letter written on this date by Sears and McDougall appar-15 ently contains the first suggestion, made by a public body, for a continental congress, the significant words used being: "we have stimulated the Merchants to appoint a Meeting to morrow Evening at 7 O'Clock to agree upon a general Non-importation, and Non-exportation Agreement of Goods, to and from Great Britain, until the american Grievances are redressed; under such Regulations as may be agreed upon by Committees from the Principal Towns on the Continent, to meet in a general Congress to be held here for that Purpose." The letter was signed only by McDougall and Sears, because there was "no Time to send this to the other Members of the Committee."—From the original letter in the Bancroft collection in the N. Y. Pub. Library (see Pl. 41A, Vol.
 IV). The committee referred to was evidently the committee of correspondence chosen on Dec. 17, 1773 (q.v.), of which both Sears, and McDougall were members (see Dec. 18, 1773).
 The notice of June 6 (q.v.) can hardly be considered an official disclaimer.

From the incomplete extracts in the Boston Gazette, Becker (Hist. of Pol. Parties in N. Y., 1760-1776, 118) draws the erroneous conclusion that this letter of May 15 contained no suggestion for a continental congress. For a still more definite suggestion, for "a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies in general," see the letter of May 23 addressed by the committee of 51 to the "Committee of Correspondence in Boston," Pl. 42, Vol. IV.

Dawson, defending his statement that the N. Y. committee, in its 23 letter of May 23, 1774 (q.v.), was the "first to propose and to insist on the convention of a Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies, in which all the grievances which were sustained by each and every of these Colonies could be duly considered, and concerted action be secured," says: "We are not insensible of the fact that the origin of the Congress of the Continent, which was assembled at Philadelphia, in 1774, has been variously stated, by many of those who have preceded us; and we are equally sensible of the other fact, that individuals, in different Colonies, without any connection with each other, had suggested, theoretically, that such a Congress would be useful for various limited and, generally, local purposes, previous to that more general and practical proposition which was made by the Committee of Correspondence in New York, on the occasion under consideration.

"The Town of Providence, in Town-meeting, May 17, 1774 [q.v.], was probably the first organized body which recommended a Congress of the several Colonies, for general purposes; . . .

"Because the General Assemblies of the greater number of the Colonies, at that time, could not have elected Deputies to the proposed Congress, even if they had been willing to have done so —the Governor having in each case, the power of proroguing or dissolving the Assembly, which in the greater number of instances, he would have certainly done—the action of the Town of Providence, although well intended, could not result in the convention of a Congress. . . . The honor, what there was of it, remains, therefore, with the Committee of Correspondence of New-York, as related in the text, of having originated the Congress, on the twenty-third of May."—Dawson, Westchester Co. during the Am.
Rev., 17-19.

As will be seen by reference to the letter of May 23, reproduced at Pl. 42, the significant words used are: "Upon these Reasons we conclude that a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies in general is of the utmost Moment; that it ought to be assembled without Delay, and some unanimous Resolutions formed in this fatal Emergency, not only respecting your deplorable Circumstances, but for the Security of our common Rights." It will be noticed that, whereas this letter suggests a congress of deputies from the colonies in general, the letter of May 15 proposes "committees from the Principal Towns on the Continent, to meet in a general Congress,"—clearly a less official body, even if an equally representative one. Samuel Adams' suggestion of April 9, 1773 (q.v., Addenda), Franklin's of July 7, 1773 (q.v., Addenda), and John Hancock's of March 5, 1774 (q.v., Addenda), although earlier, are personal, not official, and theoretical, not specific.

1775

The four views of the battle of Lexington, crudely drawn and 19 engraved by Amos Doolittle in this year, and among the earliest and rarest of American historical prints, bear the following titles:

1. "The Battle of Lexington."

1775 2. "A view of the town of Concord, with the Ministerial Apr. troops destroying the stores."
19 3. "The Battle of North Bridge, in Concord." 4. "The South part of Lexington, where the first detachments were joined by Lord Percy."—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 66-67. The N. Y. Pub. Library owns a complete set of these views.

20 The credentials given to the New York delegates to the continental congress empowered them "to meet the Delegates from the other Colonies, and to concert and determine upon such measures as shall be judged most effectual for the preservation and re-establishment of American rights and privileges and for the restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies."—

May John Hancock, on his way to Philadelphia (where he was 7 chosen president of congress on May 24), having arrived at New York on Saturday, May 6, thus writes from "New York, Sabbath Evening, May 7, 1775," to Miss Dorothy Quincy, addressing her
"At the House of Thaddeus Burr, Esq. in Fairfield:—

"My Dear Dolly,

"I arriv'd well, thro' Fatigu'd, at King's Bridge, at Fifty minutes after Two o'clock yesterday, where I found the Delegates of Massachusetts and Connecticut with a number of Gentlemen from New York, and a Guard of the Troop. I Din'd and then Set out in Procession for New York, the Carriage of your humble servant, of course, being first in the Procession. When we Arriv'd within three miles of the City we were met by the Grenadier Company and Regiment of the City Militia under Arms, Gentlemen in Carriages and on Horseback and many thousand of Persons on Foot; the Roads fill'd with people, and the greatest Cloud of Dust I ever saw. In this Situation we Enter'd the City, and passing thro' the Principal Streets of New York amidst the Acclamations of Thousands, we were Set Down at Mr. Francis's. After Entering the House, three Huzzas were Given, and the People by Degrees Dispers'd.
When I got within a mile of the City, my Carriage was Stopt, and Persons Approaching, with proper Harnesses insisted upon Taking out my Horses and Dragging me into and through the City, a Circumstance I would not have had Taken place upon any Consideration, not being fond of such Parade. I Beg'd and Intreated that they would Suspend the Design, and ask'd it as a favour, and the Matter Subsided, but when I Got to the Entrance of the City and the Numbers of Spectators increas'd to perhaps seven Thousand or more, they Declar'd they would have the Horses out, and would Drag me themselves, thro' the City. I Repeated my Request, that they would so far oblige me as not to Insist upon it; they would not Hearken, and I was obliged to Apply to the Leading Gentlemen in the procession to intercede with them not to carry their Designs into Execution, as it was very Disagreeable to me. They were at last prevailed upon, and I proceeded. . . . After having Rode so fast and so many Miles you may well think I was much Fatigu'd, but no sooner had I got into the Room of the House, we were Visited by a great number of Gentlemen of the first Character in the City, which took up the Evening. . . . at 11 o'clock went to Capt. Sears's (the King here) and Lodged. . . . To morrow Morning, propose to Cross the Ferry.
We are to have a large Guard in several Boats, and a number of the City gentlemen will attend us over. I cant think they will dare to attack us. The Grenadier Company of the City is to Continue under Arms during our Stay here, and we have a Guard of them Night and Day at our Doors. This is a sad Mortification to the Tories. Things look well here."—New Eng. Hist. & General Register (1865), XLIX: 135-36.

Aug. The military committee appointed by the provincial congress 4 meets to determine the rank and command in the several regiments.
As ordered by the provincial congress, the New York Regiment is named "the first or senior Regiment of the Troops raised in this Colony." Alexander McDougall is approved as its colonel, Rudolphus Ritema as lieutenant-colonel, and Herman Zedwitz as major. The other regiments are to take rank in the following order: Col. Goose van Schaick's, second; Col. James Clinton's, third; Col. James Holmes's, fourth.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 117.

22 The first provision of the Militia Bill, passed by the provincial congress on this day, is as follows: "Resolved, That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony, (where the same is not already done,) be divided into districts or beats, by their respective committees, in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able bodied and effective men, officers included, between sixteen and sixty years of age, (the battalion commanded by Col. Lasher, the companies of artillery, light-horse and hussars, in the city and county of New York, and the troops of horse, companies of grenadiers, and associated companies already formed in the several cities and counties within this Colony, excepted.)"

The manner of electing officers is defined. Col. Lasher's company, now under the direction of field officers, shall in the future be commanded by captains, to be chosen in the manner defined.

It is further resolved "That for the purpose of completely carrying into execution the recommendation of the Continental Congress [of Aug. 9], after the whole militia is formed as above, every fourth man of each company be selected for minute men, of such persons as are willing to enter into this necessary service . . ."

The several companies so formed, the bill provides, shall "be joined into regiments, each regiment to consist of not less than five nor more than ten companies, (the battalion commanded by Col. Lasher excepted);" also "That a major-general be appointed and commissioned by this Congress, to command the militia of the Colony of New-York;" and "That the militia of this Colony be formed into brigades," the militia of the city and county of New York, and of the counties of Kings and Richmond, to constitute one of these brigades, and the militia of the other counties to be combined in a manner designated in the bill. There are thus defined a total of six brigades.

The bill further provides "That every man between the ages of sixteen and fifty, do, with all convenient speed, furnish himself with a good musket or firelock and bayonet, sword or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming wire and brush, fitted thereto, a car-touch box, to contain twenty-three rounds of cartridges, twelve flints and a knapsack, agreeable to the directions of the Continental Congress, upon the forfeiture of five shillings for the want of a musket or firelock, and of one shilling for the want of a bayonet, sword or tomahawk, cartridge box, cartridge or bullet; the whole to be judged of and determined by the captain, or next commanding officer.

. . . That each company, (not minute men) do meet the first Monday in every month, and spend at least four hours in each of the said days to perfect themselves in military discipline . . ."

Regulations affecting the "companies of horse," their officers, equipment, etc., are given; fines and penalties are imposed for violations of orders; and the officials, etc., exempt from military service are listed.

. . . the minute men, when called out in defence of their country, shall be subject to the articles of war, established by the Continental Congress, and be entitled to the same allowance, as to pay and provisions, with the Continental forces; to be under the direction of the Commander-in-Chief of those forces."

Then follow the regulations affecting the conduct of troops "in case of any alarm, invasion or insurrection." Every subaltern and soldier "is immediately to repair, properly armed and accoutred, to his colours or parade, (which parade shall be understood to be the habitation of his captain, unless otherwise ordered;) and the captain or commanding officer of the company nearest to the place where such invasion or insurrection shall be, shall immediately march his company to oppose the enemy, at the same time send off an express to the commanding officer of the regiment or brigade to which he belongs, who is to march with the whole or part of the militia under his command as he shall judge necessary, and use all possible diligence to prevent the enemy from landing or penetrating into any part of the country, and to quell every insurrection . . ." These provisions, further extended, close with a general one that the militia and minute men, when thus called out, "shall be subject to the same rules and orders as directed and ordered by the Continental Congress of the associated Colonies, held at Philadelphia on the 10th day of May last for the better government of the Continental troops."—*Jour.
Provin. Cong., I: 114-16.*

William Smith sends to Gen. Haldimand his opinions concerning "this unnatural Controversy, which if it lasts a few years may bring the British Empire to the Brink of Destruction." He says in part:

Oct.

"A Day approaches for the most important Consideration. This Winter will decide the great Question, whether Great Britain and her Colonies, are to be happily reconciled, or to prosecute their Animosities to an eternal Separation! There is no more Hope from Intrigue & Diversity of Sentiment, no further Dependence upon ancient Prejudices & Habits. The Americans are voluntary Subjects to Congresses and Armies of their own forming, who are systematically supporting a Principle, which no Man dare any longer to controvert on this Side of the Water.

"As it never would be expedient for Great Britain to attempt to impose Taxes upon her Colonies, without their Consent, and Parliament seems to be of that Opinion, . . . to me it appears to be madness to plunge into a war, for supporting a Claim of Right to do, what she never means to execute in Fact. . . . What hinders then the passing of an Act, which while it avers her sovereignty in every Thing else, acknowledges that American Aids for the general Defence, shall flow from their own Spontaneity, and the devising of a Plan to open the Shelves of our Generosity, as often as the public Exigencies of the Empire, shall call for our united Assistance? . . . Give them [the provinces] a constitutional Security ag<sup>t</sup> arbitrary Levies; that is to say, covenant that they shall be Englishmen, and the advocates for Independency, will be found such an inconsiderable Handful, even in the most suspected Colonies, that they may be left to the Correction of the Rest of their own Countrymen; who will soon restore the general Harmony of the Nation. Till this is done there is no Place for the Maxim divide et impera, for no Man will ever enter into a Compact by which nothing is to be got, but all to be surrendered. . . .

" . . . a War is begun which every good Subject would wish to see ended in a rational and equitable Establishment of the authority of G. B. & the Felicity of her Colonies & if Parliam<sup>t</sup> will this Winter indulge a Liberty, recommended by every Motive of Humanity and sound Policy it may easily be effected; . . . but for the irritation of that unfortunate Excursion to Concord, which drew into Question the Sincerity of the Proposals Mr Gage had then in his Pocket, and all the Governors were commanded to make to their assemblies, and the subsequent Battle and conflagration at Charles Town, which Fame says your Advice would have prevented, America would before this Day have liberated her Trade;

"I have said Nothing of the Justice of the American Cause There is no Necessity for it—It is enough to direct the Measures of Policy that Great Britain has herself populated this Hemisphere & trained up the Inhabitants with sentiments inconsistent with the Claim of taxing them by parliamentary Authority—If the Americans are wrong is there not Compassion due to Millions who have borrowed Lessons of her own teaching— . . . I confide in your Friendship respecting the prudent use of what I have written—The Weal of the Whole Empire is my Aim."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 208.

Nov. 25 John Alsop having requested "Instructions to the [New York] Delegates at Philadelphia to move some conciliatory Propositions," Wm. Smith makes a draft for the provincial congress to send them. In this he instructs the delegates to urge the following measures:

"1 To recommend it to the several Colonies in the Confederacy to procure a Session of their assemblies for the Purpose of petitioning the Crown & the two Houses of Parliament once more upon the Subject of our Grievances

"2 To direct the general Nature and Substance of these new applications carefully distinguishing what we fight for from what we request and will trust to the Justice of Great Britain to grant us.

"3 To state how far we approve of the Parliamentary Resolution of last Feb<sup>y</sup> and in what Instances we are ready to accept its offers and comply with its Requisitions

"4 To authorize each Colony to contribute a precise Sum to the general Defence of the Nation for a limited term expressly avowing that it is to be considered as a Gift, upon the Principle that every Branch of the Empire is bound to consult the common Safety of the whole Body and that we expect Accounts to be rendered of the Disposition of it shewing that it has been intirely expended for the Support of the Navy & Army and other National Purposes of Defence together with the Duties that may be raised upon us in the necessary Regulation of Commerce

"5 That while the Colonies maintain the Civil Government & the Administration of Justice within their respective Limits no Officer of the Colony shall receive any other Pension or Provision

"6 That all these Petitions be expressed in Terms of Decency avoiding as much as possible everything that tends to irritate or offend in asserting the essential Rights and Privileges of his Majesty's American Subjects

"7 That as often as Great Britain shall renew her Requisitions for the Contributions of the Colonies towards the general Defence it shall be lawful for them to hold Congresses for deliberating upon the Request and apportioning the Quotas to be raised by their several Legislatures

"8 That they declare their Willingness to co-operate in forming a Body of Representatives from each Colony for this Purpose and that they are disposed most cheerfully to liberate their Trade and cultivate a perfect Reconciliation on the Removal of the grand Cause of Complaint for which they have taken up arms and the passing of a general Act of Oblivion and Indemnity expressing their Readiness to place an intire Confidence in Parliament for Relief in all those other Instances which the Continental Congress may enable the Assemblies to point out as Grievances requiring a Redress for better promoting the Felicity of America and the Re Establishment of a compleat and permanent Harmony between all the Branches of the Empire

"9 That every Colony be understood to be at Liberty to pursue any Measure by the Appointment of Agents or otherwise that may facilitate the designed Reconciliation not inconsistent with the Plan of Conduct so to be concerted and recommended to them by the Continental Congress."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

Nathan Hale is commissioned as a captain by the continental congress. There is a photograph of his commission in the Emmet Collection, No. 6980, the original being owned, in 1914, by William A. Read of New York.—Johnston, Nathan Hale (1914), 192.

Smith writes: "Upon Advice that General Lee had left Boston and was raising Troops in Connecticut to possess and fortify New York Lord Drummond requested me to urge the Congress here to prevent his Approach as it would embarrass the Captains & might end in the burning of the City and render the expected Negotiations abortive—I told him that I did not intermeddle in their Affairs nor seek their Confidence and that I disappor'd more particularly of their Resolve that neither themselves nor the Assembly should declare upon any Terms of Peace nor even in a Way of Instruction to their Delegates at Philadelphia—He then desired . . . me to send to the Town Hall for Col<sup>o</sup>. McDougal who came upon a note—I introduced them to each other and Lord Drummond assured him that there were good Prospects of an Accommodation—that he knew the Captains would as much as possible avoid Extremities—That they commiserated the Flight of the Inhabitants at this severe Season and that he wished the Committee of Safety would dispel their Fears by a Request to General Lee to desist from any Works to annoy the Ships and distress the Town. He spoke in generals as to the Prospect of Peace, and concealed much of what he had in several Interviews revealed to me. McDougal assumed a very consequential Tone at first . . . which Lord Drummond heard unmoved & did not exasperate, upon which the other fell into a Calm and frankly said that Lee was at New Haven waiting for the levying of two Regiments & that the Committee of Safety had by Letter to him declared it to be dangerous to this Town to bring Troops into it—Lord Drummond declared that the Captains knew Peace would take Place soon and that Adm<sup>o</sup> would not thank any servants of the Crown for irritating Men's Minds—That General Howe was also apprized of the amicable Designs of Government and that if Mischiefs ensued he was persuaded the Fault would be our's."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

Wm. Smith writes: "I had a visit this Morning from Mr Lynch the S Carolina Delegate with whom I became first acquainted in October 1765 and had often seen him since . . . He asked me whether I had seen Lord Drummond & what his Character was? I told him I had often & that he was esteemed among us as a Man of Truth and Honor and that he had conducted himself with more Prudence than common to People of his Years."

Lynch gave Smith a report of an interview between Drummond and the members of congress. Smith says: "The new Matter of Information I now got from Mr Lynch was this [ ]

"That they [members of congress] did not dislike the Proposal of a Duty to raise a Revenue for the common Defense. If we seperate says he from England we shall be obliged to set up a

1776 Republic & that is a Form of Government some People are fond of Feb. 4 that I think reads better than it works—It is best in Idea bad in Experiment.

"He [Drummond] affected says Lynch to deny that he had any Credentials, but being pushed upon the Points we think essential & the Importance of knowing the Ministers Sentiments respecting them he pulled out a Paper which under great Caution he read & laid on the Table as what he had from Lord North. He would not suffer us to copy it but consented to our abstracting the substance in our own words till we were satisfied of its Meaning.

"The Point of Revenue settled the other Duties in regulating Commerce were to belong to the Colonies.

"Further Aids pro renata to be expedited by Way of Requisition as formerly to the assemblies singularum.

"The Minister did not doubt but that the offensive Acts would be repealed.

"Great Britain would for the Revenue renounce the Claim of Taxation.

"Parliament might be prevailed upon if the People of Massachusetts so chose to restore the Government established by the Charter of King William or the Altering Act might be amended

"The greatest Difficulty apprehended respected the Quartering & March of Troops. The Prerogative of the Crown was concerned here & made it a Matter of extreme Delicacy—

"To this last Mr Lynch said Matters might be made easy—Drummond said at first the Colonies must give it up—We said British Troops here were as odious as foreign Troops in Great Britain but we can come to a Compromise if they will stint them to a reasonable Number & then divide them among the Provinces—Drummond thought this would go down & the Delegates said in that Case all objections would be removed for they should consider them then as so many Hostages for the good Behavior of the Mother Country. . . .

"Upon the whole I found that the Congress gave confidence to Lord Drummond and Mr Elliot, and that Mr Lynch at this Day has no Idea of pushing for the Independence of the Colonies His Idea corresponded with my own viz<sup>t</sup>

"That under a Perswasion that America aimed at a Disunion supplies were to be obtained—That Commissioners were to come out to grant Pardons but with Power to negotiate & stop the Progress of the War upon Terms—That the Ministers were to cooperate in ramming them down upon the Parliament, if a Revenue was secured, & in this Way the Nation is to be satisfied—opposition silenced—and the Ministers Neck and Power secured, and Mr Lynch was clear in the opinion that America would make a better Compact with the present than any new Set of Ministers, the Professions of the Opposition notwithstanding."
 —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

9 Maj.-Gen. Lee, by letter of this date, informs the continental congress that a transport with troops has arrived at New York, that more may be expected, and, therefore, that a farther reinforcement is necessary to secure and defend the city. On receipt of this information on Feb. 12, congress resolved "That it be recommended to the convention or committee of safety of New Jersey, immediately to send detachments of the minute men equal to a battalion, under proper officers, to New York, there to put themselves under the command of Major General Lee;" likewise, to the committee of safety of Pennsylvania, to send detachments equal to a battalion from Philadelphia.—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 127-28.

12 Wm. Smith records in his diary: "Monday Evening 12 Feby at Simmon's Tavern Col<sup>o</sup> Mc Dougal called me upstairs and after Professions of Friendship intimated his Satisfaction on the Forbearance of the Navy the Day before, said the Captains had acted wisely for he knew that the New England Troops & People wished to render a Reconciliation impossible & to bring on the Destruction of the Town as conducive to that End—That the Susquehanna Scheme had taken Hold of the Generality of their chief men & they concieved the Success of it connected with a total Separation from Great Britain—A Word to the Wise says he is sufficient.

"I replied that every Man of Discernm<sup>t</sup> might perceive that the Populace irritated by the War would insist upon an Independence or distressed by Poverty would turn their Wrath upon the Congress & seek Peace hastily in their own Way. That I had Reason to imagine that administration were disposed to make such capital Concessions as would render America happy & that her own Growth would ensure every Thing in future which we could reasonably desire—That I believed the Continental Congress would not countenance the Extravagance of the Multitude nor wish so to reduce the British Authority as to leave the Minor Provinces exposed to the Control of New England & the other formidable Colonies & that it would become him to have an Eye to Peace & so to act as to be in Reputation under the Restriction of Government which I was persuaded the Cmt<sup>l</sup> Congress meant to effect upon some late Intimations from Administration of which he was uninformd.

"My Answer was made, to meet a Design of rendering me an Instrument for urging the Gov<sup>t</sup> and the Captains to leave the Port, that the Army might have the greater Sway without exposing himself to the Inhabitants who are exasperated by the Loss of their Property & the cruel Flight they were driven to. He declared that he was opposed to Independency, as he always had done on my Warnings that Things were verging to it—but I fear that the Delay of the Commissioners will make it the Interest of many to fight for an eternal Separation—Oh Britain! Oh America!—

"Upon the whole I believe Lord Drummond has led him to suspect there might be a sudden Peace & this was a Device to secure his Reputation with one for whose Friendship he has always been sollicitous. He is artful—has a plain sound understanding & I always thought him honest & wish he may wear well to the last."
 —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

14 Smith and four other council members dine with Gov. Tryon and discuss the condition of affairs in the colonies. Smith writes of this occasion: "After Dinner we had much Conversation & the Colonies were charged by Kempe & Skinner the two Attorney Generals with a fixd Resolution to set up an Independency. I grew warm in the Debates upon this Subject. I charged the parliamentary Vote of the 20 Feby<sup>r</sup> with a studied Concealment of a Design to give up the Claim of taxing the Colonies as a great Fault on the Side of Administration dangerous to the general Interest of both Countries. Tryon who had not interfered before catchd Fire at this and said he was sorry to hear an Officer of the Governm<sup>t</sup> say so. I turn'd to him and insisted upon my Remark—I appealed to himself whether the Minister had not informd him that the taxing Power was given up. To which he answered, Yes. I demanded the Evidence of it in any written explicit Declaration & he confessed that he would have declared the Surrender with more Liberality. Parker and Vandeput were present and the latter who sat by my Side declared that if he believed the Colonies intent only upon an Exemption from Parliamentary Taxation he thought them on the right Side in the present Controversy and seemed pleased with the Resistance I made to the Intemperate Partialities of the two Attorney Generals, occasionally supported (tho' with good sense & more Decency) by Mr Paymaster Barrow. . . . The Train I took was a Defense of the continent from the Charge of aiming ab Initio at severing the Empire, admitting that the Congress had countenanced the Imputation in 1774 & faulting administration in listening to Misrepresentations & concealing the ultimate Terms to which they would yield for preserving the Union & thro' the whole Debates I indulgd now and then a little asperity at the Refugees to abate the Governor's Confidence in their suggestions. The Rest of the Council said Nothing but in the Boat after we had left the ship at night signified their approbation of the Part I had acted and bore patiently some censures for their silence."

Mar. 9 Stephen Moylan, Washington's aid-de-camp, informs the "Commanding Officer of the American Forces—New York" that the British are preparing to move from Boston, but if they do not leave, the general is "determined to force them to a Battle or make that Town, so hot, that they will have but little rest therein." Moylan adds: "His Excellency has good reason to imagine that New York will be the place of their destination, he therefore desires that You will exert Yourself to the utmost in preparing for their reception, he has ordered, the Armed Shooners to be in readiness, to attend their Motions & give the earliest intelligence of the Course they steer by which Intelligence his Motions will be governed if they steer West, You may expect a large reinforcement from this Army, & in all probability the main body will soon follow. You will please to communicate this to the provincial Congress or Convention, Who the General doubts not, will cooperate with You in using every endeavour to prevent their forming a lodgment, before his Excellency can come or send to Your

 Mar. Success of this Campaign will a good deal depend upon Your

- May The letter in the Chronology under this date purporting to have 11 been written by William Smith, and describing to the British the approaches to New York and the best place to land, was repudiated by Smith in the Conn. Gaz. of Oct. 4. He there claimed that it was written by refugees in England, to bring about his downfall.
- June William Smith writes in his memoirs: “I now set down my 9 Thoughts as a Rule for my own Conduct at this melancholly Hour of approaching Distress.” These “Thoughts” are extended over 12½ pages, and served as the basis for a pamphlet published anonymously in Charleston, S. C., Sept. 30, 1780 (g. v.), and later (see Jan. 30, 1781) reprinted in New York. In connection with researches undertaken for the ICONOGRAPHY, it has been discovered that William Smith actually wrote the anonymous pamphlet (see Sept. 30, 1780). On one occasion when Smith was asked who the author was, he gave the evasive answer that “it was imputed in Charles Town to one Williams a lawyer.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), VII. An analysis of the contents of the Candid Retrospect appears in Vol. V, under date of Jan. 30, 1781.
- 28 A British fleet attacks the American fort on Sullivan’s Island, and the regulars are decisively defeated by 435 provincials commanded by Col. Moultrie. Regarding the importance of this battle, Bancroft says: “It kept seven regiments away from New York for two months; . . . it dispelled throughout the South the dread of British superiority; it drove the loyalists into obscurity. To the other colonies it was a message of brotherhood and union from June South Carolina as a self-directing republic.”—Bancroft, Hist. of 28

U. S., IV: 393-411. This fort on Sullivan’s Island, in Charleston harbour, built of palmetto-logs, was named Fort Moultrie, and, according to Lossing, was near the site of the later Fort Moultrie, which came into prominence in American annals in Dec., 1860.—

The New York delegates in the continental congress write to July the provincial congress of New York: “The important Question 2 of Indepency was agitated yesterday in a Committee of the whole Congress and this Day will be finally determined in the House.
 We know the Line of our Conduct on this Occasion; we have your Instructions [see April 20, 1775, Addenda; and June 11, 1776, Chronology], and will faithfully pursue them. New Doubts and Difficulties however will arise should Indepency be declared; and that it will not, we have not the least reason to expect.
 . . . What Part are we to act after this Event takes Place; every Act we join in may then be considered as in some Measure acceding to the Vote of Indepency, and binding our Colony on that Score.
 . . . Our Situation is singular and delicate. No other Colony being similarly circumstanced with whom we can consult. We wish therefore for your earliest Advice and Instructions whether we are to consider our Colony bound by the Vote of the Majority in Favour of Indepency and vote at large on such Questions as may arise in Consequence thereof or only concur in such Measures as may be absolutely necessary for the Common safety and defense of America exclusive of the Idea of Indepency.”—Burnett, Letters of Members of Cont. Cong. (1921), I: 524-25. The action taken by the New York provincial congress on July 9 (g. v.) was a sufficient answer to this letter.
